Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notoriety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.
While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the Cherry Pectoral does not only as a general thing, but almost invariably cure the maladies for which it is employed.
As time makes these facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually become the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log-cabin of the American peasant to the palaces of European kings. Throughout this entire country, Cherry Pectoral is known as the best remedy extant for diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, Cherry Pectoral is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms-houses, Public Institutions and in domestic practice, as the surest remedy their attending physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases and for children it is safe, pleasant and effectual to cure. In fact, some of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from parents who have found it efficacious in cases particularly insidental to childhood.
The Cherry Pectoral is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it under his own eye, with invariable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.
We have endeavored here to furnish the community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should commend itself to their confidence—a remedy at once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and cauntless trials proved itself to be; and trust by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of uniform strength to afford physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy that will do for them all that medicine can do. OCEAN SPRINGS.
The undersigned, having been appointed as agent for the sale of lots at Ocean Springs, has, under the authority of the proprietors of the place, had the whole property surveyed and a map made upon a large scale; also, lithographed plans in pamphlet form, for distribution to persons wishing to purchase. The two will enable any one to see the location and qualities of any particular lot, or they will be shown them on the spot, either by one of the owners, or the subscriber.
The advantages of this watering place cannot be known, or fully appreciated, except by a visit to the place, and this is respectfully solicited from all those having any idea of locating on the Lake shore. The land on the bay consists of this finest bluffs, with large live oak trees, between here and Mobile; some twenty or twenty-five feet above the level of the lake, with ravines between each bluff, and which serve as a drain to them and to all the land in the rear back to old Fort Bayon, upon which the two springs are situated, say about three-quarters of a mile from the Bay. The whole of the land between the Bay and the Bayou is better drained than any other place upon the Lake. The soil is good, and produces (with little aid, and which is at hand in the bottoms,) excellent corn and vegetables. The absence of sand, so common at the watering places, affords a fine opportunity for good drives.
The Bay affords the best opportunity for sailing with safety, of any place upon the coast. Abundance of fish and oysters can be obtained at all times, and in the winter, ducks in any quantity. The bathing is also very superior.
The superior virtues of the two springs (sulphur and chalybeate) have not only been proven by the analysis of some of our first chemists, but their medicinal qualities have been fully demonstrated in the cure of several well-known citizens of this and other States.
A hotel of the first class will be kept open summer and winter, and in addition to which an infirmary will be established from the first of May next, near the springs, under the management of two of the most respectable physicians of this city.
Persons wishing to purchase any of this property are invited to call on the undersigned and inspect the large plan and lithographs, and for full particulars.

A MOTHER'S GIFT.

Remember, love, who gave thee this,
When other days shall come;
When she who bait thy earliest kiss.
Sleeps in her narrow home,
Remember 'twas a mother gave
The gift to one she'd died to save.

That mother sought a pledge of love
The holiest for her son:
And from the gifts of God above,
She chose a goodly one.
She clung for her beloved boy,
The source of light and life and joy.

An I bade him keep the gift—that when
The parting hour should come,
They might have hope to meet again,
In an eternal home.
She said, his faith in that would be
Sweet incense to her memory.

And should the scoffer in his pride,
Laugh that fond faith to scorn,
And bid him cast the pledge aside,
That he from youth had borne,
She bade him pause and ask his breast,
If he, or she, had loved him best?

A parent's blessing on her son
Goes with this holy thing;
The love that would retain the one
Must to the other cling.
Remember! 'tis no idle tie,
A Mother's Gift—Remember, boy!

LINESS WANTED IN THE CHURCH.

MR. EDITOR: In my last article I stated conviction that too much time and talent expended in the Church papers and elsewhere in the discussion of vague theories, ding to innovation upon our long-tried omy, whilst matters of lasting moment neglected. I proposed to write a few tional essays upon the subject of holiness, perchance others, more capable of doing ice to the subject, may be emulated to its sideration, do not purpose entering into a careful ysis of the terms used in the Bible to gnate this work—Dr. Summers has ably harged this duty in the two first chapters his work on Holiness. It matters not, ever, whether the word translated holi- is compounded of the negative particle and the noun ge—signifying abstraction m earth, or separation from an earthly d, or from whatsoever source it may be ived. There is a definition of it which not be misunderstood, and that view of it uld be presented continually before the ple. When we tell our people that it ans the creation of a pure heart, a holy rt, a clean heart, and keeping that heart e, pure and holy, they understand what mean, and the minister who perseveringly ists upon this attainment, will not labor vain, no matter how much opposition he y experience at the beginning. Some of are afraid to wound the feelings of our ple. If we speak a severe word against a ular sin, we must needs apologise in such nner that the rebuke is lost. Then there others of us who inveigh against the aring of rings, ear-rings, bracelets, and er heathenish practices, with remarkable erity, and forget that we are only topping tree, not striking at the root. The heart not right, or else the mind is deplorably oughtless when we see these things,—the t cure for these and like errors in practice, a holy heart; and this alone will do the rk. Methodists never will look at these travagances as sinful, until they shall derstand the lofty standard of Gospel rity. This they will not know, unless it is constant burden of the pulpit. It is not ficient to make this subject a text from ich to preach once a year—or twice a ar—it must be the distinguishing doctrine the Methodist pulpit; it must be the subt upon which we are to meditate, pray d labor. Nor can we do this unless we rselves know whereof we affirm. We must joy it, or we cannot preach it; and any an who does enjoy it, can preach it. Let not conclude that it is a mysterious subt, full of doubts and difficulties—it is the thing needful, for without it no man all see the Lord; and surely if it is "called highway of holiness," and if the fool may t err therein, we ought so understand it.

Now, brethren, is there not a most lamentle want of holiness in the Church? I am oroniker, no prophet of evil, to accuse my ethren, but I ask this question in sorrow d heartfelt pain. Does the Church stand fore the world as a holy people? Is our n beloved Methodist body a peculiar oplo, zealous of good works? Do we exerse that commanding influence upon the orld, which our very existence is calculated obtain? Are there not members in our cieties who seem to think they have a ght to violate our discipline, the word of d and good morals, because they are minent members of the community? Are ere not some among us who would be fronted at the idea of conforming to the les of our Church? Have we not had embers on our class papers and Church egisters, who occupy an honorary relation the Church, entitled to her privileges, but ot subject to her laws? Do we not soften ur language beyond the letter of the Bible avoid offending some of these great ones of e earth? And may we not do this without eing well aware of it? If these things are rue, we deceive ourselves in the most imortant and awful relations of life. If we esitate in drawing the reins of discipline ver the wealthy members of our Church, an we prevent the world from saying that oney can buy the privileges of the Church? ught we to deny the fact, when matters tand thus! If a few bank bills can exempt nen from the discharge of Christian duties, e we not help to deceive them by the impression that they can also pay their way to leaven?

I do not affirm that these things are general evils, but that they are not wholly imaginary, the judicious reader will bear testimony. Nor, do I believe that these are more true of the Methodist, than of other churches—far from it. We are doubtless the most scriptural in practice of all the denominations in Christendom, but we have room for improvement. But to say the best of it, is there not a very questionable morality gaining ground in the Church of Christ? Are there not to be found those who would do away the only hour-tasis among our prudential means? Do we not sometimes hear of our members arguing against class meetings? Are we at a loss for a reason for this? Is it not because their religious enjoyments are not sufficient for self-examination? Did ever a holy heart shun a class meeting? I doubt it. Indeed, we need no further proofs that these persons who thus speak have lost the power of godliness, and are relapsing into formalism. Again! do we ever wink at our members' attendance upon balls, parties, and theatres (not stooping to the circus), because they are otherwise of good moral report? Do we ever draw a distinction between going to the theatre, and going to see a great actor at the theatre.

We want a holy Church, but first we must have a holy ministry. Ministers may have knowledge of the sciences, even may understand all mysteries, but without this "charity," this "love," this "holiness," all is vanity, and profits them nothing. They may be polished shafts, but unless they divide the joints and the marrow, it is in vain that they attempt to preach. Nothing can dignify the pulpit more than the grace of God in the heart of the preacher—the presence of the unction will magnify talent and excuse moderate abilities. The Devil fears little from a high-sounding, thundering preacher, who carries no lightning. We are disappointed when we hear the noise of an explosion, and perceive no execution—where there are no sighs, no tears, no shouts, no anxiety felt—no sinner offended, and no saint edified by substantial food, there is little done, besides the exhibition of tawdry acquisitions of no further use than the peacock's feathers. From the heart, and into the heart, should characterise our pulpit efforts. And when the pulpit unitedly, and uncompromisingly insists, upon holiness of heart, we shall have a holy Church.

THAT THREADBARE SUBJECT—MINISTERIAL SUPPORT.

MR. EDITOR: I read in the last issue of the Charleston Advocate an article from a young man upon the subject of ministerial support. It was a forcible and telling thing, for it gave facts and figures connected with the life of the writer. He tells us of three years' travel in the itinerancy, in the flourishing and opulent State of Georgia, and how, with the closing up of each year, debt accumulated upon his hands, so that, at the expiration of the third year, he had spent over two hundred dollars. At such a rate as this, it would not require many years to bring on poverty and starvation. On entering the Conference, it is required of the minister to be free from pecuniary embarrassment, but when once in, he can have but little hope of getting out without it. Doubtless, many have labored hard to free themselves from such hindrances, in order to enter the itinerant ranks, that they might consecrate themselves for life to the work of saving souls and building up the Messiah's Kingdom; but, alas! a few years' devotion to their work finds them with empty purses and pressing wants. Perhaps they have performed the scriptural duty of getting a wife to share in their noble and glorious toils; if so, how must their sorrows be increased at the prospect of poverty before them, and if they have children, the feeling of sorrow must take a darker coloring, and reach a higher point of intensity—sometimes it amounts to anguish. For what husband can feel less than anguish when he looks upon a devoted wife and loved children and know that he has not the means of supplying them with a sufficiency of food and raiment? What father who has a mind and heart any ways cultivated, can look without sadness upon his offspring, and feel that, for want of ability to educate them, they must grow up in ignorance? Such a thought is especially afflicting in this age of enlightenment, when to be ignorant is almost to be without respectability. But the minister, so far as the education of his children is concerned, may find some comfort in the free school system, which is soon to be put to work, especially in some of the Southern States. A few of these have already begun the experiment, and are affording large advantages to children of every class. It becomes ministers, particularly itinerant ministers, to be thankful to the law-making power for this opportune provision for the instruction of their children, for now they may stand a chance of gaining at least an elementary education.

It is proposed to raise the salary or allowance of junior preachers. This is a good proposition, and it is to be hoped it will accomplish the end desired. Why take a young man into the work of the ministry, to burden him with debts—to add this one to a thousand bother ones connected with his sacred office? It is enough for him that he should, like Paul, have the "daily care of the churches," without hanging this millstone around his neck. The biography of one of the most eminent men of our church, if not the most eminent, makes pecuniary embarrassment in connection with the ministry a deplorable thing, an actual calamity. It hung with fearful and destructive weight upon the spirit of that departed one, from the time he entered the ministry to the day he left it for the grave, and perhaps prematurely hastened his end. The church, so far as he is concerned, can make no atonement for its neglect. She might have saved his heart from its pangs and added honor to her name. But we should not forget to say, that there were a few whose purses were opened to his relief, but it was too late and insufficient. Had the whole Southern Church, to whom he peculiarly belonged, possessed the true spirit of liberality, she might have to-day enjoyed his counsels and been warmed by his eloquence. May she learn wisdom for the future, and make provision for her laborers, who are worthy of their hire.

The church takes upon herself a fearful responsibility when, from a niggardly spirit, she forces a minister to quit the regular work to seek a location. The perishing of the people for "lack of knowledge" must be charged upon her. The minister perhaps may be dealt with, but woe to those who forced him to sin, if sin it be: for, can that be a sin which lends a man to set himself and save his family from disgrace and want, and to obey the injunction of the Scripture, which says, "Owe no man anything," etc.? The writer is acquainted with a minister who has been preaching some five or six years, who says that he has spent about six hundred dollars over and above what he has received from the church for services rendered, and this money has been paid mostly out of a moderate patrimony of his wife's; yet this brother has served occasionally some very rich people. He, I reckon, cannot be charged with extravagance, for he dresses and lives but genteelly. He had, amidst the duties of his station one year, to teach school a part of his time, in order to raise funds to keep up preaching the gospel among his wealthy parishioners. Times are, however, improving, for they are now giving in some places more than formerly. There is one station where they are now giving about $1800; about seven years ago, when the writer served it, they gave in the neighborhood of half that amount, so that he had to come off in debt for his board, and had to send the money back to pay for it after he had gotten it from another station. Such treatment was enough to have killed a young preacher off from the itinerancy at once; but the kindness of others, with whom he met afterwards, afforded a solace to his lacerated feelings, and encouraged him to go forward in the work. Still, bad it not been for private funds in the possession of the writer, and the blessing of God upon it, he might have ere this been compelled through necessity to desist from the itinerancy. But a love of the work, and a desire to see the prosperity of the church, has induced him to try and "endure hardness as a good soldier," remembering that "in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." In conclusion, it is to be hoped that the church will appreciate her young ministers, and so provide for them as to save them from the shame and burden of debt, and while she does this, let her also remember those of her ministers who have wives and little ones, who are dependent upon them for food and clothing. But enough for the present. This subject may be resumed at another time.

Yours truly, ALABAMA.

Tuscaloosa, March 21, 1854.

LETTER FROM A MEMBER OF THE REBEL ARMY AT NANKING.—"Two or three months ago," writes Dr. Legge, on the 26th November, 1853, "a shoemaker here (Hong-Kong) showed me a letter from a relative, who is in the ranks of the rebel army at Nanking. It was obviously the production of an unlettered man, but an enthusiast. 'I have joined,' writes he, 'this army, because God has raised up our true Lord to drive out the Tartars and deliver China from idolatry. Our army is a holy army, and we are sure of success. Every morning and every evening, at our meals, we pray to God. Formerly I was an idolater, and worthy of death, as you are now. Worship God! Go to some of the foreigners at Canton, and get a copy of God's Holy Book. That will teach you what to believe and what to do.' Surely, observes Dr. Legge, a movement, in which such letters are going about through all China, must be regarded by us with intense solicitude."

AN IRISHMAN ON LYING.—The Cattaraugas Whig states that a suit was recently brought before a magistrate in the village of Randolph, and during its progress, an Indian was brought forward to testify. His blank, expressionless face, and the general unmeaningness of his whole demeanor, gave rise to a serious doubt in the mind of the "court" as to the admissibility of his testimony. Accordingly, he was asked what the consequences would be if he should tell a falsehood while under oath. The countenance of the Indian brightened a little as he replied in a solemn tone, "Well, if I tell a lie, guess I be put in jail—great while, may be. Bimeby I die—and then I ketch it again." The witness was permitted to proceed.

LETTUCE AS A NARCOTIC.—The eater of the common green lettuce, as a salad, takes a portion of lactucarium, a narcotic substance similar in properties to opium, which it contains; and any one will discover that his head is affected after indulging freely in lettuce salad. Eaten at night, it causes sleep; eaten during the day, it soothes, calms and allays the tendency to nervous instability.

ROMAN CATHOLICS IN THE UNITED STATES. According to the census, the Roman Catholics have 1112 churches in this country, accommodating 621,000 hearers. Their relative strength is not quite one-eleventh the number of churches belonging to the Methodists, scarcely one-eighth the number of the Baptists, and not one-fourth the number of the Presbyterians.

METHODISTS.—It is now one hundred and fourteen years that the Methodists have existed as a people. They now number in the world nearly two millions of communicants, and preach the gospel to ten or twelve millions.

REDEEM THE TIME.

BY REV. H. BONAR.

Redeeming the time, because the days are evil.—Eph. v, 16.

THE startling words of the fourteenth verse must be linked with those of the sixteenth. It is expected of one who is "awake" and has "risen," that he should redeem the time. 'Sleepers may waste it, he must redeem it. Can we be awake and yet not "redeem the time."

It was an ancient custom to put an hour-glass into the coffin as an emblem of time run out. "I stepped," says a writer of the last century, "in Clerkenwell church-yard to see a grave digger at work. He had dug quite deep, and was come to a coffin which was quite rotten. In clearing away the rotten pieces of wood, the grave-digger found an hour-glass close to left side of the skull, with sand in it, the wood of which was so rotten that it broke when he took hold of it." A strange custom this! to notify the dead that their time was at an end! Of what profit could such a warning be, coming thus too late? It is to the living that we would present the hour-glass! It is the living that we would warn of the swift rush of time! Moments and years—moments and years! With what speed do they hurry away! O time, time, time, how soon will it be done! Men and brethren, look at that hour-glass, emptying itself, grain by grain, with such unsparing eagerness. Living men, you will soon be the dead, or the last trumpet will be sounding; and where will you be, and what is your hope? But look at the apostle's words. "Redeem the time."

1. Buy it out of the hands of those who are casting it away. Time, like a wide, fair garden of flowers, spreads out before the children of men; but they trample down its flowers. Time, like a vast treasure-house, opens its doors of gold and silver; but they throw them away. Buy them up! Lose nothing! Wasted time stands at the very head of the world's long catalogue of sins. Be warned! Men waste time; do you use it. They throw it away; gather it up. Whatever those that are asleep may do, those whom the apostle calls "fool," (verse 15) it becomes you who profess to be awake, to use it well. REDEEM THE TIME!

2. Buy it up, so as to lose not a moment. As the reaper with his sickle ear fully cuts down and binds up the corn of autumn, so do you with time! As the gleaner follows the reaper, picking up each scattered ear of grain, so do you glean up each moment of time! For each one is precious, too precious to be lost or slept away, or laughed away, or danced away, or talked away, or idled away. Gather up the very smallest fragment, that nothing may be lost, for each lost moment tells upon eternity. So many moments lost on earth, so many moments lost for heaven, and lost forever! REDEEM THE TIME!

3. Buy it up, so as to lay hold of each opportunity as it turns up, for the word "time" refers us much to "opportunity" as to time itself. Be on the eager watch for opportunities. Allow none to slip from you. Seize upon each one. Improve them all! It has been said that there is "a tide in the affairs of men" which must be taken at its height, or else all is lost. But in truth there is not one tide merely, but many. There may, in one sense and for certain things, be but one tide, but in another view there are tides not a few. Each day, each hour, has its tides, its critical moments, its opportunities, its seasons, which must be seized on at the moment, or lost forever. Might we not endeavor, each morning, to forecast a little and consider what opportunities may lie before us, and be ready to receive each one as it passes; for it passes us as the winged lightning. Be ready to lay hold on it. REDEEM THE TIME!

4. Buy it up, so as to have all in readiness against the evil day. As Joseph bought up the corn in the land of Egypt, as generals draw together all manner of stores into some city or fortress, against the day of war and siege, so do you. The evil day is at hand; nay, it has already begun. There is not a moment to be lost. Make ready for the worst. Remember that preparation for an evil day consists much in redeeming time. If this be neglected, then that day will not only come upon you unawares, but it will come as the avenger of your wasted hours. REDEEM THE TIME!

5. Buy it up, so as to make rapid progress in your heavenward journey. On this there must be no loiterings. You cannot afford to linger. Time is too brief, the way is too rugged, the journey is too important, the risk of failure is too terrible, the reward is too bright and glorious, to allow any such lingerings. Press onward. Make sure that you are really advancing. See that you are becoming holier in spirit, heavenlier in your walk, and more like the Master in your whole character and deportment. Pray more, love more, trust more. Be more self-denying and unworldly. Mortify your members which are upon earth; crucify the flesh with its affections and lusts. REDEEM THE TIME!

6. Buy it up, so as to be more useful in the world. It is not a life of fame and greatness that you are called to, but to one of usefulness. You may not be able to do or to speak great things, but you can be useful. See that you keep this in view. O pray to be kept from an unprofitable, wasted life. Pray for a useful life, however humble, nay, despised and obscure. Let your aim, each morning as you rise, be to spend a useful day. REDEEM THE TIME!

7. Buy it up, so that by means of it you may be laying up treasure in heaven. Wasted time is gold irrecoverably thrown away: cast into the fathomless ocean, from which it can never be brought up. Wasted time is not merely lost for a lifetime, but lost for eternity, and makes you poorer forever. It robs you of everlasting treasure; for, time redeemed is treasure laid up in heaven. Time redeemed is treasure multiplied a thousand-fold to us, so that when we reach the kingdom we not merely find all our treasure that we had there before us, but we find it increased and magnified far beyond what we could have conceived. Time lost on earth is blessedness lessened in heaven. Time lost is glory lost; but time redeemed is so much glory gained. Time lost will place us lower in the kingdom, (supposing that we do enter it) give us a dimmer crown, a poorer inheritance, a narrower range of dominion; but time redeemed will place us higher in the kingdom, will add brightness to our crown, and extend the limits and the glory of our incorruptible inheritance—the inheritance of the saints in light. O, is it not then worth our while to lay these things to heart—to consider how much we gain for eternity by buying up our moments here! REDEEM THE TIME!

TEXAS SCHOOL BILL.

The Marshall Republican, published in Harrison county, Texas, publishes the School Bill lately passed by the Legislature, and though favoring its design, has some mistrust as to its efficiency:

We are under the impression that the present law would have been much more acceptable, had it simply provided that the school money should be divided among the counties, pro rata according to the number of children in each, without imposing any further restrictions. As it is, it imposes very heavy and responsible duties upon county officers, for which it offers no remuneration. It provides that the counties shall be divided into school districts; it gives to two or three trustees the right to employ teachers, and establishes regulations as to the places where school houses shall be erected. In every county there are neighborhoods which have a number of children; and others which have but few. The people have their own arrangements fixed, with which this district system may very unpleasantly interfere. They will not readily resign their authority to employ and control teachers to two or three individuals; nor will these commissioners very cheerfully enter upon the task without remuneration. And besides all this, the teachers themselves will not willingly submit to the school law, for even to them its burdens will more than counterbalance its advantages. In some portions of a county the people will want a school all the year. In other portions they will not care about employing a teacher more than six months. Hence the money will be unequally distributed.

The interest on two millions of dollars, at five per cent, is $100,000. This sum is to be divided among the counties, of which we believe there are about eighty-five. Let us suppose that Harrison county gets three thousand dollars of this school fund. How far will it go towards paying the fees for tuition? There are, we should suppose, at least 1200 children in the county, coming within the provisions of the act. Allowing $20 per annum for each child, and we find the tuition fees amount to the sum of $24,000. It may be safely asserted that $30,000 would scarcely meet the demand.

Now, the question arises, will the small pittance of two or three thousand dollars derived from the State under this law (about $2 50 per annum to each child) be a sufficient inducement to render it very acceptable, when we take into consideration all its disadvantages and its onerous restrictions? We very much fear that it will not.

There is a general feeling prevailing in this State in favor of adopting the free-school system, but unfortunately the friends of education, who advocate the policy, are so imbued with the spirit of "Young America," that instead of being in favor of laying the foundation, gradually, for a broad and comprehensive policy, they wish to achieve in a single year what has required other States a century to accomplish.

There are, we should suppose, about 30,000 children in this State. To provide schools for the education of these would involve an outlay of at least $600,000, or the interest on a fund of over seven millions of dollars, at eight per cent. Two millions of this sum have been appropriated by the last Legislature. There are in addition near two millions of acres of land belonging to the counties, which if sold and thrown into the common fund would realize $2,000,000 more. But these lands cannot be sold without an alteration of the constitution, a policy wisely recommended by Gov. Pease. And if we had all this, there would still be $280,000 to be raised annually by taxation or otherwise.

THE WASHINGTON FAMILY.—Mention of the Washington family occurs as early as the 13th century; previous to that time there was a manor of the name in the county of Durham, England, the proprietor of which, as was very common in those days, took cognomen of the estate, and from him descended the Washington family. The name is frequently mentioned with respect in the local histories of England, and many of the family were scholars, divines and lawyers. Sir Henry Washington distinguished himself for bravery in sustaining the siege of Worcester against the Parliamentary forces during the civil wars, and Lawrence Washington was for some time Mayor of Northampton; but most of the family appear to have been substantial proprietors of lands, residing on their own estates, and holding respectable positions among the higher class of agriculturists. After the close of the revolutionary war, Sir Isaac Heard, then Garter King of Arms in London, interested himself in tracing the genealogy of the Washington family, and wrote to General Washington in regard to it, who replied that it was a subject in which he had never devoted any attention; and Sir Isaac, after collecting some facts, was prevented from pursuing the inquiry by a severe inflammation of the eyes. It was ascertained, however, that the owner of the manor, above referred to, was probably the first person who assumed the name, and that he changed his own, upon coming into possession of the property, from William de Hertburn to William de Wessyngton, from which the "de," as in many other instances, was subsequently dropped; and that Wessyngton, by successive changes, was finally written Washington.

[From the Quarterly's Essay on Conversation.

Doctor Johnson as a Converser.

Many people think Dr. Johnson the exemplar of conversational power. I think otherwise, for reasons which I shall soon explain, and far sooner I should look for such an exemplar in Burke than neither Johnson nor Burke, however they might rank as powers, was the artist that I demanded. Burke valued not at all the reputation of a great performer in conversation; he scarcely contemplated the skill as having a real existence; and a man will never be an artist who does not value his art, or even recognize it as an object sufficiently defined. Johnson, again, relied stoutly upon natural powers for carrying him aggressively through all conversational occasions of those times that English society, from its known character and composition, could be supposed likely to bring forward, without caring for any art or system of rules that might give further effect to that power. If a man is strong enough to knock down ninety-nine in a hundred of all antagonists, in spite of any advantages as to pugilistic science which they may possess over him self, he is not likely to care for the improbable case of a hundredth man appearing with strength equal to his own, superadded to the utmost excess of that artificial skill which is wanting in himself. Against such a contingency it is not worth while going to the cost of a regular pugilistic training. Half a century might not bring up a case of actual call for its application. Or, if it did, for a single extra case of that nature, there would always be a resource in the extra (and, strictly speaking, foul) arts of kicking, scratching, pinching and tearing hair.

The conversational powers of Johnson were narrow in compass, however strong within their own essential limits. As a conditio sine qua non, he did not absolutely demand a personal contradictor by way of "sticker" to supply fuel and keep up his steam; but he demanded at least a subject teeming with elements of known contradictory opinion, whether linked to partisanship or not. His views of all things tended to negation, never to the positive and the creative. Hence may be explained a fact, which cannot have escaped any keen observer of those huge Johnsonian memorabilia which we possess, viz: that the gyration of his flight upon any proposition that ever came before him was so exceedingly brief. There was no process, no evolution, no movements of self-conflict or preparation; no word, a distinction, a pointed antithesis, and, above all a new illumination of the logic involved, in some popular fallacy, or doubt, or prejudice, or problem, formed the uttermost of his efforts. His dissipated sense casual perplexity that had gathered in the eddies of conversation, but his contributed nothing to any weightier interest; he unchecked a strangulated sewer in some blind alley, but what river is there that felt his cleansing power? There is no man that can cite any single error which Dr. Johnson unmasked, or any important truth which he expatiated. Nor is this extraordinary. Dr. Johnson had not within himself the countnin of such power, having not a brooding or naturally philosophic intellect. Philosophy in any acquired sense he had none. How else could it have happened that, upon David Hartley, upon David Hume, upon Voltaire, upon Rousseau, the true or the false philosophy of his own day, beyond a personal sneer, founded on some popular slander, he had nothing to say and said nothing? A new world was moulding itself in Dr. Johnson's meridian hours, new generations were ascending, and "other palms were won." Yet of all this the Doctor suspected nothing. Countrymen and contemporaries of the Doctor's brilliant men, but (as many think) trifling men, such as Horace Walpole and Lord Chesterfield, already in the middle of that eighteenth century, could read the signs of the great changes advancing, already started in horror from the portents which rose before them in Paris, like the procession of regal phantoms before Macbeth, and have left in their letters records undeniable (such as now read like Cassandra prophecies) that already they have noticed tremors in the ground below their feet, and sounds in the air, running before the great convulsions under which Europe was destined to rock, full thirty years later. Many instances, during the last war, showed us that in the frivolous dandy might often lurk the most fiery and accomplished of aides-de-camp; and these cases show that men, in whom the world sees only elegant roués, sometimes from carelessness, sometimes from want of opening for display, conceal qualities of penetrating sagacity, and a learned spirit of observation, such as may be looked for vainly in persons of more solemn and academic pretension.

But there was a greater defect in Dr. Johnson, for purposes of conversation, than merely want of eye for the social phenomena rising around him. He had no eye for such phenomena, because he had a scholastic want of interest in them; and why? because he had little interest in man. Having no sympathy with human nature in its struggles, of faith in the progress of man, he could not be supposed to regard with much interest any forerunning symptoms of changes that to him were themselves indifferent. And the reason that he felt thus careless was the desponding taint in his blood. It is good to be of a melancholy temperament, as all the ancient physiologists held, but only if the melancholy is balanced by fiery aspiring qualities, not when it gravitates essentially to the earth. Hence the drooping, despondent character, and the monotony of the estimate which Dr. Johnson applied to life. We were all, in his view, miserable, scrofulous wretches; the "strumous diathesis" was developed in our flesh, nor soon would be; and, but for his piety, which was the best indication of some greatness latent in him, he would have suggested to all mankind a nobler use for garters than any which regarded knees. In fact, I believe, that but for his piety, he would not only have counselled hanging in general, but hanged himself in particular. Now, this gloomy temperament, not as an occasional, but as a permanent state, is fatal to the power of brilliant conversation, in so far as that power rests upon raising a continual succession of topics, and not merely of using with lifeless talent the topics offered by others. Man is the central interest about which revolve all the fleeting phenomena of life; these secondary interests demand the first; and with the little knowledge about them which must follow from little care about them, there can be no salient fountain of conversational themes. Pectus—id est quod disertum facit. From the heart, from an interest of love or hatred, or hope or care, springs all permanent eloquence; and the elastic spring of conversation is gone, if the talker is a mere showy man of talent, pulling at an oar which he detests.

What an index might be drawn up of subjects interesting to human nature, and suggested by the events of the Johnsonian period, upon which the Doctor ought to have talked, and must have talked, if his interest in man had been catholic, but on which the Doctor is not recorded to have uttered one word! Visiting Paris once in his life, he applied himself diligently to the measuring—of what? Of gilt medallions and diapered panels! Yet books, it will be said, suggest topics as well as life, and the moving sceneries of life. And surely Dr. Johnson had this fund to draw upon? No: for though he had read much in a desultory way, he had studied nothing; and without that sort of systematic reading, it is but a rare chance that books can be brought to bear effectually, and yet indirectly upon conversation; while to make them directly and formally the subjects of discussion, presupposes either a learned audience, or, if the audience is not so, much pedantry and arrogance in the talker.

COLERIDGE'S MONOLOGUES.

Coleridge, unless he could have all the talk, would have none. But then this was not conversation. It was not colloquium, or talking with the company, but alloquium, or talking to the company. As Madame de Staël observed, Coleridge talked and could talk only by monologue. Such a mode of systematic trespass upon the conversational rights of a whole party, gathered together under pretence of amusement, is fatal to every purpose of social intercourse, whether that purpose be connected with the direct use and the service of the intellect, or with the general graces and amenities of life. The result is the same under whatever impulse such an outrage is practiced; but the impulse is not always the same; it varies, and so far the criminal intention varies. In some people this gross excess takes its rise in pure arrogance. They are fully aware of their own intrusion upon the general privileges of the company; they are aware of the temper in which it is likely to be received: but they persist wilfully in the wrong, as a sort of homage levied compulsory upon those who may wish to resist it, but hardly can do so without a violent interruption, wearing the same shape of indecorum as that which they resent. In most people, however, it is not arrogance which prompts this capital offense against social rights, but a blind selfishness, yielding passively to its own instincts, without being distinctly aware of the degree in which this self-indulgence trespasses on the rights of others. We see the same temper illustrated, at times, in travelling a brutal person, as we say first, is not first to pronounce him, but more frequently one who yields unconsciously to a lethargy of selfishness, plants himself at the public fireplace, so as to exclude his fellow-travellers from all but a fraction of the warmth. Yet he does not do this in a spirit of wilful aggression upon others; he has but a glimmering suspicion of the odious shape which his own act assumes to others, for the luxurious torpor of self-indulgence has extended its mitot to the energy and clearness of his perceptions. Meantime, Coleridge's habit of soliloquizing through a whole evening of four or five hours, had its origin neither in arrogance nor in absolute selfishness. The fact was that he could not talk unless he were uninterrupted, and unless he were able to count upon the concession from the company. It was a silent contract between him and his hearers, that nobody should speak but himself. If any man objected to this arrangement, why did he come? For the custom of the place, lex loci, being notorious, by coming at all he was understood to profess his allegiance to the autocrat who presided. It was not, therefore, by an insolent usurpation that Coleridge persisted in monology through his whole life, but in virtue of a concession from the kindness and respect of his friends. You could not be angry with him for using his privilege, for it was a privilege conferred by others, and a privilege which he was ready to resign as soon as any man demurred to it. But though reconciled to it by these considerations, and by the ability with which he used it, you could not but feel that it worked ill for all parties. Himself is being led oftentimes into pure garrulity of egotism, and the listeners it reduced to a state of debilitated sympathy or of absolute torpor. Prevented by the custom from putting questions, from proposing doubts, from asking for explanations, resting by no mode of mental activity, and condemned also to the mental distress of hearing opinions or doctrines stream past them by flights which they must not arrest for a moment, so as even to take a note of them, and which yet they could not often understand, or, seeming to understand, could not always approve, the audience sank at times into a listless condition of inanimate vacuity. To be noted upon forever, but never to react, is fatal to the very powers by which sympathy must grow; or by which intelligent admiration can be evoked. For his own sake, it was Coleridge's interest to have forced his hearers into the active commerce of question and answer, of objection and demur. Not otherwise was it possible that even the attendance could be kept from drooping, or the coherency and dependency of the arguments be forced into light.

MADAME DE STAËL.

The French rarely make a mistake of this nature. The graceful levity of the nation could not easily err in this direction, nor tolerate such infatuation in the greatest of men. Not the gay temperament only of the French people, but the particular qualities of the French language, which (however poor for the higher purposes of passion) is rich beyond all others for purposes of social intercourse, prompts them to rapid and vivacious exchange of thought. Tediousness, therefore, above all other vices, finds no countenance or indulgence amongst the French, excepting always in two memorable cases, viz: first, the case of tragic dialogue on the stage, which is privileged to be tedious by usage and tradition; and secondly, the case, (authorised by the best usages in living society) of harrateur or raconteurs. This is a shocking anomaly in the code of French good taste as applied to conversation. Of all the bores whom man in his folly hates to hang, and heaven, in its mysterious wisdom, suffers to propagate their species, the most insufferable is the teller of "good stories"—a nuisance that should be put down by cudgeling, by submersion in horse ponds, or any mode of abatement, as summarily as men would combine to suffocate a vampire or a mad dog. This case excepted, however, the French have the keenest possible sense of all that is odious and all that is ludicrous in pressing, and universally have a horror of des longueurs. It is not strange, therefore, that Madame de Staël noticed little as extraordinary in Coleridge beyond this one capital monstrosity of unlimited soliloquy, that being a peculiarity which she never could have witnessed in France; and, considering the burnish of her French states in all that concerned colloquial characteristics, it is creditable to her forbearance that she noticed even this rather as a memorable fact than as the inhuman fault that it was. On the other hand, Coleridge was not so forbearing as regarded the brilliant French lady. He spoke of her to ourselves as a very frivolous person, and in short, summary terms that disdained to linger upon a subject so inconsiderable. It is remarkable that Goethe and Schiller both conversed with Madame de Staël, like Coleridge, and both spoke of her afterward in the same disparaging terms as Coleridge. But it is equally remarkable that Baron William Humboldt, who was personally acquainted with all the four parties—Madame de Staël, Goethe, Schiller and Coleridge—gave it as his opinion, (in letters subsequently published,) that the lady had been misunderstood through a very ignoble cause, viz: mere ignorance of the French language, or at least non familiarities with the fluencies of oral French. Neither Goethe nor Schiller, though well acquainted with written French, had any command of it for purposes of rapid conversation; and Humboldt supposes that mere spite at the trouble which they found in limping after the lady so as to catch one thought that she uttered, had been the true cause of the unfavorable sentence upon her. Not malice aforethought, so much as vindictive fury for the sufferings they had endured, accounted for their severity in the opinion of the diplomatic baron. He did not extend the same explanation to Coleridge's case, because, though even them in habits of intercourse with Coleridge, he had not heard at this interview with the lady, nor of the results from that interview; else what was true of the two Germans at least was true a fortiori of Coleridge; the Germans at least read French and talked it slowly, and occasionally understood it when talked by others. But Coleridge did none of these things. We are all of us well aware that Madame de Staël was not a trifler; nay, that she gave utterance at times to truths as worthy to be held oracular as any that were uttered by the three inspired writers, all philosophers, and bound to truth; but all poets, and privileged to be wayward. This we may collect from these anecdotes, that people accustomed to colloquial despotism, and who wield a sceptre within a circle of their owe, are no longer capable of impartial judgments, and do not accommodate themselves with patience, or even with justice, to the pretension of rivals; and were it only for this result of conversational tyranny, it calls clamorously for extinction by some combined action upon the part of society.

NEW ORLEANS,

SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1854.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.—Hon. J. Perkins, M. C., of Louisiana, has laid us under obligations by his valuable attentions in forwarding to our office public documents. We are indebted to Senator Benjamin for a copy of Lt. Herndon's Report, on the exploration of the Amazon Valley, ordered by the United States Government in 1850, and completed in 1852. The book is accompanied with a map, showing the path of the expedition from Lima to Para, about 4,700 miles.

EX-PRESIDENT FILLMORE arrived in the city on Sunday, about 11 A. M. Disliking that his arrival by boat should, on a Sunday, attract too much attention and disturb the solemnity of the day, he landed at Lafayette, where he took an omnibus, which brought him incog. through the city and deposited him at the St. Charles Hotel, where he found quarters prepared for him, as the guest of the [illegible] which were designed to mark to him the esteem of New Orleans, were, on account of the Charter elections, deferred till Tuesday.

NEW JERUSALEM.—We are told that this is the title of a new sect lately established in the city, and holding regular meetings in a chapel on Prytania street. They are "Spiritualists," and profess, of course, to have novel and abundant "manifestations." A member told us, in gravity, that he had not yet seen any angels, but his wife had seen two doves, and Mr. H. had seen ten or a dozen angels, and Mr. R. thirty or forty—saw them any time! They number about fifty members. Some unstable souls, carried about by every wind of doctrine, are among these—once members of Christian Churches: yet all, as far as we find out, well disposed and respectable. One fact is noteworthy: among them are some once stringent Baptists. Mr. Harris, the founder, has a way of taking all into this "Church of the New Jerusalem," by baptism—but it is done by sprinkling. The immersionists submit.

ARTESIAN WELL.—Canal street, nearly opposite the terminus of the horse cars, presents the fixtures of well-boring. Mr. Reed, of Alabama, is at work there, trying to get to the bottom of our delta. One hundred and fifty feet down, the auger struck some hard substance and refused to turn. It was drawn up and sharpened, after which it was again set to work. The boring then proceeded very slowly for a time, the auger sinking but a few inches. On hoisting out the auger, the tube was found to contain the chips of a cypress log. The fibres of the wood were very tough and perfect, but the softer portions had apparently decayed and disappeared. When examined with the microscope the fibres had much the appearance of hemp. It may prove rather a puzzle to some persons to account for the appearance of a cypress log at the distance of one hundred and fifty feet below the surface, and below several firm beds of clay, one of which is over thirty feet in thickness. Strange things have been done in the earth as well as on the top of it.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—Carlton and Phillips have forwarded us the last Annual Report of the Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from which we will select the most important statistics. From the general Sunday school statistics we collect the following aggregates throughout the entire Methodist Episcopal Church (North):

Number of Sunday schools	9,438
Officers and teachers	102,732
Scholars	525,008
Volumes in libraries	1,524,150
Bible classes	7,717
Scholars in infant classes	51,324
Sunday School Advocates taken	106,647
Conversions	16,916
Expense of the schools	$83,961

The increase of the year, over last year, was as follows:

Scholars	20,329
Infant school scholars	6,692
Sunday School Advocates	6,063
Conversions	3,673
Bible classes	504

EVIL SPEAKING.—Perhaps no single cause contributes more to banish the spirit of God from the houses and hearts of men, than evil speaking. There are sins of more flagrant enormity, but what sin is more extensively diffused? Evil speaking! Who is without sin in this respect? How common it has become! How much of it there is every day, every where, in the city and in the country, at home and abroad, in every large company, and in every little company, and even in the soliloquy of the closet! Who is not among its actors and its objects? We sacrifice others on this cruel altar, and then we ourselves become its cruel victims. How easily we slide into this sin!—Nevins.

The race of mankind would perish, did they cease to aid each other. From the time the mother binds the child's head, till the moment some kind assistant wipes the death-damp from the brow of the dying, we cannot exist without mutual help. All, therefore, that need aid, have a right to ask it of their fellow mortals; no one who holds the power of granting can refuse it without guilt.—Sir Walter Scott.

THE CHARTER ELECTION.

The events of Monday, though painful for some incidents, are yet gratifying upon the whole. Things had reached a sad pass here, until Monday night: may they not relapse! It is now known—for respectable candidates have stood the experimentum crucis—that keepers of grog-shops and pothouse politicians are not omnipotent. This will help the timid to a declaration of more complete independence. There is a strengthening sentiment in the whole country against the present naturalization and suffrage policy. It were better that twenty-one years instead of five were the limit of time, in which a foreigner could acquire the full rights of American citizenship. It takes as long for a foreign-born as a home-born man to be invested safely with American citizenship. The advantage is in favor of the home-born, for there is an old leaven to be purged out of the former, which is a work of time. Some foreigners are prepared to be American citizens in less than five years—not so the masses. And many of the former sort are willing to forego their advantage for the general good. They are the strongest kind of Native Americans. And these foreign masses make the capital upon which demagogues of the dirtiest water sport: they are the legions that obey the movings of the Romish priesthood in this country, so menacing to our institutions.

The Delta speaks out independently on this subject.

The Crescent (whose trenchant article, "Is it fit? Is it reasonable?" we quoted last week, and omitted the credit) took out an early day and maintains a strong and manly American tone.

The Reformers have elected a City Treasurer, Comptroller, Surveyor, Street Commissioner, and one out of four Recorders. The City Council is composed of 40 members—13 Aldermen and 27 Assistant Aldermen. Of the Council, the Reformers have a majority of four on joint ballot.

The ballot-box is wrested out of rumhole precincts. The Augean stables of municipal government are in part cleaned out, with a promise of more cleaning. The political dictatorship of Romish priests is thrown off. The Public Schools will be let alone—which is all now asked for them. And we hope the Reformers will give us a Sabbath Day in New Orleans. But we will not intrude a programme upon them.

THE BIBLE IN MEXICO.

A careful perusal of our late exchanges from Mexico, says the Picayune of the 24th ult., confirms in our mind the opinions we have hitherto held and expressed, that the existing Government there is one of a most ephemeral character, and that Santa Anna has nearly run his allotted course. Indeed, little else could have been expected from one who returned one year since from a third exile, and showed plainly in every act that if he had forgotten nothing, he certainly has learned nothing.

Since his return one year has elapsed, and although during that time innumerable changes have been effected in every branch of the Government, not a single vital principle has been introduced in its administration, nor in its foreign or external policy. Old and worn out restrictive theories of finance have been put in force, and, as a natural result, have destroyed the revenue formerly raised from foreign importations.

It is no wonder that under such circumstances the country should turn with disgust from the chief who had come in but a short time before with such great promises. That this is the universal sentiment in Mexico, that all classes are tired of Santa Anna and his pantomime, and that all look to the result of the late treaty with this country as the decisive event whether the present power shall expire at once, or whether it shall still continue for an indefinite though not long period.

Some parties are not willing to wait even for that event, and a revolution has already been commenced in the South by General Alvarez, the well known half-breed leader. The worst that can be said of the principles of his movement is the following summary of his ideas and intentions, as presented by El Universal, one of Santa Anna's chief supporters. It holds these ideas up to the scorn of all good Mexicans, or rather of all good Santanistas:

"Federative and State sovereignty; preponderance of the people over the 'cloth coat class;' absolute submission of the ecclesiastical to the civil power; freedom of conscience and of worship; suppression of the army and the supremacy of parliamentary rule; reorganization of the school system, &c.

"Thus it seems that despotism and the Papal hierarchy are again hand in hand, and again about to suffer defeat.

The doctrines here denounced as pernicious are just what the States of Central and South America need. As the Picayune says: "They strike us as having more vital life and positive tendency to a reorganization of society and good government in Mexico than anything we have ever seen advanced by the Santa Anna school, not excepting the famous order of Guadalupe or the mighty power of the Dictator."

The dread of the Bible is now one of the chief troubles and bane to keep out the light. Brownsville, where the M. E. Church, South, established a mission in 1850, is just opposite the town of Matamoras on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, in the province of Tamaulipas. Had that little fire kindled this great matter? Verily, a reinforcement should forthwith be sent to Brownsville; and the Texan frontier should be supplied with missionaries learning the language, and ready to enter every open door. The M. E. Church, South, must extend in that direction. It is a field that will eventually be open, and the Church ought to be prepared to enter it.

The Archbishop of the diocese of Mexico has lately addressed to all the clergy a circular, in which he recommends to them the greatest vigilance in preventing the circulation and reading of the Protestant Bibles which are being introduced from the United States in Tamaulipas, across the Texan frontier. The Universal publishes the circular at length, and it is based on a communication forwarded to the Archbishop by the Minister of Justice, who had received it from "a respectable person, residing in the United States of North America." This communication is to the following effect:

"Your Excellency knows that there exists in this city a society called the American Bible Society, composed for the most part of Protestant Methodists, and possessing large resources derived from private donations. This society has now been at work for many years with the greatest efforts to disseminate its religious ideas in Spanish America; and has omitted no means calculated to secure a successful result in the undertaking: bibles printed in Spanish, and missionaries have been and are its principal arms. As yet, it is only in the Columbian Republics that the Protestants have succeeded in realizing their plans, and principally in New Grenada, where the new constitution, a work of the most demagogical congress that has thus far existed in Spanish America, recognizes no religion protected by the State, and affecting freedom of worship, does not permit the free establishment of all Catholic bodies or congregations—as that Government does not allow the Jesuits to enter the country. My object in addressing this letter to your Excellency is to inform you that many of these Protestant Bibles have been sent to the Republic, and that they are introduced and will be introduced, by the Texan frontier into Tamaulipas. Protestant missionaries are most frequently introduced into small places as doctors or quacks, and sometimes as hawkers (vendedores de pacotillas.) This, as your Excellency is aware, is the most ready mode of gaining access among families. Besides Bibles, other works which contribute to the objects of the Protestants are introduced, which are aided by a large number of French novels, that if they do not contribute to favor the object of the Protestants, do oppose that of the Catholics, by corrupting the hearts of the young. I think that a severe registry of all books introduced for sale, ought to be made at the customs, and a yet more rigorous one of such as are introduced as for personal use among the luggage of passengers".

The Archbishop says that besides this official communication he has received personal information from the Minister of Justice, that measures have already been taken by the Government to prevent the introduction of the Bibles and other books, and the operations of the agents alluded to, by whom the Bible Society is said to work. But the Archbishop is not a Joshua that he should stop the sun.

THE POST OFFICES.

When next a new President inaugurates a new Postmaster General, it would be well to take the official—not out of the ranks of lawyers or politicians—but editors. They know the sore evils of bad mails. It would be well too, to keep the Postmaster General an editor of a paper, largely circulating. His memory would be jogged—he could not then be indifferent. The newspaper mails at this time are out of order at every point of the compass. Our exchanges, political, temperance, religious—all complain. The subscriber who refuses one paper on that account must content himself to be without any. The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, has raked up one new explanation:

The mail service of the country has been in a most deplorable condition of irregularity for some months past, as all conductors of public journals, especially, have reason to know. The Catholic Miscellany, however, instead of attributing to this cause the failure of its subscribers to receive it regularly, has discovered that the Miscellany is the victim of the malevolence of Protestant postmasters.

"The Catholic press," says that paper, "is subjected to a special grievance, from which their secular brethren are free. Pious postmasters throughout the country are at times so thoroughly Protestant, that they fancy it a sin to assist in the distribution of Catholic literature. Accordingly, they steal and make away with the Catholic papers, that pass through their office; and by this pious stratagem flatter themselves that 'they have done God a service.' And when Catholic subscribers call for their papers, they are told they never came. In course of time, as no man wishes to pay for what he cannot obtain, subscribers become discontented, and beg the postmaster to send back the paper, should it come again, and notify the publishers to discontinue. This is all the postmaster wished; and, accordingly, he sends back, after reading it, the next number that comes, accompanied by an impertinent epistle, cautioning the editors not to send his paper any more, because it is not called for, or refused by the parties, with such other unmannerly comments as his pious spleen may dictate."

This is a shocking state of things, truly. Pious postmasters have come to a pretty pass, when they get to stealing Popish newspapers. The subscribers to the Presbyterian in various sections, are complaining that our paper reaches them very irregularly, and sometimes not at all. Can the Miscellany inform us who "steals" Protestant newspapers?

METHODIST PRESS.

PHILOSOPHY OF FAITH.—The religious press has met the work bearing this title, by Rev. J. E. Cobb, of Arkansas Conference, with discriminating and high commendation. The copy first sent us, by mail, miscarried, and our anxiety to see it was not a little heightened by these flattering notices. We were prepared to look for a good book, because the conditions of successful authorship were fulfilled—a suitableness between the writer's mode of thought and expression and the nature of his subject. The book has just reached us. The same mail brings a copy of the Southern Christian Advocate, in which Bishop Andrew gives his opinion of it. The Bishop says:

Let nobody be alarmed at its title; you will find in its pages no sickly sentimentalism, no attempt to accommodate the great doctrine of faith to the teachings of human wisdom. It is a closely reasoned and successful attempt to examine faith in its character, its influences, and relations; and all this is done in the spirit and according to the principles of a sound philosophy, the sacred Scriptures being the standard to which every principle and every conclusion is reverently and fearlessly appealed.

But the work is not only one of close, patient, and profound thought; the whole book is instinct with the spirit of a warm and ardent piety; and it is impossible to peruse it without becoming wiser, and without feeling an ardent desire to possess that full experience of the faith which is the theme of the volume before you. You cannot read it without understanding that the writer is not only a sound, orthodox, and able theologian, but a warm and decided Methodist, who is not only not ashamed of the peculiarities of Methodism, but glories in them as they stand connected with a sound Scriptural experience and practice. We advise the preachers all to read the work, and to engage actively in its circulation, as you will thereby circulate among the people sound views of religious truth, and will at the same time promote the interests of a beloved brother, whose means are not abundant, and who has, I believe, published the work at his own cost. I trust that the present work will meet with such success that the author will favor us with other important contributions to the theological literature of the times. His pen should not be idle; and, as he is a young man, the church has much to hope from him in time to come.

HAVE WE A NATIONAL FAITH AMONG US?—The North-Western Christian Advocate, one of our best exchanges, puts it thus, and we rejoice it is so:

And as all nations have their religion, so has ours. What is it? It is certainly not a mere negation, infidelity—for the Bible is employed to give sanctity to an oath, from the President, in his inauguration, to the humblest yeoman in his deposition. We need not say that it is not Papacy, or any form of Paganism. Nor does it assume the form of an legalized creed, or of a national church. But it does assume the form of nationalizing the Bible—the form of positivity—leaving every individual to infer his duty from it without let or hindrance, and worship Almighty God according to the "dictates of his own conscience, with none to molest, or make afraid." In other words, Protestantism is nationalized in America, and no other religion ever can be. Papacy, as such, is uncompromisingly antagonistic to all the cardinal institutions of our nationality. Papists constitute the civil and literal Gipsies of our commonwealth.

CONTROVERSY.—Few men are so wrongly guessed at, from their writings, as the editor of the Richmond Advocate: we mean, in point of temper. Successful in controversy, and by position often forced to it, (he defended the border,) many, who have read his editorial columns and never seen the editorial face, imagine him crab-appleish: whereas he is one of the best-tempered, blandest, May-morning men living. Some one having, in these last days, revamped the charge, "too fond of controversy," Dr. Lee replies:

"Hear me for our cause, and be patient that ye may hear." We verily thought, when we entered upon our editorial career, that we could please everybody. The first paper we ever issued contained an extract two inches long of something Mr. Clay said in Congress. It cost us a subscriber. We were a partizan. Shortly after, we said something about money, of which we were sadly in want. It cost us a subscriber. We were a United States Bank man. We published an interesting narrative: it brought us a severe rebuke. We were catering to a taste for light reading. We gave them columns of solid divinity: the paper was too dull. We culled from science, literature and art: what are you about? yours is a religious paper. We gleaned from papers of sister churches: why, are you not editing a Methodist paper? We wrote paragraphs, they were too short; essays, they were too long; took the via media, readers turned right off at a cross-road. We were on "the bridge of sighs," at the foot of "the hill difficulty." Here we took our first lesson in wisdom—found out we were a fool, engaged in the Sysiphean task of pleasing that very respectable and very particular gentleman, Mr. Everybody. We have not patented this discovery. What next? We determined to do what everybody has a right to do—what is vulgarly called "following your nose." We've been at this a long time; and think we get on better than we would in following yours, Mr. Objector.

A PROTESTANT BULL.—Any wonder that a clergy-phobia is growing, or doubt of its solution, as given by "Woodman," on reading this paragraph from the New York correspondent of the Bulletin. When ministers transcend their vocation, their Divine calling falls into distrust. The proceedings in Congress upon the introduction of the New England protest against the Nebraska bill were published by us last week. The correspondent of the Bulletin says:

The memorial of the 3000 New England clergymen was in some respects a fraud, for many out of New England, and not a few in in this city, signed it. Our citizens generally, even when opposed to the bill, view with jealousy any attempt on behalf of the clergy to meddle in State affairs. Much more do they reprehend the semi-religious manner in which they approached Congress. The memorial is nothing more nor less than a Protestant Bull. They come not as citizens but as clergymen—not to humbly ask deliberation, but to demand it under pains and penalties of God's judgment. And who gave them the right to speak for Divinity ex cathedra? The libeller of Webster, the irreverend Theodore Parker, and the Barnum of the Ministry, Ward Beecher, are at the bottom of the whole measure.

THE PACIFIC CONFERENCE.

Just after going to press last week the California mails were opened and brought us the news below. Dr. Boring writes:

"The session of Conference was protracted but harmonious and profitable. Our statistics show a handsome increase in almost or quite every department of our field of labor. Bishop Soule and his traveling companion, Rev. F. E. Pitts, were detained on the Isthmus two weeks, from a failure to connect with the ship on the Pacific side. The Bishop, however, and Brother Pitts came up in fine health. They expect to sail from this port for the Atlantic on the 10th March, on which time it is now the purpose of Brother Wynn and myself to sail also. Should God prosper our journey, we shall be in your city by the steamer early in April."

Rev. J. F. Blythe sends us a copy of the Stockton Journal, Feb. 24, which contains a notice of the Conference and the appointments. The Journal says:

"The Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened in this city on Wednesday of last week, and continued its sessions down to 3 o'clock last evening, when its deliberations were dissolved and its members adjourned to their respective fields of labor. Many talented and powerful divines have been in attendance and much benefit, we hope, has resulted from their convention in our community. The attendance of the aged and venerable Bishop Soule, thousands of miles from his home, feeble and frosted with age, yet strong and trenchant in his unclouded intellect, is of itself a feature not the least worthy of note, showing how ardent are the true disciples of the Christian religion. The Church, we are gratified to learn, is in a very promising condition, and the Conference adjourned with the signs of an auspicious year before them. No regular organization of the Southern branch of the Church was ever fully organized until the present Conference, but henceforward every energy characteristic of that peculiar denomination, will be brought into requisition to advance the Church. Three hundred members were added last year; but owing to the want of preachers many points were left unattended to. This deficiency will be supplied, immediately on the return of Bishop Soule to the Atlantic States. On the adjournment of the General Conference, which will be held in May next, in Georgia, several missionaries will be sent to California. The finances of the Church are in a healthy condition, as $2700 were added to the missionary fund. In another column we publish a list of appointments, together with a card of thanks to the citizens for the courtesy with which the members of the Conference have been treated during their stay in Stockton. We are satisfied that our citizens will appreciate the kindness that suggested to the Conference the propriety of continuing the Rev. Mr. Blythe as the Presiding Elder of this District, as we do not know a gentleman more esteemed in this city. Report speaks exceedingly favorable, too, of the divine selected, as our stationed preacher, the Rev. Mr. Simmons.

Bishop Soule will continue in the city until next Sunday, when he will deliver, in all human probability, his Farewell Sermon on the shores of the Pacific. His mission to our State, we hope, has been as pleasant to himself as it has been gratifying to us; and may his return to the East be calm and serene. He will preach in the Methodist Church on Weber Avenue, at 11 o'clock on Sunday morning.

Resolved, That our thanks are due, and are hereby tendered to the pastors and congregations of the different churches of the city, for the use of their houses of worship on Sabbath last.

Resolved, That these resolutions be handed the city papers, with a request that they publish.

THE BRIDAL AND THE BURIAL... DR J. MONTGOMERY.

Blessed is the bride whom the sun shines on;
Blessed is the corpse which the rain rains on.
I saw thee young and beautiful,
I saw thee rich and gay;
In the first blush of womanhood,
Upon thy wedding-day;
The church-bells rang,
And the little children sang—
"Flowers, flowers, kiss her feet;
Sweets to the sweet!
The winter is past, the rains are gone,
Blessed is the bride whom the sun shines on."

I saw thee poor and desolate,
I saw thee fade away,
In broken-hearted widowhood
Before thy locks were gray;
The death-bell rang,
And the little children sang—
"Lilies dress her winding-sheet;
Sweets to the sweet!
The summer's past, the sunshine's gone;
Blessed is the corpse which the rain rains on."

The 18th of March, Calhoun's birth-day, was celebrated in Charleston on quite a large scale. Business was generally suspended.

THE CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE.

The Christian Advocate of the 24th February, states that this body (M. E. Church North) met in session on the 16th February, in Sacramento City, Bishop Simson presiding. The Advocate is a very neat and interesting church organ, and complaints are made that the New York agents, "at 200 Mulberry," have not carried out the intention of the General Conference towards the paper in "establishing it." For this, $10,000 are needed. We quote some encouraging statements from the Pastoral Address:

Beloved brethren, we call you to record the grace of God in the great moral changes which are taking place in your midst, and the peculiarity and importance of the field you occupy, and address to you an earnest exhortation to faithfulness. A short time ago there was not a Protestant Church in this land; now we have with us forty-four churches, and nineteen parsonages, besides those belonging to other Christians, (whom we exhort you to love and in whose successes we rejoice,) and twenty-four of these churches have been built or rebuilt the past year. The Temperance cause has been rapidly gaining ground, Sabbath Schools successfully organized and conducted. We find in connection with us forty-five schools, containing three hundred and thirty-four officers and teachers, and six thousand six hundred and eighty-four volumes in libraries, and one thousand five hundred and sixty-four scholars. The number of conversions in Sunday Schools is reported at thirty-one; but this is not all that has been done there, for it must be borne in mind that the whole Sabbath School army is under training for the Church of God. Our Tracts have been distributed generally. In one city seven hundred dollars have been raised and most of it appropriated in that work. There, also, five conversions are reported as the result of this labor. The conversions under the general Ministry have been about two hundred and fifty-five. We are sorry this number is so small, but we are glad it is no smaller.

Again:

Your relation is further peculiar in that everything is new here. Societies are to be established, colleges to be founded, the religious press to be sustained, the gospel ministry to be supported, and all benevolent organizations to be effected. The initiative has been taken. We have cause to congratulate you on the promising condition of all these things. The churches are generally free from embarrassment. Their estimated value is $233,756, on which there are debts to the amount of only $45,415. The paper having reached a circulation of 1850, will abundantly pay expenses with an increase of five hundred subscribers. The finances of the University are in a sound and healthy condition, as will be seen more fully in the report of the Committee on Education, to which, with other Conference reports, we refer you. The support of the ministry has, in most instances, been liberal. The whole claims of forty-one ministers, as estimated by your committees, was forty-nine thousand six hundred and seventy-one dollars. Their receipts reported, were thirty-five thousand and fifty-four dollars. This support has been very remarkable, and yet a good number of the brethren have suffered from the want of the necessaries of life. There is a deficiency of $14,617. It is evident that a membership of only 1659 have been largely assisted by benevolent friends outside the church to do so much.

There were admitted on trial:

William S. Urmy, J. J. Cleveland, Israel S. Deihl, and P. Y. Cool.

INSANITY IN CALIFORNIA.—The report of the Board of Trustees of the Insane Asylum of California, which has been recently published, shews that there is, perhaps, a greater amount of insanity in that State than in any other in the Union among an equal proportion of population. This is attributable, to a great extent, to the mental excitement and physical excesses incident to the unsettled and adventurous life to which all who emigrate to the land of gold are subject. We find of two hundred and eighty-four persons who were admitted into the asylum at Stockton, twenty-seven were caused by disappointment, nine by loss of property, eight by fear and grief, seven by mental excitement, forty-two by intemperance and twenty-five by bad health.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS.

ENON, ALA., March 21, 1854.

MR. EDITOR: Please insert in your paper the following resolutions adopted at the Second Quarterly Meeting, held for the Chunnenuggee Station, Alabama Conference, on the 18th inst.

On motion—

Resolved, That we request our delegates to use their best exertions in the next General Conference, to have the ninth section expunged from our discipline.

Resolved, That we request our delegates to the next general Conference, that they use their influence to have inserted into our discipline a rule, prohibiting any Elder, Deacon, Preacher, or Member in our Church, from the manufacture, sale, or use of ardent liquors as a beverage.

Resolved, That the preservation of chastity among our colored population being of great importance to their moral and religious condition, it is the indispensable duty of every Christian master to remove from them as far as practicable every temptation to vulgar lewdness.

Resolved, That the low estimate in which marriage is often held among them, by their masters, with regard to them, is a serious evil, and one which has strong claims to civil and ecclesiastical interference.

Resolved, That we, by the foregoing resolutions, do petition the general Conference about to assemble to take such action on the premises as will best promote the object contemplated.

Resolved, That the above resolutions be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that the Church papers be requested to copy.

D. E. ANTHONY, Secretary.

THE IRISH IN NEW ORLEANS.

The exciting events of day before yesterday still agitate too much all minds to say whether feeling as a good citizen or as already to have relapsed into an ordinary. He who could, in the midst of such scenes, promptly regain his customary state of mind had but little feeling in him, and is not to be envied as a man nor admired as an American.

We ourselves make no pretension to superiority to the passions. For while, in life as in personal, we strive all we can, in common conjunctures of affairs, to control ourselves and others, all but the solitary rest, there come moments in which it is fit that the warmest emotions should have their way, when the heart rightly becomes the ruler of the head. God would (we venture to say) have made us less wisely, had he made us natures not partly of passion, but wholly of intellect. For the strongest, most generous, justest movements of our being are not the conclusions of the mind, but the quick native impulses of the honest bosom; which, usually consenting to be governed by the reflective part, at times, knowing itself in the right, must, without a pause, take no counsel, but act for itself.

Such was the position in which, on the occasion in question, the good, the quiet, law-abiding, the God-fearing men of our city stood. The presence among us of a large of Irish population had offered an element of party strength which demagogues on both sides had been courting, until at last, by the solicitation of flatteries for their favor, the bad, the turbulent portion of these men (these poor refugees and guests, the beneficiaries of our bountiful freedom) had, like spoiled children who are ever undutiful, or (we must not be like that sort of people who preverbially, if you give them an inch, will take an ell, come to consider themselves the lords and masters of the town, and perfectly entitled, at their insolent will, to do what they liked to it and to us) were to fawn and to cringe to them, in order to get into office; of course, all who had the power in were ready to govern so as to please them in all things; and, unhappily, they were scarcely to be pleased by any such law or police as was good for any body else. In short, under the union with the demagogus natives—who in fact are the true criminals, while the Hibernians, but the dupes and victims, in this whole matter—they have turned our whole city government, its councils, its finances, its tribunals, its police, and its morals into the completest libel of what a city like this should be, that ever was seen.

In especial to effect and to perpetuate all this it had been necessary that their managers, masters should make of them, at elections, the tyrants of the ballot-box. Of late, when strong enough, they took possession. If resistance was offered, it was put down by the club. Once in possession, false voting finished what the bludgeon had begun; and perjury and multiplied ballots enough were thrown in a few precincts, to crush all majorities elsewhere else.

Of such practices, the Seventh Ward polls having been atrociously the theatre. At last election (we were then told) it was a scene of perfectly unbridled violence and fraud, by which all opposition was driven off by brute force, that from threats and curses and bullying and breaking heads, stood ready to commit murder.

To make all this still more abominable, we can now personally aver from what we witnessed) the city authorities themselves did not merely tolerate these crimes against the law, but actively set them on, organized them, directed them. As we have already told, last daily narrative, the Common Council left legislating, the Recorders hearing cases, the Police thief-catching, and all, piously consigning the city to the care of God, took to cleaning. The Police in general has been lately withdrawn from its duties of guarding the citizens to that of watching them; and finally has prevented from protecting these citizens in the exercise of their highest rights, to heading and slaughter of bludgeoned ruffians upon them.

All this, however, has been quelled by the unshaken firmness of our deeply-aroused people, and they have vindicated most worthily the double blood which they owe—the French, that is quick at Revolutions; the English, that steady to maintain them. Nor has the brotherly help of that good nation the Germans, and of even many worthy sons of the Green Isle with a great body of other adopted citizens failed us. We have fairly won back our ancestral privileges; we have shaken off our foreign yoke, and those who had imposed it on us, so far as they could now be legally reached, and our good city is once more herself. New Orleans is recaptured. As we on Monday predicted, "the Dutch have taken Holland."

This is, however, a history which, of course, we do not so much tell to New Orleans, where it is not needed, as to those at a distance, in order that no misapprehension of things may go abroad.

OBITUARY:

DIED—On the 24th of December, 1853, in the 94th year of his age, JOHN BLACKBURN. He was born in Buckingham county, Virginia, 1760. When 36 years old, he embraced religion, and joined the M. E. Church. In 1818, he immigrated to Alabama. The country was new, and for some time his house supplied the place of a church. And there, for many years, the Methodist preachers found a home. After the death of his wife, and for more than twenty years past, he made his home principally with his son-in-law, John Boyd, Esq., where he breathed his last. His faith was strong, and his confidence unshaken, in the Methodist doctrine, and in the purity and excellence of the Christian religion. As a Christian, his life was unexceptionable. As a citizen, he was above suspicion. A writ was never served on him as a defaulter in case of debt, public duty, or otherwise. After an acquaintance with him, for about thirty years, I think I risk nothing, in saying, he had the confidence of all who knew him. At his death, his children, grand, and great grand children, numbered about one hundred and seventy-five. When his extremities were all cold, he said he had long prayed that he might be permitted to die without pain. As far as those present could judge, his request was granted. When he was near breathing his last, he said, "All is well." And fell asleep in Jesus. CHARLES MCLEOD.

Southern Christian Advocate please copy.

DIED—Rev. JOSIAH B. DAUGHTRY, the son of Enos and Catherine, of Northampton county, N. C. The family removed to Adams county, Mississippi, in 1809. Young Daughtry and Peter James were converted about the same time, and began to preach shortly after. His first year was traveled amid perils by day and night. He preached at Fort Mims, in Alabama, the day before the night of the bloody massacre by the Indians. He spent the night at Col. Fisher's, and was thus spared.

Shortly after the battle of New Orleans, he joined the Holston Conference. He married Sarah Winn, in Lee county, Va. He traveled some thirty-five years in that Conference, filling the office of Presiding Elder for years.

In 1849, he returned to Mississippi to improve his health. In 1850, he traveled Yankin Circuit. He had Stein's Creek encampment made, and in most successful meeting held. In 1851, he traveled the Baron Circuit. The next year he traveled Hillsborn' Circuit. His work was blessed with four extensive revivals. During the same year, he and myself organized a class, and received fifty-four members into our church.

Last year, he traveled the same Circuit. He was taken with rheumatism about the time of our Annual Conference in Canton. He lingered six weeks. I was called to see him a few days before his death. He was then suffering from jaundice and great prostration. His sufferings were severe. His mind of faith was as long as he could speak. He frequently called on us all to kneel at his bedside and pray silently for him.

I heard him the morning before his death, in a kind of soliloquy, say, "I have fought the good fight of faith, and shall soon lay hold upon eternal life." In the evening of January 5, 1854, he turned on his side and said, "I must die," and spoke no more. He leaves his aged companion of toil and care, childless; but with a snug little competency and surrounded with the brethren and friends of her husband. G. W. STEWART.

DIED—In Green county, Alabama, Feb. 8, 1854, Mrs. LUCY MUNNERLYN, in her twenty-third year. Sister M. professed religion and united with the M. E. Church in 1842, in which communion she continued a faithful member until she left to join her friends above. In intelligence, above ordinary; her religious impressions and enjoyments, deep and solid; her faith strong and lively, ever working by love—thus enjoying a lively sense of the favor of God, which supported her afflictions, privations, so she was ever able to give a reason of the hope that she entertained of heaven. Her seat was seldom vacant at church, when her health and circumstances would admit of attendance, as the manner of some is, but was glad when the time arrived to go to the house of prayer. She was a Christian in deed and in truth. As a wife, she was ever kind and affectionate; ready to counsel, sympathize and pray with and for her husband, in times of disappointment. As a neighbor, she was affable and pleasant, ever ready to visit the sick and relieve the distressed. But she is gone to rest from sorrow, pain and disappointment. I had the painful privilege of visiting her on her death-bed. After prayer, I proposed a few simple questions in regard to her future prospects. Her answers were clear and very satisfactory to all present; and thus she departed, to be with Christ. T. MOONY.

EX-PRESIDENT FILLMORE'S RECEPTION.—On Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock, as was appointed, Ex-President Fillmore, attended by ex-Secretaries Kennedy and Conrad and many of our citizens, left the foot of Canal street in the steamer Robert J. Ward, and, after proceeding up the harbor as far as the Lafayette Landing, went down the river as far as Jackson's "Battle Ground," where the Ex-President and company landed, and were conducted over the ground, after which they returned on board the steamer, arriving back at Canal street at 12 o'clock. The military, which had turned out in force, then accompanied Mr. Fillmore to the City Hall, where an immense multitude had collected in the streets and the adjoining Square. A platform had been erected in front of the City Hall to which he was conducted. The freedom of the city was then presented him by Mayor Crossman, and a short address was delivered by P. C. Wright, Esq., which was replied to by Mr. Fillmore, whose address was received with most enthusiastic applause. Mr. Fillmore was followed in his remarks by ex-Secretaries Conrad and Kennedy with brief but appropriate remarks and altogether the whole affair seemed to conclude satisfactory to all parties.

From the Delta, March 29.

The Election Violences.

Deeply grieved that our city, whose character for peace and order on occasions of public elections has been the theme of general approval should be suddenly converted into a scene of violence, tumult and bloodshed, we institute yesterday a diligent and thorough inquiry into the causes and facts of the lamentable occurrences of Monday. We entered upon this examination with minds entirely devoid of bias, passion, or any kind of excitement. We had taken a warm interest in the election of Monday, not solely on the ground of reform—to establish a doctrine which we have always maintained, that the government of this city should be confided to respectable citizens, without regard to party. We gave our warmest support to a ticket committed to that principle, composed equally of gentlemen of both political parties. Having no connection or sympathy with any association or combination, we limited our efforts and desires entirely to this single object—of procuring for our ill-governed city an administration which should be freed from the burdens and restraints of party. We state this in order that our narrative of the facts may not be suspected of bias or prejudice.

It is well known that under the system of grog-shop caucuses a set of very low and disreputable characters, and, what is worse, of very reckless demagogues, have acquired a political ascendancy in this city, which has given great disgust and offence to the respectable citizens of both parties. Decent, quiet citizens have been virtually driven from the primary assemblages by low rowdies and bullies, and have been compelled, under the ban of outlawry, to vote for such persons as these caucuses might select. Under this system very improper nominations have been made for public offices, and persons elected to responsible stations who forgot the interests confided to them, and regarded only their own interests and that of a party.

One of the forms of this dangerous demagoguery was a systematic attempt to combine naf Irish fellow-citizens into a compact and distinctive body, and place them at the beck and nod of party managers, to be employed by them in aid of any of their nefarious schemes. Left to their own instincts and better feelings, this class of our citizens would, no doubt, mingle and merge themselves in the rest of the community; but, appealed to as a separate class, cajoled, flattered and humbugged by selfish partisans, they are forced into a position which must always excite and keep alive bitter passions and animosities in a mixed population like this. John Mitchel, one of the most courageous, as well as sagacious, of Ireland's many brilliant sons, clearly perceived this evil, and warned his countrymen against it, declaring, that an Irishman should, when he became an American citizen, cease to be an Irishman; that he should maintain no distinctions from the rest of the Americans; that he should repel as an insult all appeals to him as an Irishman; that he should think and act for himself; that he should stand aloof from all organizations, military or civic, calculated to keep alive national distinctions.

A departure from these simple and rational rules of republicanism and American citizenship, has led to the formation of associations like the Native American Society, and like the growing and formidable society of "Know-Nothings." No true Republican could feel or manifest any opposition or ill-feeling towards any respectable citizen born abroad. Such persons have nothing to fear. They will always enjoy equal rights with other citizens. But the large class who preserve their national distinctions,—who speak of themselves as an Irish party,—who combine in Irish associations,—who take the control of caucuses, conventions, and become the easy tools of demagogues, native and foreign; this is the class which has produced a deep and wide-spread feeling of hostility and and discontent among the American born. We do not stop to inquire into the reasonableness or propriety of this—we are merely stating the facts.

Let us illustrate by a reference to transactions in our own city. First, we have conventions to nominate candidates for public offices comprised almost exclusively of one class of our citizens. And even this is not the worst of it. Citizens of Irish birth, when good citizens, are just as trustworthy as any others; but the low, ignorant, rowdy and debased, whether born in Ireland, America or elsewhere, ought not to be entrusted with the high prerogative of nominating officers for a free and enlightened community. Unfortunately, too many of this character have been found in a single class.

Next we have a dominant party appointing the inspectors of election exclusively from that party, and mostly from the class of citizens referred to. Here was one of the principal causes of the disturbances of Monday. In the three wards in the very centre of the city, where the American-born and mercantile population generally reside, the Inspectors were almost entirely Irish-born citizens. Added to this, we have a police nineteen-twentieths of whom are of the same nationality, headed by a chief who, with an intelligence which should have preserved him from such imprudence, seems to have disregarded the sage counsels of John Mitchel, and to have concerned himself more with party than police affairs—looking after secret political associations, with which he has no business, instead of for rogues and disturbers of the peace, who fall under his proper jurisdiction. These are the main facts which led to the disturbances on Monday.

We confine ourselves to a narrative of what occurred at the Seventh Ward, the other polls being generally as well conducted as usual on exciting elections. This ward was calculated to give a very large majority for the democratic ticket. The vote in the ward at the previous elections had exhibited some astounding results. From seven hundred it suddenly rose to eleven hundred, after a very severe and destructive epidemic. Under such circumstances, it was natural that suspicions of unfairness and irregularity should be indulged. To disarm these suspicions, to satisfy the public that it was a fair and legal vote, it behoved the party in power first, to appoint the inspectors judiciously and fairly; and secondly, to conduct the election with a strict regard to law and equity. This would have satisfied all parties. This most virtuously disposed would have been silenced and reconciled by such a procedure. We regret to say this was not done in the Seventh Ward.

The first error was in appointing corporation officials as inspectors who were personally interested in giving a particular direction to the voting. Next it has been represented by reliable persons, that votes were received with a rapidity and a disregard of the injunctions of the law, which disgusted all beholders; challengers were ordered off and disregarded; demands for the swearing of the voters were refused on the ground that the inspectors had not time, and persons who were pointed out as having voted before and who were illegal voters, were received; citizens who invoked the application of the legal tests, were insulted and threatened; and many other improprieties committed. Although the average vote of the ward was but 700, we are informed by good authority that a thousand votes had been received at 12 o'clock, just four hours after the polls were opened. This would be at the rate of four persons a minute, a rate which excludes all idea that the requirements of the law were regarded.

These circumstances produced great excitement among the citizens, and a large crowd assembled near the polls. In front of the Judge's stand and the ballot box was a room, sometimes used as a ball-room, wherein were assembled a mixed crowd of angry disputants. One great cause of angry contention was the refusal of a man by the name of Smith, to relinquish a position which he occupied near the Judge's stand, and to cease challenging voters. Smith, having been threatened, drew his pistol, and dashed the crowd to remove him. He was maintaining his position, when, about three o'clock, two detachments of stout and furious men rushed into the ballot-room, by two doors, brandishing heavy loaded sticks, and shouting, "Down with the Know-nothings!"

One of these parties was led by William Mechler, a policeman, brother of the policeman who was killed on Sunday morning in an affray of his own provocation. Mechler was a powerful man, and appeared to be bent on some desperate purpose. He rushed into the crowd with his club, there was a general mêlée, and Mechler and his party were observed to be retreating, Mechler himself falling near the door, and another man named Martin Towsley falling within the house. They were both stabbed mortally through the shoulder. Lamentable as such an occurrence as this must appear to all good citizens, it would be vain to pretend that these men were engaged in any other but an unlawful and violent interference with the rights of other citizens. They were evidently provoking an affray.

For the remainder of the day there was comparative quiet at the polls. The polls were closed at the usual time, and it was given out that the number of votes registered was 955. This proclamation gave general satisfaction, and the crowd dispersed. The inspectors took the ballot-boxes into possession, and retiring into an interior room, began to count the votes in the presence of gentlemen of both parties as they were about to commence the count, to the surprise of some persons, it was stated that instead of 955 there 1100 votes in the box. The misrepresentation as to the number was confessed by some to be a ruse, to prevent the polls being mobbed. By others, it was charged or suspected that votes had been placed in the box after the polls were closed. This fact soon got abroad, and drew a crowd around the house. A police force was sent around, and stationed in the street near the polls.

Meantime, some gentlemen were deputed by the crowd to proceed into the house and see that the votes were honestly counted. They did so, and reported the fact that there were over fourteen hundred votes in the box. The excitement of the crowd was growing quite warm and threatening, when Capt. Tendrick, who, with the Chief of the Police, was present, seeing that the presence of the police added to the excitement, appealed to the crowd to preserve peace and order; and having, as he thought, calmed the tumult, deemed it prudent to order the police off. Shortly after this was done, there was a rush by the crowd at the doors, several pistols were fired both from within and without the house, the doors were broken open and a furious body of men rushed into the interior where the count was going on. The ballot-boxes were seized, and thrown into the street and trampled upon, and the inspectors were driven off.

Such, we believe, are at least the leading facts, as far as we could gather them from contrariant and conflicting accounts, of the deplorable incidents of Monday's election. The seizure and destruction of a ballot box is a very grave offence; one which can hardly be justified on any grounds. Every good citizen, certainly every good reformer, must unite in condemning an act of this character. The ballot box ought to be sacred from violence as well as fraud. Better be cheated in the election than set such an example of violence. But as this act may come up for future examination, we forbear further remark upon it.

We fervently trust that our city will never again be dishonored by such scenes. It behoves every good citizen to remove all causes and provocatives of such occurrences. Let citizens of all nationalities, of all classes and parties combine to put down the bullies and blackguards, whom the indifference and neglect of our people have elevated into positions of influence—to put them down, not by force and violence, but by stern contempt; by a calm, settled and emphatic determination to take into their own hands and control the administration of their own government.

General Intelligence.

STEAMER MONROE SUNK.—Seventeen Lives Lost.—From the accommodating Clerk of the steamer Duke we learn the following additional particulars of the loss of the steamer Monroe: The M. left this port for Yazoo River, heavily loaded with Dry Goods and Groceries, on the 24th inst.; on the morning of the 27th, between 2 and 3 o'clock, she struck a log at Cow-pen Point, about five miles above Natchez, and sunk in less than five minutes. There were no passengers on board; but the mate, fifteen deck hands and firemen, and a negro woman, were drowned. The boat and cargo are a total loss.

COLLISION AT SEA.—We learn from Capt. McConnell, of the brig Mary Elizabeth, arrived Monday from Havana, that on the 10th inst. the schooner M. F. Talbot, from New York, bound to Attakapas, came in contact with the bark Bertha on the Bahama Banks, by which the former was sunk. The passengers and crew of the Talbot were rescued by the Bertha and taken to Havana. Mrs. Amelia Smith, one of the number, came passenger to this city in the Mary Elizabeth.

The two boys who were with Mrs Jane Adaline Wilson, when she was captured by the Comanche Indians last summer, have been found and brought to Fort Washita, Choctaw Nation, by Aaron Brown, a Choctaw Indian, residing near that port, who, with the characteristic nobleness of heart peculiar to his tribe, bought them of the Comanches, by giving them some three hundred and fifty dollars worth of goods in exchange.

THE CAHAWBA.—This is the name of a new steamship built by Messrs. Crocheron, Livingston & Co., of New York, which was launched at that city on the 16th. Her dimensions are 215 feet keel, 37 feet beam, 25 feet 8 inches hold, and is about 2000 tons burthen. The Cahawba is intended to ply between New York and Mobile, via Havana, as mate to the Black-Warrior. She will make her first trip in about two weeks.

By the will of the late James P. Vanhoru, of York New city, he has left $15,000 to the New York Orphan Asylum, $20,000 more to the same institution after the death of his widow, $20,000 to the New York Protestant Episcopal Bible and Prayer Book Society, $15,000 to the New York Protestant Episcopal Missions, and the residue of his estate, estimated at $150,000, to the American Bible Society.

"There are at the present time," says a San Francisco paper, "nearly one hundred first-class fire-proof stores vacant without a tenant, while dwelling-houses are very scarce, and it is difficult for a family to hire a good house at over $200 per month in the suburbs of the city."

About four hundred men, women, and children have just arrived at St Louis from Denmark, on their way to the Mormon settlement in the Salt Lake country, where they intend to embrace the Mormon faith.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, March 24, 1854.

This has been an eventful day in the House. Mr. Richardson, of Ill., got the House to refer the Senate Nebraska bill to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. Cutting, of N. Y., moved its reference to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Richardson declared that this latter reference was equivalent to a defeat of the measure, and he hoped that if it was to be killed it would not be done by any such indirection, but in a fair and manly manner.

Mr. Cutting replied. He regarded that such a measure ought not to pass without the fullest discussion; while he was in favor of non-intervention by Congress, and in favor of this bill, with perhaps one amendment, he still desired such a discussion as would just fly him, and those who like him, would have to bear the brunt of the battle, to his constituents. Southern men might cars little about the matter, but to a Northern man it was politically vital. He moved the previous question, and called for the yeas and nays.

After much questioning and confusion the vote was taken and the reference to the Committee of the Whole was carried—ayes 6, 110; noes, 95. Thereupon the one hundred and six said in great glee, and the ninety odd rather chop-fallen, went to dinner.

This vote does not settle the question, (I wish it did,) but it is a decided anti-administration triumph; the peculiar friends of the bill designed to pass it after a brief discussion, and might have done so, had it not been referred to the Territorial Committee, for then Mr. Richardson could at any time have reported it back and put it upon its passage. Now the bill will undergo a rigid scrutiny, and perhaps go back to the Senate for amendment.

The Senate passed a joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to extend for four years the existing contract for carrying the mail from Montgomery to Mobile.

Mr. Irwin, of California, endeavored to get passed the joint resolution which the House passed yesterday, to dispense with the contract system for navy supplies of provisions, clothing and small stores. It was objected that the bill had neither been printed nor referred, and was too important to be acted upon thus hastily. It was ordered to be referred.

Mr. Shields, of Illinois, called up a bill to promote the efficiency of the army by allowing increased pay, etc. This bill proposes an increase to the pay of all grades in the army from the private soldier upward, and it was stated that the army was fast disbanding for want of more pay. One section of the bill proposes to increase the number of cadets at West Point by giving each Senator an appointment in addition to that now belonging to each Congressional District. It was said that if the bill retiring the superannuated from the army was passed, there would be occasion for an additional number of cadets. This point led to some discussion, but the bill was laid aside for the present, and the Senate went into executive session.

The Gadsden Treaty is now in full blast and the probabilities are for its passage, but this result is by no means certain. The Hargrave do not think their claim sufficiently protected by it. If it were put before the people they would blow it sky high.

WASHINGTON, March 22 1854.

When a good thing is going, every body ought to take a hand in it, at least so it seems to be thought with regard to the public lands. It is wonderful to think how many schemes for getting rid of the public domain are now before Congress, and the cry is, still they come. Mr. Brodhead, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition this morning from Lafayette College for a grant of a township to each chartered college in the United States.

On motion of Mr. Fish, of New York, the second Friday in April was set apart for the consideration of adverse reports.

The Joint Resolution for annulling the contract system in the Navy Department with regard to clothing, provisions and small stores, was again taken up and briefly discussed. It was contended in behalf of this measure that the Department ought to have the power of dealing directly with the manufacturers of articles it buys, and also that under the present law they cannot get the best articles, as, for instance, flour of a particular brand which is known to keep fresh for a long voyage. The bill was passed. There was no reason given why the best article could not be procured, if properly advertised for, and it is quite apparent that the patronage of the Government is materially enlarged by this backward step in legislation. Of course, if the present party go out of power, it will be thought expedient by them to return to the contract law.

The bill to increase the pay of the Army was next taken up, and considerable discussion followed on the motion to strike out the ninth section, which provides for an increased number of cadets at West Point, by giving an appointment to each Senator. Some of the Senators were, or said they were, quite indisposed to assume this patronage. Messrs. Badger, Butler and Shields, were finally persuaded that it was an excellent thing for the country to have West Point graduates scattered all over the land. While Mr. Butler was speaking, Mr. Mason, of Va., desired, him to yield the floor that he might move an Executive session. "I can't do it," was the reply, "besides I've promised Shields, and I think this bill quite as important as the Gadsden Treaty." We of the galleries were shocked at this exposure of the purpose of the secret session, of which knowledge we were thus made the unwilling recipients by the frank, out-spoken old man, but it was too late to stop our ears. After two calls of the yeas and nays, the bill was passed. If this bill becomes an act, Messrs. Benjamin and Slidell can each name a cadet for the Academy; so let all aspirants, whether anxious parents or ambitious boys, look to the Senators, in default of getting in through the members of the House. During the discussion, Mr. Pearce, of Md. expressed his disapprobation of the appointments at large, ten in number, made by the President, which were chiefly the sons of officers in the Army. Mr. Pearce thought this was keeping up an hereditary distinction.

The House has been engaged in discussing the Indian Appropriation bill.

We have had a snow storm to-day, and as I close this, there is still sleet and rain falling; as a poetical friend of mine says: Winter has come back and "crashed to earth the palpitating hopes of the relenting and the meek-eyed months."

The Gadsden Treaty hangs fire; it is very doubtful if it can get the requisite two-thirds of the Senate. CHRONICLER.

COURT GOSSIP.—The Empress of France has a rival! Louis has been smitten with the charms of an English lady named Smead. At the last ball given at the Tuileries—which, by the way, cost the city $25,000—the Emperor paid her so much attention that the Empress has forbidden her admission to the Tuileries! A letter writer in describing the conqueror (Miss Smead) says:

"She is the most thoroughly, perfectly beautiful woman I have ever seen, either in Europe or America. Her type is altogether English; she has the fair complexion, the light hair, the blue eyes, which are characteristic of the nation, and a trifle of that embonpoint which a lady may have to advantage, even at twenty-one. In form, she is faultless, and in manners, she is a model. Every one seemed to know the circumstances of the late invitation at the palace, and consequently when she walked, she was followed by a retinue; when she stopped, she was the centre of a dense group of worshippers, and when she sat, all circulation was rendered impossible, and the passages to and from her were blocked up hopelessly. She bore it with unbroken equanimity, hardly noticing that she was the object of an unusual remark; she had learned that a beautiful woman is doubly beautiful when unaffectedly simple. I have never dreamed of such a wonderful perfection; certainly no painter has ever created, from the depths of his imagination, and out of the unreal suggestions of an inspired fancy, a face so adorably lovely; there is not another like it, except, perhaps, is Circassia or at Baltimore (sigh he!) The Empress had good reason to be jealous; she herself is far less handsome."

FOREIGN EMIGRATION.—According to a Congressional report recently made, the number of passengers that arrived at the ports of the United States in 1853 was 400,777, which were divided as follows: New York, 294,818; Louisiana, 13 028; Massachusetts, 25,980; Pennsylvania, 19,211; Maryland, 11,368; other ports, 6423. Total, 400,777.

The New Jersey Legislature adjourned on the 18th inst. sine die. The liquor bill has been rejected by a vote of fourteen majority.

ARRIVAL OF STEAMSHIP AFRICA.

New York, March 28.—The Cunard steamship, Africa, Capt. Harrison, has arrived here, bringing intelligence from Liverpool and London to the 11th inst., and from the Continent to corresponding dates, three days later than the news vel by the Pacific.

The reports brought by the Africa state that Liverpool market was dull up to the time of her departure, and that prices, without any material decline, were ruling in favor of the buyer. The sales of the week ended on Saturday, the 11th inst., amounted to 40,000 bales, of which speculators had taken 3000, and exporters 4000. Fair Orleans is quoted at 6¾d per lb.; Mobile at 6¾d per lb; Middling Uplands at 5¾d., Fair Uplands is quoted. The imports of cotton since the departure of the last steamer have amounted to 50 000 bales. The stock on hand is given as 633,000 bales.

The Flour market is reported dull, and has experienced a decline of from 6d. to 1s. per barrel.

The Wheat market has also declined.

There was an active demand for Indian Corn; but, in respect of prices, the market was unchanged.

Lard is reported dull at 56s per cwt.

At Manchester trade was rather quiet. Goods and Yarns had both experienced a decline in price.

The reported capture of Kulafat is proved to have been as false as it had already been confidently believed to be.

Gen. Paskiewich has been appointed commander of the Russian army on the Danube.

The Russians are again preparing for a desperate assault on Kalafat.

Further Central America Items.

The Panama Star publishes the following intelligence from Central America, received at that port by the steamship El Pirmero on the 14th inst.:

The State generally is tranquil, although it is thought some trouble is about to arise with the Costa Rica Government, regarding the setting the line of the boundary line, the latter claiming the line San Juan and the entire coast down.

Costa Rica is at present in a more flourishing state than it has ever been, and is decidedly the most prosperous and advanced part of Central America.

A magnificent steam sawmill, imported from the United States at a cost of $40,000, is now being erected at Punta, Arenasend will soon be completed.

The crops are good and increasing every year, and the revenue of the republic is now considerably greater than the expenses, so that the Government is at present enabled to undertake several fine public works, which do much credit to the country. A very neat theatre has recently been erected at San José, and is under the management of Mr. Farmer, who is very successful in his performances. A splendid public hospital is being erected at San José, and another at Punta Arenas.

Trade throughout the country is tolerably brisk, and the country generally in a very satisfactory position.

A very serious calamity occurred at San José on the night of 25th February. The coffee-mill of Mr A Joy, brother to Mr. R. A. Joy, of this city, through some neglect, caught fire, and the entire establishment, with about 700 sacks of coffee, was totally destroyed. The loss is estimated at $30,000.

The Government of Costa Rica has ceded to Mr. Luis Bayer, the privilege of fishing for pearl shells on the Pacific coast by submarine boats, for the sum of $12,000 annually. It has also granted to the same gentlem n the privilege of extracting copas nut oil from the trees which exist on the free lands of the coast, for the sum of $3000 annually.

A very neat and well compiled periodical, entitled El Compilador, has been recently started in San José. It promises well.

The province of Chiriqui, in New Granada, continues to prosper under its Yankee Governor, and the city of David is rapidly increasing.

The pearl fishing is in active operation, although on a limited scale, among the Islands of Chiriqui.

With the exception of Guatemala and Nicaragua, the coast is reported as being very healthy.

We have no news of importance from Honduras.

WEATHER AND CROPS IN TEXAS.—The Lavaca Register, of the 10th inst., speaking of the weather, etc., in that section, says:

The weather, although for some weeks capricious and changeable, has yet generally preserved an agreeable temperature, and free from those icy chains which still bind northern countries, causes vegetation to spring forth with a luxuriance and rapidity only witnessed in Southern latitudes. Gardens now present an appearance which promises at an early day to gratify the palates of those who incline to consume the products of the earth.

The Seguin Mercury, of the 11th inst., has the following in reference to the weather, planting of crops, etc., in Guadaloupe county:

Spring has fully opened upon us. The farmers have generally planted their corn, and their cotton and other seed, will soon be in the ground. The prairies have donned their livery of green, and present an appearance pleasing to the eye.

The weather in Calhoun county is spoken of by the Indianola Bulletin as being delightful, and highly favorable to agricultural and horticultural pursuits. That paper says:

We have been enjoying delightful weather for farmers and gardeners. Trees are putting forth their welcome foliage, the grass in a few days will be excellent, and our gardens look most lovely.

PAINFUL RUMOR.—The Bonham Advertiser, published at Bonham, Fannin county, Texas, in a postscript, dated March 9, says:

"We stop the press to give the following intelligence, which was brought in last night by Geo. N. Butt, Esq., of Preston. Mr. Butt had received a letter from the Chaplain at Fort Belknap (transmitted by a confidential servant of Mr. B.) stating that the whole force of the garrison, except sixteen men, were off in pursuit of the murderers of Col. Stem; and that 400 Indian warriors were about the Fort challenging the commandant, Major Merrill, to a fight. They had dispatched a party with 1000 Government cattle, of which they had taken possession. Major Merrill was temporizing with them—giving them goods and provisions—in the hope of succor, either from the return of the scout, or from two companies of recruits hourly expected. Fort Belknap is a collection of buildings on an open plain, and sixteen men can do very little for its defence. Unless the expected succor reached them soon after the dispatch of the Chaplain's letter, Major Merrill and his little command are already massacred."

SINGULAR AFFAIR.—Charles Ahrents, belonging to one of the first families in Prussia, and who took an active part in the Berlin revolution, met his death at the Freeman's Hall, in Cincinnati, a few evenings ago, under the following circumstances: It appears that Charles Frohlick, who was formerly a military officer in Austria, was, with Ahrents and others, drinking wine at one of the refreshment tables, and was good humoredly challenged by the deceased, that he, F., was not a gallant soldier, that could smell gunpowder, and stood up to the pistol's mouth, if loaded only with blank cartridges, that that he, a Prussian, could. A wager was proclaimed that he who proved cowardly should call another bottle. The two stepped into the committee room adjoining, when Ahrents unlocked a desk, taking out two cavalry pistols, assuring F. they were merely loaded with blank cartridges, and pulling out his handkerchief had F. in mock duel to hold it out in front so that they could not see each other's eyes and cold. You fire first. F. pulled the trigger and A. fell, when F. ran into the bar-room laughing exultingly, and cried A. must pay the liquor, when all present partly emptied their glasses, waiting the return of Ahrents, who was supposed to have replaced the pistols in the desk. The melancholy spectacle which met their eyes when they found the lifeless body, turned their rollery and gayety into astonishment and sorrow. It is supposed that Ahrents purposely loaded the pistol that F might kill him, as he had previously attempted suicide.

Nothing sets so wide a mark between a vulgar and a noble soul, as the respect and reverential love of woman-kind. A man who is always sneering at woman is generally a coarse profligate or a coarser bigot.

Milton's "Paradise Lost" has been dramatized for the National Theatre, New York, and is now in rehearsal.

Curiosities of Newspaper Literature.

A curious fact will strike every editor as he looks over his exchanges. An article appears in some paper, possibly his own, that seems to touch the nerves of the press, and it travels the rounds of almost every paper in the State. He sees it first in the dailies in his neighborhood, then in those more and more distant, and at last in the weeklies, and for three or four successive weeks his eye falls upon it every day in the columns of some one or more of his long list of exchanges. Sometimes it is a leader, sometimes a paragraph, sometimes a pun or an anecdote. Just now we have an "Unparalleled Outrage by a Boy," traveling through the press all over the State, and it will go on traveling until it has visited every State and almost every county in the Union. The arrest of Madame Restell for a horrible felony, has been traveling for two or three weeks, and the disgusting and obscene evidence elicited on her examination before the courts has just started the rounds.

There is good as well as evil in this. When it happens that the thing which thus gets afloat has a moral, it may do great good, for it is read by hundreds of thousands, and will make a judgment in, and exert a salutary influence upon the hearts of a few, at least, of that vast number. But when, as in the case of the testimony against Madame Restell, it ministers to the corruption of the human heart, and the vitiation of public taste, it may be productive of a vast amount of evil.

The editor who can sell the "good things" thus afloat, may, in a sense, be regarded as a public benefactor. He supplies, first, the hundreds of editors with matter for their columns, without the necessity of their puzzling their own brains. He ministers to the moral or intellectual culture of hundreds of thousands of readers, by sowing broad-cast all over the land, a sentiment of morality, a principle of philosophy or a fragment, at least, of a whole system of policy. But he who starts one of the "bad things" on its travels, incurs serious responsibility, and is deserving of the severest censure. It is difficult to measure the amount of evil he may occasion, or the aggravated harvest of the seeds of corruption he may scatter.

Another fact cannot fail to strike every intelligent editor. He writes a good article, of which he feels proud, one that he thinks will, and intends shall attract public attention. He will find one contemporary stealing it outright and adopting it boldly as his own. Another will steal half of it, and mix it up with some original ideas, marking, possibly with inverted commas so much as he plunders, without reference to the authorship. Another will transfer it to his columns, unheeded perhaps, but without credit so that he can adopt it as his own, or as clipping, according to circumstances. Another still appropriating the ideas, clothes them to some extent in different language, and then claiming them as original, flourishes largely on his exhibition of profound reflection and extraordinary wisdom.

These are some of the "curiosities of literature" as exhibited by the newspaper press of the day. [Albany Register.

MEASUREMENT OF THE LAKES.—From an article recently published in the Detroit papers in regard to the navigation of the Northern Lakes, we take the following figures:

The greatest length of Lake Superior is 335 miles, its greatest breadth is 160 miles, mean depth 988 feet, elevation 627 feet, area 32,000 square miles.

The greatest length of Lake Michigan is 360 miles, its greatest breadth 108 miles, mean depth 900 feet, elevation 587 feet, area 23,000 square miles.

The greatest length of Lake Huron is 200 miles, its greatest breadth is 160 miles, mean depth 900 feet, elevation 574 feet, area 20,000 square miles.

The greatest length of Lake Erie is 250 miles, its greatest breadth is 80 miles, its mean depth is 84 feet, elevation 555 feet, area 6000 square miles.

The greatest length of Lake Ontario is 180 miles, greatest breadth 65 miles, its mean depth is 500 feet, elevation 262 feet, area 6000 square miles.

The total length of all five is 1585 miles, covering an area altogether of upwards of 90,000 square miles.

EXTRAORDINARY DIVORCE CASE.—In the New York Supreme Court, on Saturday, the 18th inst., application was made by Jeremiah W. Dimmick, for annulment of his marriage to his wife Frances N. Dimmick, under somewhat extraordinary circumstances. "Plaintiff and defendant" the Court said, "had been married more than twelve years. It is now alleged that the marriage was void by reason of pre-contract. The defendant, it is admitted, was married when a school girl to a young man, who soon afterwards went off to the West, and was not heard of, except it was said he was dead, for many years. She accordingly, in good faith, married her present husband, supposing herself at liberty to do so. It now turns out that the first husband has been living till about five years ago, when he died, and of course left her in a condition to legalize the second marriage. No further ceremony, however, took place, but the plaintiff and defendant for said five years continued to live together as man and wife. The plaintiff says he did so in ignorance of the actual state of the case, and there is every reason to believe the truth of this averment. Of course no marriage by implication could be inferred and the original marriage between the parties was clearly void, the prior husband being then still alive and undivorced. There is nothing to deprive the plaintiff of the right which the law gives him to have it so declared. Sentence nullifying the marriage of plaintiff and defendant must therefore be entered.

A REMARKABLE BOY.—As the train was about to leave for Lockport this morning, a boy was discovered under the platform of one of the cars hanging to the brake-rod. He was taken out, and gave the following account of himself and his adventures: His name is John King—his age fourteen years; he is a native of Galway, Ireland. He concealed himself on board a ship in that port, and secured a passage to New York without means. At New York he secreted himself under the platform of a car on the Hudson River Railroad, and came to Albany. At Albany he met a gentleman who took so much interest in his case as to pay his fare to Syracuse. At the latter place he again concealed himself under a car, and came to this city. He says he is going to the Suspension Bridge, and that he has an uncle at work at the "Devil's Hole," near that place. He was taken to Col. Thompson, overseer of the county poor, who gave him the means of traveling safely to Niagara Falls. Depend upon it that boy will make his way through the world on his own hook. [Rochester Union.

A COOL SWINDLER.—The Baltimore Sun says: "A day or two since a youth rushed into the establishment of a gentleman, near the head of Centre market, and stated that a boy, son of one of those employed in the establishment, had fallen down the steps at home and killed himself. Of course the supposed bereaved father hurried off to pay attention to his departed son. In a few minutes after his departure, another boy came in and said that Mr. —— wanted five dollars for immediate use. The unsuspecting proprietor immediately gave the money, and the last visitor had scarcely left the establishment when the employee returned and remarked that it was all a hoax—nothing had transpired at his house. An explanation ensued, and it turned out that no money had been sent for, and the whole affair was a dead sell."

The committee of investigation relative to the Crystal Palace, have reported that the Association owes about $170,000, and that the loss by the exhibition, this year, is over $119,000

THE TIMES.

Who that has loved the [illegible] are cry to end [illegible]
Which flowers revive [illegible] [illegible]
Whose plumb hath poured that [illegible] on the vale,
Where the fresh violets dwell?

In whose they shrink [illegible] the balmy blades,
Under the leaden, melancholy [illegible] the rushes,
Nor yet the [illegible] sings nor [illegible] the rushes,
The wild thyme [illegible] the bee!

Yet at their light, moist-enhanced and thinking,
All June comes golden in the April skies;
How [illegible] the days we yearn for, till fulfilled!
O, distant Paradise—

Dear land to which desire ever flies,
Time doth no present to the grasp allow;
Thou art the Fixed Eternal, shall we prize
All but the fleeting Now!

Days, out of days to come, of that unknown
Whether hope wanders (mute without a clue);
Give their true whereby to the flowers—their own
Fresh to their youth renew.

Fortune, remember when the Ownership's gold
Rusted, and yet but in gilding in the year!
Doth thy hoard's good [illegible] than those of old?
There's blessed in thy [illegible]

From [illegible] thy clasp [illegible]
That thou ever [illegible] [illegible]
Alas, poor fool—joy is [illegible]
And save their poverty!

Come, fabled Ambition, what further desired?
Empire and power? O, conqueror, tempest-fost!
Those crowns were thine when Rome's gay Spring it spired
Thy youth with glory, lost!

But the flowers [illegible] thee to the [illegible] prime,
Where o'er the [illegible] hope fancy traced the chart;
There budget an [illegible] power in that [illegible] time,
Thy value a human heart!

Hark! hark! again the tread of hastful feet!
Hark! the bugle rustling round the trysting place!
Rest ere again with one dear breath be sweet,
Earth fair with one dear face.

[illegible] first flowers, first love. The hours steal on Through the world in summer's pomp of hue!
[illegible] sweet beneath a flower-gun
[illegible] what we lose in you!

[illegible], by a flower, a leaf, in some loved book,
We mark the lines that charm us most. Retrace
The [illegible] in [illegible] passage!—look,
Dead violets keep the place!

New Orleans in 1806.

We have rarely encountered a more interesting and graphic article than one in the last number of Blackwood's Magazine, reviewing a book, entitled "Fifty Years in Both Hemispheres, or Reminiscences of a Merchant's Life."

The work is from the pen of a German named Vizetelly, who, now nearly eighty years of age, has spent his life in a series of the most exciting scenes which could possibly occur to a person who pretended to follow the usually quiet walks of commercial life. The events of which he speaks extend over a period of more than fifty years, embracing many of the most important occurrences in Europe and America from 1796 to 1850.

Mr. Vizetelly came to this country as the agent of one of the largest mercantile establishments in Europe, and his duties compelled him to take up his quarters at New Orleans, then in its infancy as a commercial city, and in the worst possible repute, having recently, with Louisiana, been sold to the United States. It had a population of about 16,000, three-fifths of whom were French by birth or extraction. The character its citizens then enjoyed in the Northern States may be judged of by an anecdote told by Mr. Nolte to the following effect: A friend of his, who had just formed an establishment at New Orleans, finding himself at Bergen, and seeing a vessel advertised to sail thence for the former city, called upon the owner and asked him to consign the ship to his house. Whereupon the owner told him in strict confidence that he had just as much intention of sending his ship to the moon as to New Orleans, and that he had inserted the advertisement merely in the expectation that amongst the persons applying for a passage he should find a rascal who had defrauded one of his friends of a considerable sum. "It is probable," he added, "that he will try to get to New Orleans, that being the natural rendezvous of all rogues and scoundrels."

According to Mr. Nolte, not one of the eighteen or twenty commercial houses existing at New Orleans, when he first went there, possessed capital worth the naming, and a respectable character was nearly as great a rarity as ready cash. Roguery, disguised under the polite name of "cleverness," was commonly practised, and indignantly viewed. Juries and authorities were corrupt, false witnesses easily purchased, and justice was hard to obtain. In illustration of this state of things, Mr. Nolte tells the curious stories, one in particular, in which the celebrated American jurist, Edward Livingston, figures. "I well remember," he says, "the [illegible] trial of a certain Belcurgey, the [illegible] of the first American newspapers which [illegible] in New Orleans, in 1806 and 1807, in French and English, under the name of Le Telegraphe. To obtain money he had forged the signature of a rich planter, to whom, when his crime was discovered, he wrote, confessing his guilt, and earnestly entreating him not to prosecute him. The planter seemed disposed to accede to his prayer, but the letter was already in the hands of justice. How then did Livingston contrive, as Belcurgey's counsel and defender, to obtain his acquittal in spite of this damning [illegible] his guilt? Davezac (Livingston's [illegible] law and factotum) brought forward [illegible] who swore that they knew Belcurgey to be such a liar that no word of truth had ever issued from his lips. Swallow, then said Livingston to his French jury, "it is proved that the man is incapable of telling the truth; the very confession is a lie, for none but a madman would accuse himself. So that Belcurgey either has lied or is out of his senses; in either case he knew not what he did, and cannot be found guilty? And the jury acquitted him!"

New Orleans was evidently not a tempting place to settle in, for an honest man, with money to be robbed of; but then, with cunning and judgment, there was money to be made, and moreover, Mr. Nolte, as a mere agent for others, had no choice, but to abide there. Presently the arrival in quick succession of three fast sailing vessels from Vera Cruz, bringing half a million of Mexican dollars to the address of Messrs. Nolte, drew attention to the young man who, previously few had heeded—save the French planters, to whom his knowledge of their language was a recommendation. But now, he was pointed out as one known him, no party was complete without him, and for three months he passed a pleasant enough life, when suddenly the yellow fever laid him on his back. Upon the morning of the third day, there appeared at his bedside one Zachary, the cashier of the Louisiana bank, and one of the very limited number of honorable men in the city, and gravely asked him if he had made his will. To this sinister inquiry Mr. Nolte replied by a negative and interrogative. "No! Why?" "Well," continued Zachary, "I suppose I need not tell you that you have got the yellow fever, which is more than possible you will die before to-morrow, for the fourth is the critical day, which one does not often get over. You have large sums lying at the bank—larger sums than have ever before been seen here—and, if you die, the capital will fall into very unsafe hands. The persons appointed by the State to take charge of the property of foreigners dying intestate are not only undeserving of confidence, but, to speak plainly, are downright rascals." The sick man's reply was that he [illegible] inclined nor intended to die. "And you are not to die," he continued, "I see no use in bothering my head about my will." Zachary looked hard at him. "Well, my dear Mr. Nolte," he at last said, "since that is your mood, I, too, am certain you will not die"—a prognostic justified by the patient's speedy recovery. In his case, as in other maladies, a faint hope may [illegible] many.

The Battle of New Orleans.

We have received, extracts from the narrative of a German merchant, Mr. Nolte, entitled "Fifty Years in Both Hemispheres." We have noticed, a review in Blackwood's Magazine the following interesting personal account of the battle of New Orleans:

An attack was expected from the English, and General Jackson made his appearance at New Orleans with fifteen hundred men, the most efficient among whom were five hundred riflemen who had served with Jackson in the Indian war, and were known as Coffee's brigade, from their commander's name. These were the fellows who picked off the British officers from behind the cotton bale barricades, of which the materials were taken from Mr. Nolte's stores. Trained in repeated encounters with the savages, they were masters of [illegible] so vividly [illegible] of military organization [illegible] insensible to fear, [illegible] of great presence of [illegible] resource, and, above all, [illegible] Mr. Nolte, although highly military law he still quite unnecessarily maintained—a stretch of authority for which it will be remembered that he was afterwards fined by the civil authorities. In reply to Mr. Nolte's representation and remonstrance—

"Aren't you very lucky," he asked, "to have saved the rest of your cotton through my defence of the city?"

"Certainly, General," answered I, "as lucky as every other man in the place, but with this difference, that it costs them nothing, and that I have to bear all the loss."

"Loss?" cried the General, getting rather angry, "loss? You have saved everything!"

I saw it was no use arguing with such an obstinate man, and remarked to him that I only wanted compensation for my cotton, nothing more, and that the best compensation would be to give me back the same quantity and quality that had been taken from me; that I would appoint one merchant, he another; they would agree as to quality, buy the cotton, deliver it to me, and he should pay for it.

"No, no, sir!" replied Jackson, "I like straightforward business, and that is too complicated. You must take six cents for your cotton. I have nothing more to say."

I wanted to make the whole thing clear to him, but he cut me short: "Come, sir, come! Take a glass of whisky-and-water; you must be damned dry after all your arguing."

All I could do was to say, "Well, General, I did not expect such injustice at your hands! Good morning, sir!" And I went away. Three days afterwards news came of the conclusion of peace, and the consequence was an immediate rise of cotton to sixteen cents, at which price I bought several parcels. The Committee of Claims were embarrassed; they felt that it was now impossible to fob me off with six cents. At last I was asked if I would now be content with payment of my invoice; and I agreed to be so, since I must else have complained to Congress, and the affair might have dragged on for years.

Some pages are devoted by Mr. Nolte to an appreciation of Old Hickory's character. He condemns his arbitrary and overbearing disposition, and his cruelty to the unfortunate Indians, whom he so implacably and perseveringly hunted down, and does justice to his shrewdness and other good qualities, considering, however, that good luck had more to do than commanding talent with the distinction and popularity he attained to in the States—an opinion which we suspect to be now entertained by a very large number of Jackson's countrymen. Of the General's tone and manners—rough as those of a far-west woodman—Mr. Nolte gives some humorous examples. After this action in front of New Orleans, demonstrations innumerable were made in the hero's honor. On his return into the city, Mrs. Livingston placed a crown of laurel upon his head, which seemed considerably to embarrass the slayer of Sominoles, who took it off as if it burned his brow; the ladies subscribed for a costly set of jewels for Mrs. General Jackson; and the principal inhabitants got up a grand ball in the French Exchange. Mr. Nolte, who had seen more public festivities than most of the people of New Orleans, was a prominent and active member of the committee.

"The upper part of the Exchange was arranged for dancing, the lower part for supper, with flowers, colored lamps, and transparencies. Before supper, Jackson desired to go alone and take a view of the arrangements, and I had to show him the way. On one of the transparencies, between the arcades, were to be read the words: 'Jackson and victory, they are but one.' The General turned round to me, in a more cordial manner than I might have expected, and asked, 'Why did you not say Hickory and victory, they are but one?' After supper, the hero of the day gave us the diverting spectacle of a pas de deux between him and his wife—an Irish emigrant of low origin and considerable corpulence, whom he had taken away from a planter in Georgia. To see these two, the General a long, lean man with skeleton-like limbs, and his wife, a short, thick specimen of the female figure, dancing opposite to each other like half drunken Indians, to the wild tune of 'Opossum up a gum tree,' was truly one of those remarkable spectacles which would be sought in vain in any European ballet."

What They Ate.

Doctor Rondelet, an ancient writer on fishes, was so fond of figs, that he died, in 1566, of a surfeit, occasioned by eating them to excess. In a letter to a friend, Dr. Parr confesses his love of "hot boiled lobsters, with a profusion of shrimp sauce." Pope, who was an epicure, would lie in bed for days at Lord Bolingbroke's, unless he was told there were stewed lamprays for dinner, when he arose instantly, and came down to table. A gentleman trented Dr. Johnson to new honey and clouted cream, of which he ate so largely, that his entertainer became alarmed. All his lifetime Dr. Johnson had a voracious attachment for a leg of mutton. "At my aunt Ford's," says he, "I ate enough of a boiled leg of mutton, that she used to talk of it. My mother, who was affected by little things, told me seriously that it would hardly ever be forgotten." Dryden, writing in 1699 to a lady, declining her invitation to a handsome supper, says: "If beggars might be choosers, a chine of honest bacon would please my appetite more than all the marrow puddings, for I like them better plain, having a very vulgar stomach." Dr. George Fordyce contended that as one meal a day was enough for a man, it ought to suffice for a man. Accordingly, for more than twenty years, the doctor used to eat only a dinner in the whole course of the day. This solitary meal he took regularly at four o'clock, at Dolly's Chop House. A pound and a half of rump steak, half a broiled chicken, a plate of fish, a bottle of port, a quarter of a pint of brandy, and a tankard of strong ale, satisfied the doctor's moderate wants till four o'clock the next day, and regularly engaged one hour and a half of his time. Dinner over, he returned to his home in Essex street, Strand, to deliver his six o'clock lecture on anatomy and chemistry. Baron Masores, who lived nearly to the age of ninety, used to go home one day in every week without any dinner, eating only a round of dry toast at tea. Aristotle, like a true poet, seems to have literally feasted on fancy. Few could live more frugally: in one of his poems he says of himself, "that he was a fit person to have lived in the world when acorns were the food of men." When Bolingbroke invited Swift to dine with him, he talked of the dishes he would offer. "A fig for your bill of fare," said Swift, "show me your bill of company." Milton was fond of a glass of water and a pipe. A modern poet, who was asked by a lady of fashion what he would like for dinner, answered, "Peppermint cordial and black pudding!"

DISPARITY OF AGE IN MARRIAGE.—Mahomet's first wife, Kailyah, was at least 40, when he at the age of 25 married her. Shakspeare's Ann Hathaway was seven years his senior. Dr. Johnson's was literally double his age. The wife of Lord Herbert Cherbury six or seven years older than her lord. Sir Thomas Moore's wife was also seven years older than her husband. Howard, the philanthropist, at the age of 25 married a first wife, who was then 52. Mrs. Rowe, the authoress, was 15 years older than Mr. Rowe. Rapel, the German DeStael, was about as much older. The Countess D'Ossill (Miss Fuller) was nearly ten years her husband's senior. Jenny Lind, too, is said to be eight or ten years older than Herr Goldsmidt.

A Poor Delicate Creature.

Suppose we go to Lady Gunter's ball. Do you see that beautiful girl spinning round in the waltz with that Austrian attaché—the crystalized foreigner, now opposite to you, who is such a revolving pillar of diamonds! Yes, see the lovely blonde—if you mean her—with the hare arms and oaked shoulders; a costume which, by courtesy, is called full dress. What a rate she is going at! Precisely, the Times's steam engine is for quickness, a slow coach compared to her! She makes more evolutions in one minute than the French have made in all their lives; and, if you notice, she shows no symptoms of fatigue. She will keep up that same speed for hours, and the moment she ceases she is ready to begin again. She is indefatigable; no wheel in a cotton factory could spin round quicker, or work for so many hours with less apparent fatigue; but she is going out on the balcony; why, she will catch her death of cold! No; she is accustomed to it. A sailor walking his deck, wouldn't trouble himself less about colds than she does. All atmospheres are the same to her!

She is no fragile hot-house plant, but a hardy annual that will bloom anywhere—up the chimney, if you please, or down in the cellar, or by the side of the kitchen fire, or at the bottom of the well—the small question of temperature doesn't make much difference to a constitution so well seasoned as hers. But does she take no nourishment; to keep up this extraordinary fatigue? Yes; ices—plenty of ices and biscuits—varied occasionally with a jelly, and, perhaps, late in the evening, the tiniest wing of chicken with a little lobster sauce, or a plover's egg, or a bit of blanc-mange. the whole of it is washed down with not more than half a glass of champagne. But I have seen her eat a very good supper—a supper worthy of a guardsman in love—but it has been very late when there were very few persons in the room, and she had had a pleasant companion, who made her laugh and kept continually filling her glass.

And after that? Why, after that she goes up stairs again, and dances more incessantly than ever. She is insatiable for dancing. To look at her you would think a Tarantula had bitten her, and that she couldn't keep still for the fraction of a minute. The wonder is how one pair of satin shoes lasts her through the same evening. You would imagine with her rapidity—and it is as much as your eyes can do to follow her—that she would wear out half a dozen pairs at least. And how long does she keep it up? Why as long as she can—till four or five in the morning—till wax candles begin to droop—till the musicians have nearly played themselves fast asleep—until she hasn't a partner left to dance with, and then, loth to leave, she goes unwillingly home to begin the same dance the following evening. How often does this occur? Four, or five, and sometimes six times a week; and frequently there are two or three balls on the same evening, and she has been to a concert, or matinée, or a pic-nic, perhaps, in the day-time. What, only think of the exercise.

Well, that is something, to be sure—and if the calculation could be made, it is probable it would be ascertained, by the most generous cabman's measure, that that young lady does not dance less than twenty miles in the course of an evening—and that is only allowing at the rate of four miles an hour, which you will acknowledge is absurdly moderate for human waltzing. Multiply this by 6, and you will have the sum total of 120 miles dancing by a young lady in the period of one week! And this, recollect, is independent of fetes, fancy fairs, flower shows, and other amusements that demand some degree of exercise during the day. And now, do you know who this young lady is who dances her 120 miles a week? Who is it who goes through an amount of labor only to be equaled by the poor fellows who walk their thousand miles in their thousand hours? You will never guess—and so I do not mind telling you.

She is the same young lady whom we saw stretched out at full length on the sofa, who looked so weak that she would have fainted if any one had asked her to walk across the street; who was so nervous that she could not bear the slightest noise, or sudnre the smallest key hole of fresh air; who was so woo-begone that she could not talk, laugh or open her eyes, nor touch a single thing; so helpless that she could not have moved off her couch by herself, not even if the house had been in flames; who looked in fact, such a lack-a-daisical bundle of shawls and prostration, that you must have doubted in your own mind whether she could ever stand upright again on her two legs. Yes, sir, that young lady, whose prowess you have been wondering at this evening is that same poor delicate creature; and allow me to say, sir, (concluded the doctor, as he gave me a cigar to walk home with,) that in the way of fatigue there is very few men—I was nearly saying prize-fighters—who can stand half so much as your Poor Delicate Creature. [Punch.

UNSUCCESSFUL MEN.—I confess that increasing years bring with them an increasing respect for men who do not succeed in life, as those words are commonly used. Heaven has been said to be a place for those who have not succeeded upon earth; and it is surely true that celestial grace do not best thrive and bloom in the hot blaze of worldly prosperity. Ill success somotimes arises from a superabundance of qualities in themselves good—from a conscience too sensitive, a taste too fastidious, a self-forgetfulness too romantic, a modesty too retiring. I will not go so far as to say, with a living poet, that "the world knows nothing of its greatest men," but there are forms of greatness, or at least of excellence, which "die and make no sign," there are martyre that mise the palm, but not the stake; heroes without the laurel, and conquerors without the triumph.

LONDON GRAVE YARDS.—Among the regulations introduced by Lord Palmerston with regard to burial grounds in the city of London is the following: It is provided that no interment shall take place within ten yards of any part of the boundary of the cemetery, and that the intervening space shall be planted with shrubs, evergreens and trees, in such a manner as shall promote the absorption of any deleterious emanations, and at the same time permit the circulation of the air. Also that the cemetery shall be under-drained, so as to prevent the accumulation of water in the graves and vaults, and that no graves (except those which have been purchased) shall be re-opened, until after the lapse of twenty-four years and fifteen years, according to the age of the parties interred.

CROUP, ASTHMA AND

CONSUMPTION.

Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notoriety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the Cherry Pectoral does not only as a general thing, but almost invariably cure the maladies for which it is employed.

As time makes these facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually become the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log-cabin of the American peasant to the palaces of European kings. Throughout this entire country, Cherry Pectoral is known as the best remedy extant for diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, Cherry Pectoral is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms-houses, Public Institutions and in domestic practice, as the surest remedy their attending physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases and for children it is safe, pleasant and effectual to cure. In fact, some of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from parents who have found it efficacious in cases particularly incidental to childhood.

The Cherry Pectoral is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it under his own eye, with invariable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.

We have endeavored here to furnish the community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should commend itself to their confidence—a remedy at once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and countless trials proved itself to be; and trust by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of uniform strength to afford physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy that will do for them all that medicine can do. OCEAN SPRINGS.

The undersigned, having been appointed as agent for the sale of lots at Ocean Springs, has, under the authority of the proprietors of the place, had the whole property resurveyed and a map made upon a large scale; also, lithographic plans in pamphlet form, for distribution to persons wishing to purchase. The two will enable any one to see the location and qualities of any particular lot, or they will be shown them on the spot, either by one of the owners, or the subscriber.

The advantages of this watering place cannot be known, or fully appreciated, except by a visit to the place, and this is respectfully solicited from all those having any idea of locating on the Lake shore. The land on the Bay consists of the finest bluffs, with large live oak trees, between here and Mobile; some twenty or twenty-five feet above the level of the lake, with ravines between each bluff, and which serve as a drain to them and to all the land in the rear back to old Fort Bayou, upon which the two springs are situated, say about three-quarters of a mile from the Bay. The whole of the land between the Bay and the Bayou is better drained than any other place upon the Lake. The soil is good, and produces (with little aid, and which is at hand in the bottoms,) excellent corn and vegetables. The absence of sand, so common at the watering places, affords a fine opportunity for good drives.

The Bay affords the best opportunity for sailing with safety, of any place upon the coast. Abundance of fish and oysters can be obtained at all times, and in the winter, ducks in any quantity. The bathing is also very superior.

The superior virtues of the two springs (sulphur and chalybeate) have not only been proven by the analysis of some of our first chemists, but their medicinal qualities have been fully demonstrated in the cure of several well-known citizens of this and other States.

A hotel of the first class will be kept open summer and winter, and in addition to which an infirmary will be established from the first of May next, near the springs, under the management of two of the most respectable physicians of this city.

Persons wishing to purchase any of this property are invited to call on the undersigned and inspect the large plan and lithographs, and for full particulars.

CITY OF HOUSTON, May 14, 1852.

DEAR SIR: Having learned that you were about to submit your "Tonic Bitters" to the ordeal of experiment and public opinion, I take pleasure in rendering you a statement of my opinion. Last May, I think, it was, I first learned that such a medicine was in existence. I procured some and commenced its use. I found it of immediate and great advantage to me. My health had not been good since 1834. By the occasional use of your Bitters within the last year (in all not amounting to one bottle) I am satisfied that my general health has not been as good as it is at present within the last seven years.

The use of the Bitters, in proportion to the constitution and the malignity of the disease, will, in my opinion, be attended with the most beneficial effects. I have, in several cases, witnessed the use of a portion of what I had on hand, by others, in cases of head-ache and deranged digestion, and in no case have I known it to fail in giving almost immediate relief. My opinion is so favorable of the medicine that I will keep a supply

GRACE ABOUNDING.

Translated for the Episcopal Recorder from the German of Luther.

"Where sin bounded, grace did much more nbound." Rom. v. 20.

Almighty God! I call to Thee
By shame and anguish shnken;
Incline Thy gracious ear to me,
And leave me not forsaken;
For who that feels the power within
Of past remorse und present sin
Can stand, O Lord, before Thee!

On Thee alone my stay I place,
All human help rejecting,
Relying on Thy sovereign grace,
Thy sovereign nid expecting;
I'rest upon Thy sacred word
That Thou'lt repulse him not, O Lord,
Who to Thy mercy fleeth.

And though I travail all the night
And travail all the morrow,
My trust is in Jehovnh's might,
My triumph in my sorrow;
Forgetting not that Thou of old
Did Israel though weak, uphold,
When weakest, Thou most loving!

For though my sinfulness is great,
Redeeming grace is greater,
And though all hell should lie in wait,
Supreme is my Creator;
For He my King and Shepherd is,
And when most helpless, most I'm His
My strength and my Redeemer!

OLINESS MUST BE OFFERED TO SINNERS.

Mr. Editor: It is wholly without hesitan that I offer the concluding remark in my t article, and I agnin insist upon it, that Church will come up to the requisitions ds upon it by the pulpit! And if we have a holy Church, it is because the preachde not insist upon the attainment of holis. We have not placed our standard high ough, and consequently neither the ministry the Church can be expected to meet the mands of a Gospel requiring perfect obeice in purity and holiness. We shall or be holy, as individuals, unless we intend be, unless we try to be so, and we shall er be a holy people unless those who nd for God require men to be holy, und urch members endeavor to be so.

Now, brethren, what do sinners expect m us, as ambassadors for God? We tell m that they are enemies of God, but that mediator is provided, and they can he onciled,—but shall we say that it is to he y an armistice—not n peace—a temporary ntion of hostilities, and not a definite aty; or on the other hand, shall we tell m that they may rebel ever so often hereer, and they shall only he treated as the vileged elect? Neither the one nor the er. Laying down the weapons of rebelis one thing—taking the onth of allegice another; and standing the temptation further sedition still another. Argument y do the first—faith in the governor may the second—but nothing but a thorough nge in purpose and desire can accomplish least.

Now, this latter point should he the conciing and ruling principle offered as a curity at the first, and we should never tell ners to seek God, unless we tell them that ey may and ought to cease to he sinners. they cannot attain to this point, language s been used in Holy Writ which means thing, and they can attain unto it, this uld be the great purpose presented to the rk. The sick man's confidence is not ured in premise only to case his sufferss—it wants a cure. The blind man ld not be very much rejoiced nt an offer ive a partial use of his eyes to him—he ld not expect much from beholding surnding objects in a mist—he would see rly. Nor can we expect men to embrace Gospel when we explain the pardon for past, if we do not lead them to expect rity for the future—not in God's capacity goodness, but in their own inaptitude to r the same displeasure again.

we offer the terms of reconciliation to rs, without at the same time encouraghem to expect the sanctifying and purig power of the Spirit, we fail to give n the strongest reason and most potent ve for coming to Christ.

ow often are the backslidings and wanngs of the professors of religion made the ses to keep men from Christ! And why Not so much because men love to shrink duty under cover of others' misdeeds, rom an inward dread that they will he taken by like errors, and bring the cause ch they have espoused to shame and degtion. How else can we account for the position of many persons (who are in all outward forms of godliness without ne) to make a profession of religion in proper sense? Why do we find so many ons casting their souls' eternal interests n the unknown future, with a sort of dependence upon the last moments of eance? Why does not the world embrace Gospel? I know that the wickedness of heart will be alleged as the great cause, verily, it seems to me that the inadequacy he Gospel means, as by some set forth, is principal agency that retards the world's ersion. And I say not this without ent investigation and reflection—nor to demn any servant of the Lord, but surely ed a ministry whose united heart is exenced in the deep things of God, and able how the fullness of the Savior's love to world. We cannot expect men to be mored of the Gospel which promises to on and to heal their diseases, unless there the same time an efficiency which can the soul cured.

ow, I maintain that the success of Methodism, as a distinct institution of God, and, indeed, of vital religion, depends upon the realization of the blessed truth that "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin," and this is "his will, even our sanctification." As Methodists, we owe our very existence to the preaching of this truth by Wesley and his coadjutors; and shall we abandon, or prize less highly now, these precious promises of God? I appeal to the memories of those aged pillars in the Church of Christ, whose heads are frosted by many winters—who have crossed the booming rivers, and traversed the unbroken forests of this western wild, when here and there a solitary settler alone was found to whom they could declare the unsearchable riches of Christ—if they did not win their trophies and gain their victories first, by experiencing, and then by preaching that men ought not to live in sin, but that God is able to give them clean hearts and to keep them clean!

We may talk of progress, brethren, and of our advancement in knowledge, but I am fearful that we are improving in everything but the knowledge of God. And if this be true, if we preach less about holiness than our fathers did, let us not imagine that we shall retain the favor of God, and preserve our existence to the blessing of mankind. But let us lift up the Cross of Christ to the world, as the great and only medium of salvation and holiness; and when we teach men to be holy, we should let our example out of the pulpit endorse what we say in it.

Ala. Conf., 1854. OMICRON.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"RULE OF OUR GOVERNMENT AGAIN"—EPISCOPACY.

Mr. Editor: In the Advocate of 25th ult. I find Brother Garrett down upon me again. He thinks me "a man of words," and seems to think that I have "darkened council" by a "confusion of words and ideas." Perhaps so. He, I learn by his last article, is an old man, and has had an opportunity of learning much; and I venerate his age, and love him because he is a brother. But as he is a father in the Church, I hope he will bear with my ignorance and voluhility of words until I get him to understand me

In my last, I thought I was plain, but it seems I was not, and so I must try again.

The only difference, he says, between us, is, that I am for Episcopal districts, and here he demurs. And he understands me as referring to this distinction of the work when I speak of the doing of the Episcopal work, as I suppose our fathers intended it should be done. Here he mistakes me. If he will have the goodness to look at my last article again, he will find that I ask no alteration of the present plan, only to give us a sufficient number of Bishops to meet the wants of the Church, and that they be so distributed (or the work divided out among them) that the Episcopal work can be done as our fathers intended it should be done. That is, that the Bishop travel through the connection at large etc., as the Discipline now requires. He says he does not know that such a thing is in existence as "Episcopal districts," and that this is "a new idea." Well, let us see. In the days of Asbury, the territory occupied by the Church was so small that one Bishop could annually travel through the connection at large, and oversee the spiritual and temporal interests of the Church, besides presiding in the Annual Conferences.

Now, thanks be to God, it is widely different! And God grant it may be every year more so. To pass over all the intermediate history of the Church, let us take up the last General Conference. That Conference closed with four effective Bishops: the territory of the Church, east of the Rocky Mountains, was divided among these four Bishops, in order that they might successively travel through the whole Church, except California, in the next four years. That the work was so divided among the Bishops, brother Garrett will not deny; it is so published in their plan of Episcopal visitations. These divisions of the work I call districts. And with all due deference to brother Garrett's age and superior wisdom, I would most respectfully ask what are they but districts? They are not districts for Presiding Elders, but for Bishops, and, therefore, I call them "Episcopal districts." I hope this new application of the term districts will not alarm Brother Garrett any more. The thing is not new, if the application of the term is.

Now, what I complain of, in the present arrangement of Episcopal work, is, that the district (Brother Garrett will pardon me) west of the Mississippi is entirely too large to allow the Bishop who travels it to do the work "our fathers intended a Bishop should do."

This district takes in the whole country west of the Mississippi (excepting Louisiana and California), from Iowa on the North to Mexico on the South. This vast territory is divided into the St. Louis, Missouri, Arkansas, Indian Mission, East Texas, and Texas Conferences. Several of these will soon be subdivided. Arkansas is, I understand, now demanding it, and Texas has the matter in contemplation.

That this work, as it is, is too heavy for any one man, we have the testimony of both Bishops Paine and Andrew.

No Bishop resides in all this vast territory. In consequence, we have often been compelled to get along without one, which, in my humble opinion, has been seriously detrimental to the interest of the Church in this country. If a Bishop is needed in any part of the work, he is needed here in these young Conferences which are mainly composed of young and inexperienced men. A Bishop is needed not only to preside at the Conferences, appoint the preachers to their work, and ordain men to the ministry; but it seems to me that he could greatly subserve the cause of God by traveling through the Conferences, visiting at least the most important ones, and making himself personally acquainted with both preachers and people. To do such a work, as I think our fathers intended it should be done, the State of Texas alone will furnish ample work for one man. This is the opinion of Bishop Andrew, as expressed to the writer and others, in his late visit among us. And we all know that the Bishop is a working man.

Our brethren of the East are not aware of the vastness of our territory in the West, and how rapidly it is filling up. And with this rapid increase of population, and extension of territory, there is a corresponding demand for ministerial labor. Nor can we wish it to be otherwise. Soon there will be a San Antonio Conference; and then a Rio Grande Conference; and then an El Paso Conference; and so on till we spread over Mexico and Central America, and to the ends of the world. In four years more, if our expectations are realized, we shall have a Conference in China; and then another and another. For Methodism is God's instrument for converting the world. My heart fills up with joy while I contemplate the future spreading of our Zion. Glory be to God! I believe that some of us may live to see the day when we shall number a hundred Methodist Annual Conferences. As our work increases, we must multiply our Bishops.

Now, with regard to the General Itinerant Superintendency. We know that no man can now annually make the tour of the Conferences. Nor can he do it in four years and do justice to the work! Nor will he be able hereafter to do it in six! And it may be safely doubted whether it can be done, as the interests of the Church require, in less than eight years! It is my honest opinion that eight effective Bishops could be profitably employed for the next four years. Let these divide out the work among them into suitable districts, in their plan of Episcopal visitations, so that they will not be too much hurried in their work, especially in the West.

As I have had my station in the West for more than thirteen years, I feel for the West, and beg the indulgence of my brethren while I plead her cause.

The candid eye will find nothing in all this humble request that will infringe in the least upon our "Rule of Government." As it is, I trust I love Old Methodism, and all her old landmarks, as heartily as Brother Garrett, or any one else. And let me assure him, he need have no fears of me, in that direction. I ask no innovation upon the present order of things. Only let us keep pace with the times: following up the work of God with a sufficient number of men in all the offices of the ministry.

I hope the delegates will go up to the General Conference with enlightened and enlarged views upon this subject. And I hope, especially, that the delegates from all the Western Conferences, will, in a proper spirit, lay their claims before that venerable body of Christian ministers, and I doubt not their prayer will be heard.

And I would, in conclusion, most respectfully urge upon my brethren everywhere to make the approaching General Conference, and its duties, the subject of special and earnest prayer to Almighty God, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that He will graciously condescend to be with us in all our deliberations, and overrule all that may be done, to the glory of His holy name and to the abundant furtherance of His work on the earth. O. FISHER.

Mission Rooms commenced a meeting two weeks ago; continued ten or twelve nights; the church to some extent was built up. Many were convicted of sin, and manifested a deep interest in their salvation: some obtained the pearl of great price: nine accessions to the church. We have faith to believe that there is a better day ahead for Milton.

Our class and prayer meetings, in connection with a flourishing Sabbath school, are doing much for our Church. There is work enough here to employ all the time and talent of the preacher. The field is large and not much cultivated. Surrounding manufacturing villages must, of necessity, draw upon the minister of this place.

March 23, 1854. L. P. GOLSON.

MILLENIUM.—The Christian Guardian thus defines a term much oftener used than understood:

Millenium is a word not to he found in the Bible, and yet, it is a word that has long been used by common consent, as expressive of that period of time in which the kingdom of God shall universally prevail among men on earth; which St. John represents as continuing a thousand years, and from thence it has derived the name of Millenium, a word which is descriptive of a lapse of centuries, consisting of tens, and is derived from its antecedent Millenary, or a thousand. Daniel, under the influence of divine inspiration, informs us that the time would arrive when God would set up a kingdom among men, which should increase until it should overpower, and destroy all opposing kingdoms or forms of government, of human or satanic invention. But he does not inform us how long this happy state of things shall continue. But St. John, under the influence of the same spirit of inspiration, informs us that this kingdom of God shall prevail for a thousand years; during which time Satan shall be bound. The above remarks will show that the word Millenium, while it admits the existence of God's kingdom, does more particularly show the time of its continuance on earth; and yet, it has grown into general use as expressive of the kingdom of God established on earth, and the glory and felicity of that kingdom, as well as the time of its duration.

EDUCATED CHINESE YOUTHS.

A correspondent of the New York Observer, Mr. S. H. Brown, communicates to that paper, 9th ult., some facts showing the value of the school feature, in missions.

"In my former communication, I gave you reason to expect something further, showing the results, in part at least, of the work done by the Morrison Education Society in China. Unfortunately, that work was suspended in 1849, but its effects live.

Within six months past, I have ascertained the whereabouts of some eighteen or twenty of our former pupils, and I have yet to learn that any of them are disgracing themselves, or their teachers. In the year 1842, an orphan boy, six years old, from Nanking, was placed under my care by the Rev. W. C. Milne, and he remained in the school until it was disbanded. A letter has been received from him by my assistant and successor at Kongkong, Rev. W. A. Macy, stating that the boy has been adopted by a Chinese in one of the districts of Canton province; that soon after the lad went to his new home, his adopted father desired him to worship his idols, but he declined, and has since then been left to do as he pleases about it. He assures Mr. M. that he need not apprehend that he shall ever become an idolater, for he has the Bible and other books given him when at school, and he can worship only the living and true God. There, then, is a little light shining "in a dark place," and who can tell "how great a matter a little fire" may kindle.

The young man of whose theft and subsequent conversion I gave some account in my last letter, came with me to this country in 1848. In the course of a year or a year and a half before he left Hongkong, he was employed by a Chinese contractor for certain government buildings, to draw his money from the Colonial Treasury, as it was paid over monthly, and to disburse it at his order. The lad came to me to get my consent to do so. I felt some reluctance about it, because I knew that the love of money was the ruling passion of the Chinese; and besides that I feared that by having so much specie from time to time in his hands, his mind might be diverted from his studies. At length the contractor came to me, and begged as a favor to him, that I would let the boy receive and pay out the money. I asked him why he should wish this lad to do it, and why he did not employ some older person among his Chinese friends in the town. "Ah," said he "I know the Chinese too well: and I dare not trust one of my acquaintance with the money." This lad I have known for some time past, and I know he is trusty and honest. I have no fears that he will do me wrong. I hope you will permit him to act as my agent in this matter." Hearing this testimony to the character of my pupil from the mouth of a heathen, I finally gave my consent. After this he drew from the treasury two or three thousand dollars at a time, in specie, as the contractor directed, and paid out for him, in the course of a few months, $24,000. The contractor was entirely satisfied, and to remunerate him, gave him $1030 for his trouble. Of this money, the lad gave $900 to his aged father, $100 to the M. E. Society, as a token of his gratitude for the benefits he had received, and put the remaining $30 in his pocket. Not long after, much to his chagrin, his father took a part of the money which his son had given him, and betrothed him, according to the custom of the country to a heathen girl. When [illegible] to come to this country, his father would not consent to it, unless he would first be married. But so strong was his desire to come, that he yielded to his father's wishes, and the nuptials were celebrated. At all Chinese marriages there are idolatrous ceremonies, but he managed to have these omitted. While in Massachusetts, he united with the church at Monson. I had the happiness of baptizing him on that occasion. The scene will long be remembered by those who were present. A young lady from Boston who happened to be there when he made a profession of his faith in Christ, ascribes her own conversion to the impression made upon her mind while seeing this young man, once a heathen, entering the fold of Christ before her. On his return to China, in 1849, he connected himself with the native church at Hongkong, under the care of the London Missionary Society. I have recently been informed that he is now attached to the U. S. Legation as an interpreter."

We would call attention to some highly suggestive facts touching the results of an experiment as yet feebly made, to prepare instruments for Christianizing China, by taking home Chinese youths; educating them in our colleges and under our social influences; then returning them to shine as lights in their own land. For a general, economical, and successful missionary work, this plan has advantages that commend it to the Churches—whether the convers on of Chinese or Indians be the object. Dixon W. Lewis, a Choctaw Indian, now one of the best adapted Evangelical instruments at work among that tribe in the West, was prepared after this manner. Could not each one of our colleges in the South—say Randolph Macon, Centenary, Henry and Emory, Oxford, Ga., Lagrange, Nashville University engage to educate free of charge two or half dozen Chinese youths selected by our missionaries. The public sympathy, the Church interest created for these colleges, on account of what they were thus doing, would more than compensate them. And as they are the property of the Church, they cannot be doing better work. It is evident that a Chinese will be more thoroughly impregnated with Christian views, moulded and modeled upon the system, by dwelling and learning four years in the United States, than by a score of years' teaching of the Missionary, surrounded by native associations. In the latter case, though he be the most patient disciple, he sees Christianity and the social system that grows up under it, in the abstract; in the latter, the concrete. And it matters not that these educated youths may not become preachers. Whatever positions they fill on their return, their impressions will follow them and be communicated. The leaven will work. The light will shine.

If the Church (and we would now address the M. E. Church, South, particularly) is going about the work of converting the heathen world in earnest, and intends not a few disconnected efforts, but a system of effort, is it not worth while to consider seriously such a suggestion. The groundwork will have to be laid first; the seed must be sown. But when the yield begins it will be great, general and growing. Let us see how it works in two cases.

"Besides the one already mentioned, there were two others of our pupils that accompanied me to this country. They also entered Monson Academy, intending at first to spend two years in study, and then return to China. Their gentlemanly deportment, their already superior mental culture and eagerness to acquire a better education, soon endeared them to their instructors, and won for them the respect of all who know them. Before two years had expired, they had been received into the visible church, and resolved if possible, to graduate at some college before going back to their own country. Accordingly, both of them commenced the study of Latin and Greek, and one of them entered Yale College, where he is now a member of the senior class. The other, to gratify the gentleman who had provided the means for his support, went to Scotland and entered the Edinburgh University as a medical student. The one in Yale College is much respected, and quite popular among his fellow students, and has, I believe, twice won the first prize for English composition, in a class of more than a hundred, one third of whom were his competitors. This fact is sufficient to show that the Chinese mind needs only a fair opportunity, and it is capable of making honorable achievements in literary pursuits. It will not do to call the Chinese, as some have sneeringly done, a "wooden-headed nation." To show how this young man writes as to his intentions in respect to the future, I will quote from a letter of his dated Dec. 5, 1853. He says: "My whole soul is for the interest of China, both spiritual and temporal. I am fully decided to return to China as soon as I graduate. All that I wish for is health, strength, sympathy of friends, and Divine aid. I am not wanting in intensity of feeling. My heart and my soul is in the Chinese cause. I have as yet matured no plan of action for the future, but you may be assured I am not indolent and thoughtless about one. I am determined that my influence shall be felt by my countrymen, however feeble it may be."

What a polished shaft will thus, under God, be introduced into China with all the advantage of nationality, kindred, acquaintance. It is cheaper to prepare the Missionaries here. The other pupil is doing well:

"The young man who [illegible] in Edinburgh University has received the commendation of the Professors, and taken prizes for excellence in Latin, Greek and Botany. He has passed through severe trials, in his separation from those who best knew him, and could therefore enter into his feelings. He expected to be supported by those who furnished him with the means to come to America, and who insisted that he should go to Great Britain to finish his studies. Willing to gratify them, but feeling at the same time that it would have been better for himself to remain in the United States, he embarked for Glasgow in 1850."

These people are not lacking in heart or mind, as appears from the following!

"Were it proper, I should be glad to lay before your readers some of this young man's correspondence with me. When he left China, he was assured that his grandmother (the nearest relative he had except two sisters), should receive a monthly allowance of money sufficient for her support. Not many months ago, by a letter from China, he learned that this allowance had been stopped, and his grandmother was left to suffer in extreme poverty. His feelings were much wrought upon by this intelligence, and he told me all his heart about it. I showed this letter to a lady well known for her Christian benevolence, and she directed me to say to my young Chinese friend that she would remit to China the amount necessary for his grandmother's maintenance, so long as he is pursuing his studies in Scotland. To my letter announcing this good lady's offer, a reply was received by the next mail, and enclosing a note of thanks to his before unknown benefactress, which I am permitted to publish. Those who read it, will, I am sure, see why I quote it here entire, without any explanation.

EDINBURGH, Oct. 27, 1853.

My Dear Madam: It was with no little surprise, as well as joy, that I heard from Mr. Brown of that most unexpected act of kindness of yours, towards our family. It is impossible not to be deeply moved by such manifestations of Christian benevolence, as yours, in voluntarily undertaking the assistance of one who never had the pleasure of your acquaintance before, and whose circumstances of difficulty were only accidentally known to you. Acknowledging, as I do, the kind hand of Providence in this as well as other acts of mercy, still I cannot but feel deeply grateful to you as his instrument. God has certainly wonderfully conducted me through all my difficulties and trials, and in the last one, I left the issue of it to Himself, and He has once more manifested His faithfulness through your liberality. You will then accept my sincere acknowledgment for this kind assistance given to my grandmother. I shall mention it to her and my sister, and though they are not acquainted with you in other respects, nor will probably have an opportunity of showing how sensible they are of your kindness, yet I trust we shall never forget that we have a benefactress on the banks of the Owasco.

Should it please you at some future time to give me an opportunity of returning your kindness, by anything I can do at home, as a medical man, or otherwise, I shall esteem it a great favor, and shall be most happy to offer you my services. I have but a year and a half to complete my curriculum. In the course of two years or a little more, I hope I shall be able to refund whatever you shall have expended for my grandmother, not however, with the view of cancelling the debt of obligation, but that you may have it in your power to extend more largely your acts of benevolence, in which Mr. B. tells me you are deeply engaged. I wish most cordially that Providence may greatly extend your sphere of usefulness, and that He who once said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," may, according to his word, reward you abundantly.

I remain, my dear Madam,
Yours very truly,
WONG FON.

These persons—the Legation Interpreter and two Collegians—were not picked; but were three of the first six pupils offered by their parents, who were poor. They may be assumed as fair samples. Thousands of the same class are to be had for the asking.

SUNDAY.... By George Herbert.

O day most calm, most bright,
The fruit of this, the next world's bud;
The endorsement of supreme delight,
Writ by a friend, and with his blood;
The couch of time; Care's balm and bay;
The week were dark, but for thy light:
Thy torch doth show the way.

The other days and thou
Mixe up one man, whose face thou art
Knocking at Heaven with thy brow;
The working days are the back part;
The bloud of the week lies there,
Making the whole to stoop and bow,
Till by release appear.

Man has straight forward gone
To endless death, but thou dost pull
And turn us round to look on one,
Whom if we were not very dull,
We could not choose to look on still;
Since there is no place so alone
The which he doth not fill.

Sunday the pillar are,
On which heaven's palace arched lies;
The other days fill up the spare
And hollow room with vanities.
They are the fruitful beds and borders
In God's rich garden; that is bare
Which parts their ranks and orders.

The Sunday of man's life
Threaded together on time's string,
Make bracelets to adorn the wife
Of the eternal glorious King.
On Sunday Heaven's gate stands ope;
Blessings are plentiful and rife,
More plentiful than hope.

This day my Saviour rose,
And did inclose this light for his;
That, as each beast his manger knows,
Man might not of his fodder miss.
Christ has took in this piece of ground,
And made a garden there for those Who want herbs for their wound.

The rest of our Creation
Our great Redeemer did remove
With the same shake, which at his passion
Did the earth and with it all things move.
As Samson bore the doors away,
Christ's hands, though nailed, wrought out salvation,
And did unhinge that day.

The brightness of that day
We sullied by our foul offence;
Wherefore that robe we cast away,
Having a new at his expense,
Whose drops of blood paid the full price,
That was required to make us gay,
And fit for Paradise.

Thou art a day of mirth,
And where the week-days trail on ground,
Thy flight is higher, as thy birth;
O let me take thee at the bound,
Leaping with thee from seven to seven,
Till that we both, being toss'd from Earth,
Fly hand in hand to Heaven!

A Northerner's Impressions of New Orleans.

I expected to see a second edition of the Astor House, bound in brick. I was not therefore prepared for the magnificent white marble building which met my enraptured gaze as I turned the corner of Common street, and stood, transfixed with delight, opposite the St. Charles Hotel, and was nearly dumped into the gutter by a man carrying something of large proportions, I knew not what, on his shoulders. They say in the North that Southerners visit New York to behold magnificence which they have not in their own region. That must be a slight error of self-esteem on our part, thought I, as I measured the St. Charles with my eye. We have nothing like that in New York. There is the Astor House, a cross between an Egyptian tomb and an English workhouse; there is the Metropolitan, a row of brown stone stores; the New York, five boarding-houses knocked into one; the Clarendon, like a slice of gingerbread set up on edge, where you cannot get a drink if you want it, and a dozen others. Not one of them can come within a thousand miles of the St. Charles: no, that's evident—of course they cannot, literally. I use the expression figuratively. I was agreeably disappointed in the St. Charles. I was also disappointed in the streets. A man's impressions of a new place are almost entirely governed by his previous conceptions of it, whether arising from imagination, reading, or report; and all that varies from that conception strikes him. Now, the picture I had painted in my imagination of New Orleans, was founded on accounts I had heard from those at the North who had visited it. I had been told that one part was entirely devoted to the French population, and was remarkable for the picturesque irregularity of its narrow streets, etc. etc. I accordingly imagined that when I arrived in New Orleans I should see gable-ended habitations, with the upper stories projecting beyond the lower ones, here large and there small, like those of an inland French town. I was, consequently, surprised to find the streets straight, and as regular in the quality of buildings as the old ones in New York; the shops handsome, and many of them appareatly filled with valuable goods. By the way, how is it there are such an infinite number of fancy stores? I can readily imagine, from the gayety of the population and the number of visitors who come on pleasure, that there may be a large demand for fancy; but, judging from the number of stores devoted to this kind of business, one is inclined to believe that the people live upon fancy, that they associate with the fancy, eat fancy, drink fancy, sleep on fancy, suckle in fancy, and are buried in fancy. Now, in the name of Plutus and John Jacob Astor, do those people make a living in those stores one sees half a dozen masks, a few crucifixes, a second-hand dagger, and a walking-cane, exposed for sale. Even supposing they cleared out the whole concern every day and bought in a fresh stock, the profits would scarcely pay the rent. But they don't do even that: there are the same masks, crucifixes and canes in the same shop windows day after day. No one goes into them or comes out of them, save some member of the family or the fat little chip of a negro girl when she rushes out with her legs flying in all directions, like the regulator of a steam engine, to recapture the baby who has toddled off into the neighboring gutter. There is the same lady sitting in the middle of the store, surrounded by children, attending to the most private domestic duties, with the same pretty cap, and the same very loose dress, like unto a colored chemise de nuit, and one catches the same glimpses of the head of the family in his shirt sleeves partaking of the same kind of meal in the remote dimness of the back parlor. I ask again how do these people make a living? Combing children's heads [illegible] dosing in a mother, cannot conceive, and to any immediate pecuniary emolument; neither is washing the baby generally considered a lucrative occupation, nor the whipping of Augusta likely to meet with a customer who will pay. However, there are some mysteries connected with the way our fellow-creatures live which we are not destined to fathom. I dare say Augusta's mamma wonders how editors earn a livelihood: they must appear to her, if she ever looked into an editorial office, to do nothing but sit in a doubled-up attitude in a very dirty, disorderly room, and spit into a pile of old newspapers. As for us Artists, I doubt not she concludes that we do not make a living at all, since such has been the popular error from time immemorial. But let that pass; "asks no deep scrutiny."

I should like to ask another question. To whom do all the dogs belong? Are there no policemen amongst dogs? Nothing dropped in this their cranks? If there is such a disease in the South, Heaven defend you good people of New Orleans in the dog days. In the whole course of my life I never saw such a collection of canine quadrupeds as are to be seen in these streets, and some of them the most rowdy looking dogs I ever beheld, they appear to have nothing to do but loaf about the streets and drink at all the gutters. I do not know whether the sewerage in our street is considered of a particularly fine brand, but we certainly seemed to be favored with the company of more dogs than any street in the city; big dogs, little dogs, dogs with long tails, dogs with short tails, and dogs with no tails at all; the latter the work of art, I presume, but then who is it that takes the trouble to cut the tails of such ugly curs, and having taken that trouble why abandon them to want and the streets, for many of them appear to be in the greatest poverty; or do some people consider it an amusement to cut off dogs' tails, and are only enabled to practice it on the most worthless; or were said dogs promising puppies, and had their tails cut when they were handsome, but growing ungainly have been discarded; or have they taken to disreputable company and fallen in bad ways, neglected their duty to their masters and become dissolute, idle dogs; or again, have their masters died intestate and left them destitute. All these reflections pass through my mind as I contemplate the unhappy brutes from my windows, not that they are all unhappy by any means, many are exceedingly cheerful, and well to do in the world; but this class chiefly only make short excursions from the portcochères of the neighboring houses. They are, however, very affable, and associate freely with every dog that comes along, which is exceedingly unable on their parts. There is only one thing which diminishes my esteem for them; the indiscriminate nature of their gallantries. My landlady has two dogs. She is very much attached to both of them. One is a black, kind of mongrel which, she informs me, is very faithful and humane; the other is a fuzzy little fellow whose mind is imbued with the idea that the pursuit of rats is the object of existence, that the first thing to be done on entering a room is to examine all the corners and undercloth all the larger articles of furniture, which having been duly tested, and found devoid of rats, leaves him at liberty to go through a variety of spasmodic evolutions expressive of delight, when addressed by any one present. This dog, my landlady informs me, has entirely cleared the house of vermin, which overran it when he first arrived. Many of the rats, she says, were long commerce, and she measures off so very much of her arm that I am compelled to doubt the exact correctness of her statement. However, let that pass, I will not call the good lady to account for her poetical manner of expressing herself. Some people will speak figuratively. It may be thought that the fact of my landlady's possessing two dogs should satisfy me as to who are the owners of those I see in the streets; that my landlady owning dogs would lead to the supposition that other householders might keep dogs; but no, the dogs in my house are clean dogs, those I see in the streets are dirty, and I cannot lead myself to believe that any respectable person would acknowledge them. Besides which our dogs are always in the house, save when fussy rushes out to yelp up into the open air, which I believe to be a purely sanitary movement on his part, a necessary mode of relieving himself of superfluous bark. No, I cannot account for the existance of the rowdy dogs, and should like to dive deeper into the enquiry, but I find I have outrun the space you will be inclined to allow me in your columns. I must, therefore, apologize for permitting my enthusiasm on the dog question to carry me away so far, and waste so much of your valuable space, in discussing it. I will, however, strive to be more compact in my remarks next time; until then I trust you will allow me to sign myself, yours faithfully,

THE TRIANGLE.

THE SAILOR'S BIBLE.—After a recent heavy storm on the coast of Massachusetts, a sailor's chest, which had been swept from some wrecked vessel, was cast on shore, and opened by those who found it. A narrator says:

"But we found a precious treasure in the sailor's chest. No diamond of Brazil—no gem of the Western Coast so precious; yea, the price of it was above rubies. It was the Word of God. We were glad to see it. The sight was a tide of pleasant thoughts through our hearts. If we knew not where the tempest had cast the body, we could not but hope this precious Bible had sent the spirit to a heavenly home. No name yet met our eyes; but these beautiful lines, cut out of some book or periodical, were pasted on the fly-leaf:

"A parent's blessing on her son,
Goes with this busy thing:
The love that would retain the one,
Must in the other cling.
Remember, 'tis no common toy,
A mother's gift: remember, boy."

"In company with the Bible we found a daguerreotype of a lady—beyond question the mother of that son, the giver of that book. As we gazed on the placid features, we could not but think these beautiful lines were penned there by her whose image was now before us. Her own fond and pious heart had made this gift, and sought an expression of maternal love in these lines. A pious mother's blessing with such a gift!"

LINDLEY MURRAY.—It may not be generally known that this distinguished personage was Pennsylvanian. He was born in Swatara, Lebanon county, Pa., 1745. In New York city he studied law, and at 22 was admitted to the bar. He went to England and lived there 42 years, seldom in good health after leaving our shores. He was 40 years old when he wrote his "Grammar." He was a fine old Quaker, and there he died in Yorkshire, in 1820, was universally lamented.

Santa Anna, it is said, has sent an order to Messrs. Ames, the great cannon manufacturers, Springfield, Mass., for two hundred guns from ten to fifteen pound calibre each, and also the payment of the order, which, of course, includes the supply of a vast amount of ammunition, musketry, revolvers, etc., is to be made contingent on the passage of the Gadsden treaty.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1854.

Arrivals.—Bishop Soule, Rev. F. E. Pitts, Rev. J. Boring, and A. Wynn, arrived Thursday morning on the steamship Daniel Webster, via Nicaragua, all in good health: the two latter with their families. They left San Francisco 16th March, and San Juan del Sud the 27th, having had a quick and pleasant trip.

J. W. S.—Your complaint that the Minutes have not reached East Alabama has been laid before the Secretary, who happened to be in the office when it reached us. He [illegible] that the Minutes were containing parcels duly labelled for each preacher.

Cum Grano Salis.—In publishing, last week, an English account of the battle of New Orleans, we omitted to make some grains of allowance. But our readers did that. "The losing gambler and the late hound may grumble." The story is largely apocryphal. It is certain that Mrs. Jackson, also in ludicrously represented, was never in New Orleans. The defeated foes of Old Hickory may find some consolation in writing which they did not get in fighting him. It is interesting always to hear the other side.

Revivals.—A friend writes from Summerfield, Ala. "We have a gracious revival now in progress at this place. About fifty have professed religion, and no abatement in interest."

The churches in Mobile have also been much refreshed, and are being built up. We learn that there have been more than a hundred conversions since Conference. Let the Lord be magnified.

New Romanist Organ.—The Southern Journal has been laid on our table, in exchange. It is a neat sheet, a few sizes smaller than the Advocate, and twice the subscription price, $3 per annum, in advance. It being a very religious journal, representing the only true, holy, CATHOLIC MOTHER Church, is published every Sunday morning! The editors say:

The importance of such a journal has been more acknowledged since Catholicity has become the common target of a portion of the American press; and the rising generation is so easily deceived by the misrepresentations of anti-Catholic writers.

First Cotton by the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad.—The steamboat Anna brought, 4th inst., six bales cotton conveyed over the Great Northern Railroad from Livingston parish. The cotton was grown on the plantation of W. H. Strickland, and consigned to T. C. Bates & Co. The iron is now being laid on the fifty-ninth mile from New Orleans, which leaves but twenty-eight miles to complete the road to the State line.

Lodging-House for News' Boys.—It would be a great and practical benevolence to provide homes for the numerous and active class of boys in this city that follow the business of selling the daily papers. Such an establishment has just been opened in New York. Twenty-four boys came in the first night, and several of them not only paid their expenses for one night, but paid for several nights in advance. Every thing passed off excellently, and the enterprise begins most auspiciously.

Discontent is a sin, that is its own punishment; and makes men torment themselves; it makes the spirit sad—the body sick—and all the enjoyments sour; it arises not from the condition, but the mind. Paul was contented in prison;—Ahab was discontented in a palace; he had the delights of Canaan, that pleasant land, the wealth of a kingdom, the pleasure of a court, the honors and powers of a throne; yet all this availed him nothing without Naboth's vineyard. Inordinate desires expose men to continual vexations, and being disposed to fret, they will always find something to fret about.—Matthew Henry.

Our President and the Pope.—In a letter of Pius IX. to our President, brought by Bedini, the Father of the Faithful says:

"We cannot allow this opportunity to pass, without earnestly entreating you to extend your protection to the Catholics inhabiting those regions, and to shield them at all times with your power and authority."

To which President Pierce, it is said, has written, in answer, as follows:

"Beloved Brother: The Catholic brethren, under the Government of the free and tolerant United States, shall have all that protection of person and of conscience you desire. And as a proper return on your part, may we not ask of you to bestow upon all Protestants in the States of the Church similar rights and privileges. Or, if this cannot be granted, that at least they shall have, within the walls of Rome, the rights of public worship, and of burying their dead with such religious ceremonies as to their conscience seem most [illegible].

"In the bonds of perfect charity, yours very respectfully."

REPORT OF PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Advocate Office, April 3, 1854.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, in making their fourth annual report, to the patronizing Conference, submit, that its present condition and prospects are such as warrant the utmost confidence in its permanence and success.

The paper has reached an issue of six thousand copies weekly, with a rapidly-augmenting subscription list. This result, almost unparalleled in Methodist journalism, is highly gratifying, and augurs well for the future. The paper has ceased to be an experiment, and is now an established enterprise, ranking creditably with its compeers of our connectional press.

In respect of size and typographical execution, improvements may be counted upon as circumstances shall demand and justify them. Up to this time, the publication has not been remunerative. Besides the cost of materials, and the actual expense of printing, considerable expenditures are involved in the furnishing and rent of an eligible office and in the salary of an efficient clerk. These outlays, the cheapness of the subscription price, and the consideration that the present circulation has been gradually and but recently attained, sufficiently accounts for the fact. To meet this, the subscription list must be brought up to Ten Thousand. The standard cannot fall below this; it should exceed rather.

The appointments of the office, under the management of an experienced clerk, from whose competency we have much to expect, are thorough and systematic; such as will secure promptness and accuracy in all of its business details.

In expressing our thanks to the Agents who have so far exerted themselves in behalf of the paper, the Committee would urge upon them the necessity of continued efforts. The Advocate is wholly dependent upon its voluntary agents, the preachers, and such laymen as have nobly responded to the enterprise. We ask your special attention to the collection of back subscriptions, the renewal of subscriptions, and the prompt remittance of funds in hand. It is desirable that the Advocate should be read by every Methodist within our bounds, and that it should penetrate the limits of every circuit. This, we are persuaded it will do, if properly presented and diligently circulated.

The Committee are highly gratified with the editorial management, and have re-elected Rev. H. N. McTyeire to the position which he has occupied since the paper was started. Those only who are acquainted with the duties of journalism are prepared fully to appreciate the care and labor of the editorial chair, especially in conducting a religious newspaper through the first years of its history. These have been met, by the present incumbent, in a spirit of sacrifice, and with a single eye to the prosperity of the Church and the glory of God, and without any adequate pecuniary compensation. In his re-appointment, we express our cordial approval of the course which he has pursued in the conduct of the paper, and our unabated confidence in his ability and discretion.

The history of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, during the past three years, has given weighty confirmation to the convictions which led to its establishment. New Orleans is central in its news facilities and commercial advantages, which makes it the most favored point of location for a Methodist paper in the South-West. The direction which our Church [illegible] and missionary enterprises are fast taking towards the Southern and Western sections of the Continent, indicate New Orleans as the future Metropolitan of Southern Methodism, as it is now the confessed emporium of trade. In this connection, our paper, as the nucleus of Methodist interests and influence, cannot well be overrated. It has, besides, a mission of Evangelism in the proper territory of its present occupation. It stands in the midst of one of the strongest and best organized developments of Popery. In this relation, it is the sentinel of Protestantism at large and the citadel of Evangelical strength. As such, it is the property of all who love the Gospel, and deprecate the baneful aggressions of Roman Catholicism.

To speak in general terms of the salutary influences of religious newspapers, their potency in moulding public opinion, and their success in co-operating with the pulpit, in fostering home piety, would be to dwell on what have, long since, become accepted truisms. Without the appeal, which might be based upon these considerations, we commit the Advocate to your unanimous and vigorous support, in the confident belief, that it will prove itself rich in blessings to our country and to our Church.

Liberia.—The population of Liberia, we learn from the Philadelphia North American, now reaches 150,000 souls, having been swelled to that aggregate, not so much by emigration from the United States, as by the subjection of the native tribes, their conversion of the native tribes by missionaries, and their employment as laborers, etc. The same policy is constantly extending itself; for the Republic, having now acquired a name and an impetus, cannot help going ahead. Some military enterprises against refractory chiefs, within a few years past, have fully demonstrated its power, and as a nation it is looked up to with respect by the savages with whom it is surrounded. To increase the importance of this position, the Liberians have commenced a navy, and are promised aid by France and England. They are rapidly extending their connections with the interior, and are now carrying on a lucrative trade with distant tribes, as their territory, covering 500 miles of sea-coast, enables them to control all the great leading trade routes.

HIGH SCHOOL, FOURTH DISTRICT.

We had the pleasure, on Thursday, of attending the "commencement" of this department of our Free Public Schools. Though too late for the speeches, we witnessed the presentation of diplomas to the graduates, three boys, from the male, and six girls from the Female High School: this was done handsomely, by W. S. Mount, Esq., President of the Board. To show the solid excellence of the Free School system, as it exists here, and may exist elsewhere, we extract from the Delta, whose reporter was present at the examination of the Boys' High School:

We have never attended exercises of the kind more candidly conducted or more entirely successful. In every study, not only the Board of Directors and the teachers from other schools, but the entire audience were invited by Mr. Parham, the talented and gentlemanly Principal, to name the chapter, page, problem or subject upon which the classes were examined; and also to propound miscellaneous questions upon each science. The invitation was cheerfully accepted, and the exercises were therefore of the most impartial, thorough, hence and rigid character; and right manfully did the students acquit themselves—evincing the most careful training, the most skillful mental discipline, the most efficient instruction.

This school is divided into three departments: 1st, That of the Exact Sciences; 2d, The Natural Sciences. 3d. Belles Lettres. It is also divided into four classes, corresponding to the four years of the course of instruction. We do not wish to draw any invidious distinction, but we were particularly pleased with the examination in Mathematics, and with the Second and Fourth Classes. The latter consisted of but three students: Masters Willinm H. Ellis, James Brown and Frederick Seiler—the graduating class. They were examined in Algebra, Geometry, Trigonometery, Surveying, Navigation, Astronomy, Physiology, Rhetoric, &c., with as much credit to themselves as to their able and efficient instructors.

The text books in this school, we were pleased to observe, were those used by the first colleges in the country: Bourden's Algebra, Legendre's Geometery, Olmstead's Astronomy, &c. Davies' Elementary Algebra is completed during the first year of the course.

J. G. Parham, Esq., is the Principal of this school, and Mr. — Torbert, Assistant; Mr. Guizot, Professor of French. Such teachers cannot be appreciated too highly; especially is the Principal (Mr. Parham) deserving the favor, not only of every parent whose sons are under his charge, but of every citizen who cares for the welfare of our public high schools, the pride of our city. His able and talented assistant, Mr. Torbert, has been a faithful fellow-laborer, not only in cultivating the minds, but in contributing to the gentlemanly manners and commendable bearing of the youths in their charge.

Don't Wear Tight Cravats.—Professor Hamilton's remarks, at the Buffalo Medical College, on asphyxia, and particularly that form caused by wearing tight cravats, may be of interest to the general reader.

Cravats were first worn by the Croats, in the sixteenth century, as a part of their military dress.

Public speakers, members of Congress, and clergymen, hang themselves by wearing cravats and stocks, high and tight, thereby impeding the return of blood from the head. This can be explained on physiological principles. The brain, in speaking, is excited to increased action, a large quantity of blood is sent to the substance, and unless it can find a speedy return, produces congestion and apoplexy.

Students are not altogether free from the effects of ligation of the neck. It is surprising how little pressure is necessary to prevent the ready flow of blood from the head. Those who bend their heads forward, as in writing or studying, are apt to feel a dizziness and heaviness in the head, which loosening their cravats or collars altogether relieves, and the mind returns to its original clearness. In clergymen, who are particularly prone to bundle their necks with large cravats, bronchitis is induced, and the vocal chords become relaxed as the consequence. Men who speak extemporaneously, can speak longer and with greater ease than those who read, as their voice is not confined so much to one key, and can be modulated with greater freedom.

I Cannot Pray for Father any More!—She knelt, at the accustomed hour, to thank God for the mercies of the day, and pray for care through the coming night; then, as usual, came the earnest, "God bless dear mother, and"—but the prayer was stilled! the little hands unclasped, and a look of agony and wonder met the mother's eye, as the words of hopeless sorrow burst from the lips of the kneeling child, "I cannot pray for father any more!" Since her little lips had been able to form the dear name, she had prayed for a blessing upon it; it had followed close after mother's name, for he had said that must come first; and now to say the familiar prayer, and leave her father out! No wonder that the new thought seemed too much for the childish mind to receive.

I waited for some moments that she might conquer her emotion, and then urged her to go on. Her pleading eyes met mine, and with a voice that faltered too much almost for utterance, she said, "O, mother, I cannot leave him all out; let me say, 'thank God that I had a dear father once!' so I can still go on, and keep him in my prayers." And so she always does, and my stricken heart learned a lesson from the loving ingenuity of my child. Remember to thank God for mercies past, as well as to ask blessings for the future. METHODIST PRESS.

General News Advocate.—A suggestive correspondent, "Ion," of the Memphis Advocate, presents the outline of a plan for publishing and circulating an Advocate for all the people—a connectional Advocate. He would not have this grand orb, as "central sun" of a religious paper, exclude "all our neighborhood and local diamond lights." That need not be, he thinks, and will not necessarily follow. P

"Let every Conference have as many papers as they want, but let there be one to spread on the principles of a 'Weekly Tract,' and no human imagination can tell the good it will do. Christians dying will leave legacies to the dead, and provide for the lonely and the poor to read the best paper in the world for years to come."

Surely no Church organization is better adapted than our own for promoting such an enterprise. We are of opinion that the plan for circulating the "Weekly Tract" would work well if applied to the Advocates now established, in cities and large congregations. Here is his plan:

1. Its chief characteristic is, that it should be published for gratuitous distribution to a great extent.

2. Each church should see that every family belonging to the congregation is furnished weekly with a copy.

Every poor widow, every apprentice, every woman, young, or old, every man, rich or poor, in the Church, every hotel, barbershop, steamboat, rail car, should have them.

3. In order to effect this, let every church appoint, or elect, a periodical committee of laymen, with which the Presiding Elders and Pastors shall co-operate.

This committe shall ascertain how many papers will supply their congregation, town or district of country. Then they shall collect, just as we now do for missionary purposes, all the funds necessary to pay for them. Some would give five dollars, some ten, some only one dime—but let it all go into the Periodical Fund, and let the Treasurer forward the amount to the chief Secretary of the Publishing House who shall forward the papers as ordered.

4. If the General Conference will establish such a paper, of the highest grade, inferior to nothing in Christendom, in three years the issue will go up to two hundred thousand and go on increasing. Each paper could be furnished at from eighty cents to one dollar, and the Church could then speak through an organ by which she could be heard.

The New York Tribune publishes about one hundred thousand copies weekly, the New York Herald nearly as many. Why should not a great, nationally outspread Church do something as noble for her thousands of people?

England and the Napoleons.—The present combination of England and France, though very close, is a strange thing any way. It is thoroughly selfish and inconsistent, with fresh historical facts and antecedents. John Bull could stand by and see Poland dismembered and Hungary crushed. But now his interests are threatened, he makes no scruples of hearty alliance with a Napoleon, in behalf of Turks, and would have the credit of nobly interfering "for the liberties of oppressed nations"—and for his religious conscience.

On the 6th of March last a banquet was given in London in honor of Sir C. Napier, on his appointment as commander of the Baltic fleet. Whatever the dinner was, the toasts were rich. Lord Palmerston presided. We copy from the Watchman:

After the healths of the Queen, Prince Albert and the Prince of Wales, the noble Chairman gave "The Emperor and Empress of the French." In proposing this toast, he said, "We have had to do, during now more than twelve months of most difficult and complicated negotiations, with the Sovereign of France. We have met on his part with the greatest straightforwardness, with the most perfect good faith, with the most single-minded sincerity, and with an energy of purpose and a community of determination, which [illegible] in our minds that full confidence in him which, I am [illegible], has always expressed in us."

Again—

The Chairman then gave a toast which was entirely a new one since the time of the Crusades—"The Allied English and French Fleets and Armies." It was a glorious sight to witness the union of two of the greatest countries in the world,—to find them in cordial alliance, fighting not for conquest or for selfish advantages, but for the liberties of oppressed nations, and the establishment of the freedom and independence of Europe. (Cheers.)

And is this the Louis Napoleon the British abused so lately as a parvenu, upstart, faithless traitor! Is this the descendant of the Napoleon of St. Helena indignity! Rev. C. Taylor, Missionary of the M. E. Church, South, on his way home passed two days at St. Helena, and publishes notes in the S. C. Advocate. Of course he went to "Longwood:"

Occupying a porter's lodge at the gate opening into the spacious grounds, is an old soldier of Wellington's army at Waterloo. Riding through a wide avenue of pretty grecawerd, in many places well shaded with trees, you come to the house in which Napoleon lived and died. It is rented by the British Government to a person who exacts a fee of two shillings—about a half dollar—from each visiter; and yet the whole place is suffered to fall into decay. The house is of one story, shaped like an L, has a high, steep roof and stands with the gable end, in which is the door and a window on each side, looking towards the road. It is now used as a barn—the glass in the windows is broken—the walls defaced, and all scratched or chalked over with the names of numerous visitors, who are ambitious of notoriety and can acquire it in no other way. This is also the case with the plastered walls of the vault in which the illustrious exile was entombed. His former dining room is now a granary, and the place where his table once stood, is now occupied by a funning-mill. In this room also, he died, on a sofa, and not on a bed, as usually represented in pictures of the scene. A stone was taken at the time, by Count Bertrand, from the wall near the head of the sofa, at the side of a window, and the vacancy still remains. The door leading from this room into his bedroom has been walled up, and the latter apartment is now used for a stable. At the time of our visit, it was tenanted by four horses and four oxen. Are these shameful indignities permitted by the British Government to gratify a petty revenge against their fallen enemy? The only thing said to be remaining just as Napoleon left it, is what is called his fish pond. This term is apt to mislead one as to its size; for it is a very small semicircular reservoir or pit, with perpendicular sides of hewn stone, perhaps fifteen feet between its own extremities, and about eight feet wide. Its form is determined by two concentric semicircles, having the ends united by straight lines, the space between being filled with water. All the central part with the inner semicircle is laid with solid masonry. This figure is too geometrically exact, for any pretension to natural beauty, and was evidently modelled after some part of a fortification where a cannon may stand in the centre, and revolving on a pivot, describe a semicircular curve; which would enable it to command, in its sweeping range, a very wide extent of country. There is probably a technical name that would convey the precise idea in a single word, but I am not sufficiently familiar with the nomenclature militaire to give it. If you are, you may substitute it for the foregoing bungling attempt at description.

The fish in this pool sickened and died, probably from the accidental mingling of some poisonous ingredient with the water, and it is quite affecting to read the remark of Napoleon on the occurrence—"Everything that I love—everything that belongs to me, is stricken—Heaven and man unite to afflict me."

First Methodist Paper.—The editor of Zion Herald gives this as its history. It is an interesting fact, and may be suggestive, certainly encouraging, that the eldest and youngest Methodist papers, were set forward on the responsibility and risk of individuals:

In 1823, Zion's Herald, the first Methodist newspaper in the world, was brought into existence, by a few Methodist preachers and laymen. It was published in Boston five years; when it was sold to the Conference Book agents in New York. But the want of an authorized Methodist paper in New England being still felt, the Wesleyan Association was organized in 1831; and in connection with a Committee of the New England Conference, it purchased the New England Christian Herald, which had been in existence two years. To this paper the original title of Zion's Herald was given in 1833. In 1841 the association purchased the Maine Wesleyan Journal, published at Portland, and then gave the Herald its present title of Zion's Herald and Wesleyan Journal.

Almost the first act of the Association was to hire money on their individual responsibility; and the debt thus incurred amounted at one time to four thousand dollars. Yet, with rare magnanimity, these brethren, whilst they made themselves liable to heavy losses, in case of a failure, pledged whatever profits the paper might produce to the patronizing Conferences. Planted on this basis, and aided by the efforts of the preachers, they pushed the fortunes of the Herald, until they succeeded in liquidating the debt, and in dividing fifteen thousand dollars among the N. E. Conferences.

The Western Advocate gives cheering revival news of Methodism in Cincinnati and vicinity, and sums up—

The Advocate and Journal of March 9, in its revival department, records over 1000 accessions to the Church; the Auburn Advocate, of same date, about 900; the Chicago Advocate, of March 8, between 400 and 500; and Zion's Herald, of same date, between 200 and 300;—total, about 2500.

Purity of the Confessional.—Dr. Parsons, of the Louisville Advocate, gives this specimen:

If there is a place on earth, where the "mystery of iniquity works," it is found in the Romish confessional and the manner of penance as often enjoined upon the penitent by that inquisitorial chair of vice and corruption. "A whited sepulchre," indeed; fair without, but within, full of rottenness, obscenity, licentiousness and crime. A few days since, a lady of this city, who had been for several years a Roman Catholic, and once a "Novice" at Bardstown, was converted to God and joined the Methodist Church. As she had been for a long time a faithful devotee at the shrine of "the least," she deemed it her duty, to call upon the priest, her confessor, and let him know that she had withdrawn from his communion, and joined with the Protestants. The "reverend father," mellow with good wine, or something more potent, whose fair and rotund proportions would indicate anything else rather than a godly and self-denying, "ghostly confessor," mistaking the purport of her visit, and supposing she had come to make confession of her fault, and seek a restoration to the arms of "holy mother," proceeded at once, after [illegible] "mortal sin," and was worthy of death, to pronounce her penance. And what do you think it was? Why, the following. We have it from her own lips, whose name, and the name of the priest, may be given, if need be:

"First," said he, "you must say the litany, and the life and resurrection of the Savior, every day, until you come to confession again.

"2d. You must go through the acts of faith, hope and charity, every night before going to bed.

"3d. You must say the morning prayers every morning."

But new comes the gist of the whole matter—hear it:

"4th. You must kiss me six times."

Of course the lady well understood the dishonorable requirement couched under the term "kiss." Indignant at the foulness of the proposition of the priestly debauchee, she arose to depart, which the "holy man" observing, made a slight movement to prevent. But just then another woman entered the room, and not observing a third person there, threw herself, languidly, into the priest's lap. In the confusion consequent upon the discovery of there being another present, our convert found an opportunity to say good bye, and departed without assistance. These are the men, and this the sort of "penance," which "mother Rome" provides for the preservation of virtue and moral piety among the people.

Archbishop Hughes on the Annexation of Cuba.—The editors of the Washington Star say they have seen a letter from a gentleman in whose representations they place ample confidence, which says:

"In regard to Cuba, tell our friends that Archbishop Hughes will probably do his best to direct the Catholic interest in the United States towards its acquisition. We went from Havana to New Orleans together, and had many conversations on the subject. He says the condition of things there cannot exist; that as the incapacity of the Government to administer the island increases, impositions and restrictions are imposed, and that nothing but the degradation and imbecility of the Creole population, prevent them from shaking off their yoke. The Bishop said that he thought they were a harmless, satisfied race, repudiating all interference with their condition. His visit, he says, has awakened him from his delusion. I have no doubt that he earnestly desires its annexation, and his great influence will tell on the result with powerful effect."

EPISCOPAL DISTRICTS REVIEWED.

Ma. Editor: In reviewing an article that appeared in your paper of March 4, I was led to speculate as to the time required under the proposed plan for a Bishop to make an entire round on all the proposed districts, so as to "travel at large through the connection," according to "our plan of Itinerant General Superintendency."

See Discipline, page 38, art. 4.

Suppose there should be eight Episcopal Districts to be occupied for four years at a time by as many Bishops, how long would it take any of them to finish an entire round?

Ans. Thirty-two years.

Which is much more than remains of the three score and ten of any Bishop now in office, or any one likely to be elected at the next General Conference.

A question arises here: Can that be called "general" which can never be extended over the whole? and if not, would not such a plan destroy "our plan of Itinerant General Superintendency?"

Our plan requires the Bishop to "travel at large through the connection." But it is affirmed that the division of the work into districts already exists: that the Bishops have divided the work among themselves, so that each Conference might have one in annual attendance, is admitted, but that there has been bounds set to limit their jurisdiction I have yet to learn.

The writer admits that the object of the framers of our plan was to prevent a diocesan Episcopacy.

Now, it does seem to me that this plan presents to us an alternating diocesan Episcopacy—nothing else; for instance, what jurisdiction would the Bishop exercise over the district he had just left never to return to it again? Would he exercise any more than the Bishops of diocesan P. E. Church exercise over their neighboring dioceses?

As to the proposal to strengthen the Episcopacy, I should be glad we had at least three more Bishops, which would make six effective, who might travel through Conferences holding religious meetings, and learning the wants of the work and the ability and the necessities of the preachers, and by annual alternation with their Episcopal brethren, the state of the whole work; that they might be prepared advisedly, if need be, to transfer brethren who were willing to go from where laborers were abundant to where they were wanting; to act in concert on the great and important question of foreign missions; to preserve harmony in sentiment and action throughout the whole body.

As to the plan for the accommodation of Local Preachers who cannot, or who often will not, put themselves to the trouble to go to Conference. Query. Whether many of them could, or would, render the Church much more service in orders than as licentiates?

Then suppose the district meetings were weekly, there would be little time left for any thing else, when the time necessary for transit from one district to another, is taken into account. More than a week could not be allowed where a Bishop had three conferences with from seven to nine districts to meet.

If the proposed plan contains an itinerant general superintendency at all, it does not seem to me to be "our plan." The third restrictive rule reads, "They shall not change or alter any part or rule of our government, so as to destroy our plan of General Superintendency." Discipline, page 20.

Brother Fly admits that the design of our fathers was to prevent diocesan Episcopacy. We hope the General Conference will so understand the rule of restriction; and as the plan for the quadrennial overeight of Episcopal Districts will go by the board.

LA GRANGE, ALA.

La Grange, Ala., March 21, 1854.

My Dear Bro.: Allow me the use of your columns, to present before the public, the claims of La Grange College.

La Grange College is situated upon a spur of the Cumberland Mountains, and overlooks one of the most beautiful and fertile valleys on the globe. The prospect is picturesque, extensive, grand and sublime; the atmosphere is pure, invigorating and healthy; and the natural wonders in which the mountain abounds are numerous, varied and striking. The buildings afford ample and comfortable room for a large number of students, and many of these rooms are now vacant, waiting for the reception of students. The society halls are large, elegantly furnished, beautifully papered and carpeted, and supplied with well selected libraries, amounting in the aggregate to some four thousand volumes.

In addition to these facts, the College is supplied at this time with a full and experienced Faculty.

Professor Casey, a profound scholar, a thorough, patient and most successful teacher has charge of the department of Ancient Languages; Professors Ross and Rice have proved themselves worthy to occupy the chairs filled and honored by Dr. Tutwiler and Professor Hardy. Professor Rice intends giving special attention to Civil Engineering, and will afford rare facilities for the acquisition of this noble science, by practical observation on the railroad which passes only a few miles from the College.

The department of Natural Science will be under the charge of Professor Thomas P. Hatch.

To the facilities heretofore afforded by the College for the study of this department, Professor Hatch adds his own valuable and extensive collections, in Mineralogy, Paleontology and Botany, affording facilities for the study of the Natural Sciences, not equalled by few institutions. This department embraces Geology, Mineralogy, Chemistry, Botany, Zoology, Anatomy and Physiology; a familiar lecture on some one of which will be delivered each day, and illustrated by experiments. A considerable addition will be made to the chemical apparatus this present session. The collections in botany number more than a thousand specimens, illustrating the different orders of the vegetable kingdom.

Professor Hatch will also accompany each class on a geological excursion, of from one to two weeks.

So that we shall not be behind any Institution in the facilities we offer for the study this most interesting department of sci[illegible]

The departments of Moral Science and Belles Lettres will be under the care of your correspondent, who promises to make the instruction extensive and thorough.

In conclusion, we are proposing to [illegible] the College by the sale of cheap scholarships. We offer a scholarship for twenty years at the low price of one hundred dollars.

This system does not take effect [illegible] seven hundred and fifty scholarships have been sold.

The advantages of the system are—

1. It offers such strong inducements to investment of money—twenty years' [illegible] for one hundred dollars.

2. It extends the patronage at the time that it endows the College.

3. It endows, not by donation, but [illegible] actual sale of scholarships, at a sum nominal.

Will not the Alabama Conference [illegible] in this last effort at endowment?

Professor Rose will leave in a few days South Alabama, and we expect great [illegible] results which shall settle the permanency of La Grange.

With assurances of high regard, I am your brother, R. H. Rivers.

A Gambler's Testimony.—M. Ver[illegible] his Memoirs, gives a very candid history of his gambling experience. The disclosures make are sufficiently startling, as illustrative of the profound infatuation which [illegible] upon those who fall into this almost [illegible] vice. The following confession [illegible] part of the effects produced even by [illegible] ful gambling. He says:

"Roulette winninge excite all sorts of immoralities in the heart, and nothing more brutalizes the mind; nothing sooner [illegible] guishes all love of labor and of [illegible] nothing inspires greater contempt for business, or greater loathing for all [illegible] than these riches of an hour, which [illegible] gives you, that she may have the pleasure of despoiling you of them.

What is Dirt?—Old Dr Cooper, of North Carolina, used to say to his students:

Don't be afraid of a little dirt, gentlemen. What is dirt? Why, nothing at all of [illegible] when chemically viewed. Rub a little [illegible] upon that "dirty grease spot" upon your coat, and it undergoes a chemical change [illegible] becomes soap. Now rub it with a little water and it disappears; it is neither grease, soap, water nor dirt. "That is not the odorous pile of dirt," you observe to me. Well, scatter a little gypsum over it and it is no longer dirty. Everything you call dirt is worthy your notice as students of chemistry. Analyse it! It will separate into very different elements. Dirt makes corn; corn makes bread and meat; and that makes a very pretty young lady that I saw one of you kissing last night. So, after all, you were kissing dirt, particularly if she whitened her skin with chalk or Fuller's earth. There is no dirt, gentlemen, what is dirt. Though I may be rubbing such stuff upon the beautiful skin of a young lady is a dirty practice. "Why, it is powder, I think, is made of bismuth, and nothing but dirt."

A Cure for Drunkenness.—The London Spectator mentions a curious remedy, now in use in Swedish hospitals, for that form of [illegible] which exhibit itself in an uncontrollable appetite for alcoholic stimulants, which we commend to those of our readers who profess an interest in the fate of the unfortunate drunkard. The success is thus described:

"We will suppose that the liquor that the patient is addicted to drinking is the common one in the country—say gin. When he enters the hospital for treatment, he is supplied with his favorite drink, and with no other; if another is also is given to him, or any other food flavored with gin. He is in Heaven—the atmosphere is redolent with his favorite fume! His room is scented with gin; his clothes, everything around him; even the mouthful he eats or drinks; everything he touches; every zephyr that steals into his room brings to him still gin. He begins to grow tired of it; begins to find the opposition intolerable; he cannot bear the sight or scent of it longs for emancipation; and at last emancipated; he issues into fresh air, scarcely dreading nothing so much as the return of the loathed persecutor which would not allow him an hour's rest in his confinement. This, we are to say our contemporary, "appears to be a thoroughly effectual; so effectual, that those who deplored their uncontrollable propensity have petitioned for admission to the hospital in order to be cured; and they have been [illegible]

Kossuth and George Sanders.—Kossuth has addressed a letter to the Germans of the United States in relation to the rejection of Mr. George Sanders by the Senate. He lectures them for this act, over which the "despotical powers" of Europe are in high spirits, and considers it as a practical retraction and an entire revocation of the principles contained in the inaugural address of the President, and in Koszta note." He hopes, however, that the Germans will "so work in the press, as by their meeting, in such way that the will of the people may manifest itself, and that the blow struck involuntarily by the Senate may be made good again, and the carcastic laws of the despots shall be changed into a true code of European republicans." That he hopes will be done by the President again proposing Mr. Sanders and the Senate revoking its act. The letter is Kossuth all out, and shows that he is as far as ever from understanding the true sentiment or the institutions of this country.

Mr. George Sanders also publishes a letter in the New York Herald comisenting upon his rejection by the Senate, which he ascribes to the influence of Linn Boyd. His describes the calmness he has lost characteristically as follows:

"This office is, all things considered, the most desirable in the gift of the President, especially for an active, patriotic American, who will gladly take all the opportunities offers for giving his countrymen information of many important interests centering here and ramifying to all parts of the world.

"It is worth not less than fifteen thousand dollars a year. I hope the cleverest fellow in America will get it."

Newspapers.—A man eats up a pound of sugar, and the pleasure he has enjoyed is ended: but the information he gets from a newspaper is treasured up in the mind, to be used whenever occasion or inclination calls for it. A newspapor is not the wisdom of a man or of men; it is the wisdom of the age—of past and to[illegible]. A family without a newspaper is at least half an age behind the times in general information; besides, they never think much, and find much to think about. And there are the little ones growing up in ignorance without a taste for reading.

Besides all those evils, there's the wife, who when her work is done, has to sit down with her hands in her lap, and nothing to amuse her mind from the toils and cares of the domicile. Who would be without a newspaper? [Franklin.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: I take this method of informing all persons, that are concerned, that the outstanding debts and accounts due at New York—from persons within the bounds of the Methodist E. C. South—were, on the settlement made between the Northern and Southern Commissions, on the 5th December last, formally assigned to me as appointee—and are in my hands for collection—and can be settled at the Richmond Depository at any time; also to suggest that persons—who are desirous of closing up their old accounts—will have a good opportunity to do so, or arranged to have it done, through the delegates to the General Conference, at Columbus, Georgia, in May next, and thereby relieve the agent from any further trouble in future. Yours truly, JNO. EARLY.

Preachers of the Alabama Conference, who attained "Summons' on Baptism," from Mobile, are requested to account to Dr. J. Hamilton for the same, as he desires to have the funds in hand by General Conference.

The following is the report of the interments in the cemeteries of the city for the month ending at 6 o'clock A. CHERRY PECTORAL.—See in our advertising columns a notice of this medicine. We are not in the habit of saying much in relation to such medicines as are generally seen going the rounds of newspapers; but in relation to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, we feel that we can say something in its favor with propriety, from the fact that we have tried it. A young man in our office has also used it, and in both his and our own case it proved most beneficial. [American Presbyterian, Greenville, Tenn.

Arrival of the Steamship Daniel Webster.

The steamship Daniel Webster, Captain Womack, from San Juen del Norte, arrived at this port Thursday morning, bringing 121 passengers.

The Star of the West sailed for New York with 450 passengers and $8,000,000 in treasure.

The road leading from Virgin Bay to San Juan del Sur is in excellent order. There is no sickness in the country at this time. The English mail steamer Dee arrived at San Juan from Chagres on the 29th. The Italian brig Prudentia arrived on the 28th from Genoa, with liquors and fancy goods.

Another new and very commodious steamer for San Juan river will be launched at San Juan in a few days. Her draught of water will be but four teen inches after having on board 200 passengers with their baggage. She is to be sailed after the Company's efficient general agent for the Isthmus, "I. Newton Scott."

Among the passengers by the Daniel Webster, is Bishop Soule. The following is a list of other passengers:

IMPORTANT FROM ACAPULCO.

Later from the Isthmus, South America and Australia.

The U. S. Mail steamship El Dorado, Captain Alfred G. Grey, arrived here Wednesday evening at 9 o'clock, bringing the California mails, $34,000 in gold dust, for the Louisiana State Bank, and 128 passengers. The G. Golden Gate, which left San Francisco 16th, made the passage down to Panama in ten days

The steam ship Cortes was to sail for San Juan the 15th.

The last news from Walker's Expedition is up to the 3d of March. It was carried to San Francisco by the U. S. steamer Columbus, which left San Diego on the 11th of March. Walker, at the head of a force which had dwindled down to ninety men by desertion, was at San Vincento. The accounts of his proceedings are contradictory. It is, however, a fact that a few of the natives had been induced to sign a declaration of independence, acknowledging Walker as President of the new Republic. One statement states that the proceeding was voluntary on the part of the natives, and that everything had been done properly. T. F. Nelson and Arthur Morrison, of Illinois, were arraigned and tried before a court-martial for attempting to desert, and with a view to steal and rob. After a session of three days they were, on the 3d of March, convicted and shot. Theodore Ryan, charged with the same offense, received fifty lashes, and E. C. Barnes twenty-five, and were then drummed out of the camp. Major Frederick Emory, Secretary of State, and Senor Cordova, one of Walker's right-hand men, having gone to San Diego, were there arrested by the officers of the U. S. ship Portsmouth, by order of Capt. Dornin, and brought on the Columbus to San Francisco for trial. On arriving there, they were discharged on bail. The trial of Col. Watkies, who was previously arrested, commenced in the U. S. District Court, at San Francisco, on the 10th ult. The Portsmouth is observing a vigilant guard along the lower coast.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

The San Francisco Herald of the 16th contains the following general intelligence:

On the 9th inst., Col. Babbitt, bearer of resolutions adopted at Great Salt Lake City, in relation to the Pacific Railroad, arrived in San Francisco, eighteen days out. He is on his way to Washington City. On the 9th of February he came across Col. Fremont and his party, who were on their way to San Francisco by the Central Route. Col. F. had been caught in the snow, and had lost several men from starvation and cold. He was reduced almost to destitution, but by means of the assistance rendered by Col. Babbitt, he believed he would be able to complete his journey by the route originally contemplated. The place at which he was left by Col. B. is 20 miles from Little Salt Lake, in Parawnn Valley, and 100 miles south of Great Salt Lake.

Lieut. Mowry, of the 3d U. S. Artillery, is also the bearer to Washington of the first information of the surveys of two routes for the Pacific Railroad from the Rocky Mountains to Puget's Sound. Both routes will be reported by Gov. Stephens, of Washington Territory, entirely practicable.

Indian difficulties have again broken out in our State, and in different points in the North large numbers of them have been massacred by the whites, who pursued them after their thieving aggressions and shot them down without mercy. Among those killed were several squaws. The U. S. troops are kept constantly employed in the Indian country.

The agitation of the election of U. S. Senator this winter, has been for the time quieted in the Legislature, by the indefinite postponement in the Senate of the bill providing for bringing on the election, as well as the whole subject.

Ex-Gov. H. S. Foote has published a card in the Herald, declaring that it is his intention to take no part in the local politics of the State now or hereafter, under any circumstances which can possibly arise.

A combination of River Steamboats has been formed with a capital of $2,500,000, governed by a company organized in accordance with the laws of the State. Most of the steamboats running on the bay have been bought up or taken into the combination.

Capt. Aubrey brought across the Plains to San Jose, 15,000 sheep, with a loss of but 500.

The most flattering accounts pour in from all quarters of the mining region. The recent rains have enabled the miners to go to work everywhere, and accounts are uniformly encouraging. During the week ending March 3d, Wells, Fargo & Co. transmitted from their office in Sonora, in Tuolumne county, to this city, 2087 ounces of gold dust, and during the week following 5505 ounces. On Tuesday night last, the same Express brought down from Sacramento $197,597. This looks as though the influx of gold had again commenced, and it is to be hoped it is the harbinger of better times.

Trade of every kind is still very much depressed in the city.

John D. Whipple, from Clinton, N. Y., was accidently killed by a friend at the Crescent City Hotel, who discharged a pistol at him without knowing that it was loaded.

Great dissatisfaction exists in consequence of the operation of the new system of grades, and workmen have been enjoined from proceeding further with the grading of one of the streets.

Capt Chas. Gilman, who was wounded at Ensenada, and returned to this city, has had his leg amputated.

There have been a number of failures in the city, which, however, produced but little excitement.

The Mexican Consul has advertised to give a free passage to one thousand men who will agree to go to Guaymas and fight the Indians. It is understood that no Americans will be received into this new force.

Mr George Kerr, one of the proprietors of the Times and Transcript newspaper, died recently in Stockton. Wm. M. Eddy, late Surveyor-General of the State, is also dead.

The Chinese still figure prominently in the Recorder's Court. They have recently become a great pest to the city. A few days since they had another grand celebration.

A slight shock of an earthquake was felt in this city a few nights since.

At a vote of the citizens of Marysville, 864 were in favor and 32 opposed to the subscription of $300,000 to the capital stock of the Marysville and Benicia Railroad, and 911 in favor and 32 opposed to a subscription of $300,000 to the Marysville and Nevada Plank Road.

THE ISTHMUS.

LIEUT. STRAIN'S PARTY SAFE.—News has been received at Panama that Lieut. Strain's party, or at least the most of them, are safe, having been found at the mouth of the Sacramento River, on the Pacific side, by H. B. M.'s steamer Virago. The Virago was daily expected at Panama with the party on board. The Panama Star says that Lieut. Strain and his men had been forty-nine days in getting from the Atlantic to Point Yavisa, near the outlet of the Chucunaquo River on the Pacific—that after being out fifteen days from the Atlantic, their provisions became entirely exhausted, after which they had to subsist principally upon the nut of the trupa, a species of the palm. Lieut. Strain, accompanied by two of his men, then set out in search of provisions and boats, which he found at the junction of the Savannun and Lura Rivers, and obtaining the necessary supplies, hastened back.

The nineteen men left by Lieut. Strain on the Chucunaquo, were mostly disabled from sickness and debility. The sufferings of the whole party must have been intense, especially those of Lieut. S. and his two companions, who, in their weakened and nearly exhausted state, had to out their way for four weeks down the banks of the Chucunaque River.

Lieut. Strain reports that the Indians habiting the route over which he traveled, always fled on his approach, first setting fire to the ranches or huts, destroying their canoes and carrying off all stock and provisions. At one of their settlements he found the remains of no less than five canoes.

The Indian murderers of the four men belonging to the Virago, it is said have been discovered.

Much excitement exists at Aspinwall on account of the imposition of certain taxes on the profits of American vessels bringing passengers to or from that port. Capt. Hollins, of the U. S. sloop-of-war Albany, had addressed a letter to the Governor of the Province, stating that he should resist all attempts to recover the tax; to which the Governor replied that the tax would be immediately enrried out.

So, a collision may ere this have taken place between Capt. Hollins and the Government authorities.

The health of the Isthmus still continues good. The Railroad Company are pushing the work on as fast as possible, and every one speaks in the highest terms with respect to the comfortable way in which the Isthmus can now be crossed.

SOUTH AMERICA.

By the arrival of the steamship Bogota at Panama on the 20th ult., the Panama papers have dates from Valparaiso to March and from Callao to the 10th. The Herald says:

PERU.—From the Peruvian papers we gather there but very little information relative to the revolutionary movements now going on in that country, headed by Gen. Ramon Castilla and Don Domingo Elias.

From all we can gather from the papers, as well as from private information, we are assured that the party of General Castilla is every day growing stronger, and that the rule of President Echenique is drawing quickly to a close. Arias and Tacna have declared against the Government; Arequipa has now, for some time, held out against Gen. Torrico, who won't fight. Gen. Moran is most opportunely sick, and the Government is on its last legs.

President Echenique is still at Lima, which place he dares not leave, and it is thought that Gen. Castilla will march against the capital, when it will declare in his favor.

In the meantime "peste" rages with increased violence in Callao and Lima, defies the efforts of the physicians; numbers die daily, and many physicians have fallen victims to it.

General Daniel Florence O'Leary, for many years British Charge d'Affaires at Bogota, died recently.

General O'Leary was of Irish descent, and was one of those who, in 1818, came out to this country to aid the people in the war of independence. From that time, until 1824, he was constantly engaged in the field, and took an active part in some of the severest battles. He was aide-de-camp to Bolivar, whose confidence he possessed, and gradually rose to the rank of General in the Colombian service.

AUSTRALIA.

The Panama Herald has received by way of Callao, dates from Melbourne, Australia, to the 12th January. The Melbourne Argus contains a very strong leading article against the new Governor, Sir William Dennison, whom it calls a "mere gander," and concludes by saying, "if we are to be insulted by his presence, the worst fate to which he could be sentenced would be infinitely too good for one who has injured us as he has done." In speaking of immigration and labor, it notices the temporary stoppage in the emigration from Great Britain, and after reasoning upon the cause and consequence thereof, comes to the conclusion, that, "there is ample room and abundant work, first rate wages, and a certain prospect for every industrious artizan and laborer who chooses to come to it, and there is hardly any assignable limit to the number of such workers who could find immediate employment in it."

The gold market remains dull, and the price may be quoted at from £3 15s 6d. to £3 16s 9d. At the Bendigo markets flour was quoted at £42 to £45 per ton.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Perseverance, Captain Lawless, we have received Galveston papers of the 31st ult.

THE INDIAN OUTRAGES CONTINUED.—From an extra of the San Antonia Ledger, we learn that on the 9th, a party of Lipans attacked a train of Mexican carts loaded with goods for Hon. H. P. Bee, within three miles of Laredo, killing one man and carrying off a portion of the goods. Their evident object was plunder, as they told the Mexicans to run, which they all did, except the one that was shot, who went for his gun, which was in his cart. To prevent his shooting, an Indian shot an arrow into him. The Mexicans fled to Laredo, when a company of citizens were speedily assembled and on the way to the scene of attack, which prevented the Indians from carrying off many of the goods. Lieut Wetter, who had just come in from a scout, went in pursuit, and followed the Indians about fifty-five miles, when they reached the mountains. In their flight, the Indians dropped their guns, blankets, and some of the articles they had stolen.

Another party, supposed to be Lipans, came within six hundred yards of the town of Laredo, on the 12th, killed one horse and drove off twenty head. Several Mexicans, who were out herding cattle, are missing, and it is feared they have either been killed or captured. The rancheros from above and below are coming into Laredo for protection. Nearly all the military from Forts McIntosh and Ewell, were out in pursuit. No intelligence had been received from them at the time this express left Laredo, which was on the 13th.

Mrs. Wall, wife of a soldier in one of the El Paso trains, was killed by the Indians at the spring near the first crossing of the Limpia. Wall and his wife and child had strolled off a short distance from the train, when they were suddenly surrounded by Indians. Wall, being unarmed, fled to the train. When the Indians attempted to place Mrs. Wall on one of their horses, she screamed and resisted. Fearing the arrival of succor, the Indians shot and scalped her, and were in the act of carrying off the child, when they were charged upon by Messrs. Cameron and Dunn, and caused to fly without their victim. Shortly afterwards a party of Indians were seen making off with a scalp, with long hair, on the point of a lance.

The editor of the Galveston News, writing from San Antonio under date of March 15, says: "For the last two months, the depredations of the Indians have been incessant. Seven citizens of Webb county have been murdered, and the Indians, on every occasion, have escaped with impunity. There are over five hundred infantry in the garrison, at Fort McIntosh, but they are altogether unfit to cope with the Indians, who come down unexpectedly, well mounted, and commit their depredations even in sight of the Fort. The General Government have made no provisions for horses, equipages, etc., and the whole country for twenty miles above and below the town is left altogether unprotected. The Indians are known to be Lipans, and are supposed to be some of the same party which lately attacked the Rancho of H. P. Bee, and drove off about eighty head of mustangs from Roque's camp.

"A public meeting of the citizens of Webb county was held at Laredo on the 11th, for the purpose of taking some steps towards redressing their grievances. Resolutions were unanimously carried, to forward the proceedings to the Governor, with a request that he will have the question of the guilt or innocence of the Lipans inquired into, and that the facts of the report be made known to the United States Government, and an urgent appeal be also made for a sufficient mounted force."

A new Spanish paper is shortly to be published in San Antonio.

Two men named Gadson have been sentenced in Lagrange county to the Penitentiary, for horse-stealing; one for five and the other seven years.

The Henderson Flag of Our Union, speaking of state of education in Texas, says:

"We have about four hundred and eighty Common Schools in the State. These schools are in charge of teachers who are competent generally to bestow a knowledge of the rudimentary branches of practical education. We have twenty-one High Schools and Colleges chartered by our Legislature, eight Female Institutes and thirteen male. Nine of these are classical in their course, and consequently we are not dependent upon our enlightened sister States for the accomplishment of our youth."

The Galveston News states that the lumber business is rapidly on the increase. The amount it thinks, which has been brought to that city during the past year from the Sabine, Trinity and San Jacinto rivers, and Buffalo Bayou, will not fall short of 1,500,000 feet.

The Galveston News is agitating the subject of a daily mail from that city to New Orleans, and proposes that the mail be carried by way of Berwick's Bay, which it insists will shorten the distance about one-third. It says the Opelousas Railroad Company have determined to put a line of steamers between Galvestou and Berwick, to connect with the cars on the rail road, which touches that bay, so as to make an uninterrupted line between Galveston and New Orleans. The railroad is now completed, and the cars running to within about 20 miles of Berwick's Bay, and will reach that bay by August next, distant from New Orleans 81 miles.

By the present route, Galveston is 455 miles distant, and 18 hours is occupied in the passage; by the proposed route the distance, 320 miles, and the time occupied in the passage will not be above 28 hours.

Details of the News by the Africa.

(From the New York Herald, 28th ult.)

The Cunard mail steamship Africa, Captain Harrison, from Liverpool, arrived at 9 o'clock this morning. She sailed thence on Saturday morning, the 11th inst., at half past 10 o'clock. She has had a very stormy passage.

There is nothing new from the seat of war.

Some excitement has been occasioned in commercial circles by a notification made by the Earl of Clarendon to British merchants in Riga, informing them (under date of February 11th) that, in the event of war, all Russian produce will be liable to capture and confiscation, even if it be the bona fide property of British subjects domiciled in Russia, and even if shipped in neutral vessels.

The messenger conveying the ultimatum of France and England to the Czar, requiring him to withdraw his troops from Turkey within a specified period, left Vienna on Tuesday, the 7th, for St. Petersburg. Neither the Austrian nor the Prussian Government has joined the Western Powers in this act. Austria is still exclusively intent on securing the tranquility of the Schwen on both sides of the Danube. This is the leading idea of an official document published at Vienna on Tuesday, the 7th, in which the demands made by France and England on Russia are characterized as thoroughly just, and in accordance with the interests of Europe. It is then added that to the last (that is, to the present date) Austria has done her duty to Europe, and now the sole duty of her Government is to maintain the interests of the Empire.

It is stated that the Czar had sent what purported to be proposals of peace to Vienna, the reception of which at first gave rise to hopes of an accommodation. The London News says that when the proposals were examined, it was found that they contained all the inadmissible demands of previous Russian projects. The representatives of France, England, Austria and Prussia decided that the new project does not come up to the requisitions of the last protocol to which they had set their names, and that it could not, therefore, be entertained.

THE INSURRECTION IN GREECE.—The insurrection in Epirus has been stayed by the energetic measures, not only of the Turkish authorities, but by the Representatives of the Western Powers. A letter from Malta, of the 3d, says that several of the chiefs of the revolt have given in their submission. Zamit Pasha was to leave Constantinople February 25th, with 4000 men for Salonica.

The Queen of Greece is favorable to the insurgents and their cause, and her influence exceeds that of the King.

MOVEMENTS OF THE ALLIED AND RUSSIAN FLEETS.—From Constantinople the 26th, it is mentioned that a French ship of war had been detailed to quiet some excitement at Samos.

The Caradoc naval steamer is surveying in the Sea of Marmora. The British steamer Niger had left for Alba.

Letters from Odessa, of February 18th, state that the Russian fleet was still at anchor at Sebastopol, but from time to time, when weather permitted, a few ships quitted the port to cruise along the coast. The commanders have orders not to attack French or English ships, but to resist if attacked. Trebisonde letters of February 19th, say that a portion of the Russian squadron was then at Suchum-kale.

The allied fleets remain at Beycos Bay.

THE BRITISH BALTIC FLEET.—Queen Victoria was to review the fleet at Spithead, on Saturday 11th, immediately after which, the following ships, comprising the first division of the fleet, was to weigh anchor and make all speed for a point of rendezvous, known only to the Admiral in command:

St. Jean d'Acre, 101 guns, flag-ship of Sir C. Napier, Capt. Hon H. Keppel; Princess Royal, 81, Capt. Lord C Paget; Royal George, 120, Capt. Codrington; Edinburg, 58, Rear-Admiral Chads; Blenheim, 60, Capt F. T. Pelham; Hogue, 60, Capt. Ramsay; Ajax, Capt. Warden; Impericuse, 51, Capt. Watson; Arrogant, 47, Capt. Yelverton; Trebure, 30, Capt. Carnegie; Amphcon, 34, Capt. Ryder; Leopard, 18, Capt. Gilbard; Frolic, 16, Capt. Nolloth; Dragon, Capt. Wilcox. Rear-Admiral Corry will proceed with the second division as soon as the ships can be got ready. In the second division are the Neptune, 120, flag ship; Prince Regent, 90; Boscawen, 70; Valorous, 16; Odin, 16, Bull dog, 6; Duke of Wellington, 130; Cressy, 80; Majestic, 80; James Watt, 91; Miranda, 14, etc.

Mimic rifles have been distributed to the marines. A detachment of sappers and miners was on board, for shore service. Advices from the surveying ship Hecla, dated Nyberg, Holstein, March 3, state that the service of surveying for the fleets had been performed satisfactorily, and that the Norwegian authorities had been quite cordial in their attentions. It is surmised that the destination of the fleet is Kiel. France will send ten ships of the line.

The greatest enthusiasm prevailed both afloat and on shore. Thousands of persons from London and elsewhere crowded into Portsmouth, to witness the sailing of the fleet.

It is said that 5000 British troops will accompany or follow the fleets to the Baltic.

The English regiment known as "The King's Own," was embarked at Leith, 8th, on board the steamer Golden Fleece. Prince Albert has reviewed the artillery at Woolwich, of whom 1060 are to be immediately embarked. They take out a siege train. A large number of ambalances are being prepared, owing to the suggestion of the eminent surgeon, Mr. Guthrie.

The Seventy-seventh regiment of infantry embarked at Liverpool, on Friday, 10th, on board the steamer Kangaroo, and were to sail on the 11th, for Turkey.

PREPARATIONS IN FRANCE.—Twelve steamers were being fitted at Toulon to convey French troops to the East. The first division was to leave on the 20th inst.; the second division on the 15th of April. Prince Napoison, with a force of chasseurs, was to proceed to the Greek frontier. Gen. Moore and forty English officers were at Marseilles on the 5th.

Marshal St. Arnaud's pay, as commander of the French forces in the East, is to be 500,000 francs, with 300,000 francs for outfit.

A petition is under signature at Marseilles, praying that England and France will decline to issue letters of marque, and that they will treat Russian privateers as pirates.

SPAIN.—Gen. Jose de la Concha has arrived at Bordeaux. The remainder of the Saragossa insurgents have found their way into France, and thus has the latest attempt at revolt in Spain completely fallen to the ground. A great many arrests are known to have taken place throughout Spain, although few are made public. A cypher found in possession of Don Carlos Vargas, a Carlist brigadier, has given the clue to the ramifications of the plot. In consequence of the information thus acquired by this Government, Gen. Manzano, who was with Concha, has been sent prisoner to Puerto Rico.

M. Tergot will probably be recalled ere long. His influence is waning before that of Mr. Soulé—so they say.

Government has succeeded in borrowing 20,000,000 reals, at 12 per cent, to meet pressing exigencies.

Senor Isturitz, Spanish Minister at London, is recalled to Madrid, to confer with his government. There have been, for some time, rumors of coldness between the British and French and the Spanish Governments, and the recall of M. Isturitz has, by some papers, been explained into a sort of breaking off relations. This, however, is considered not to be the case.

ITALY.—A letter from Turin states on the 3d inst., the Government made an important communication, with closed doors, to the majority of the Chamber. The purport of it is said to be that Austria and France demand from Sardinia guarantees of tranquility.

On the 3d, the Execution of three criminals was made the occasion of a public demonstration to demand a reprieve. Placards on the walls called on the citizens to "assemble en masse in front of the palace to support a pressure on the Government. Some few arrests were made, among them M. Villa, one of the editors of the Voce Della Liberta. Quiet was speedily restored, and the three criminals, whose fate was made the pretext for the movement, were executed in the Place des Armes.

On the 8th the Minister of Finance presented to the Chamber the budget of 1855, and proposed for a loan of 85,000,000 francs.

The carnival at Rome this year was more brilliant than any season since 1848.

CUBA.—The length of the Island of Cuba in the shortest line from East to West, is 680 miles. In its narrowest part 26 miles broad. In the broadest part 135 miles wide. The main island contains 45,530 square English miles. Its relative position from other points is stated to be as follows: From the Southern part of Florida to the most Northern part of Cuba, the distance is 113 miles. The distance from the extreme South-west point of Cuba to the nearest point of Yucatan is 132 miles; the Eastern point of Cuba is 40 miles from the nearest point of Hayti, and the nearest point between Cuba and Jamaica is 87 miles.

The population of the whole island, by a census taken in 1841, was 1,007,624, of which the white population numbered 418,291, the free colored 152,838, the slaves 426,495. In 1846, it was found that while the white population had increased in 5 years by 7556, the aggregate population of Cuba was only 898,762, a decrease of 100,872 among the free colored and slaves in that period of time. The increase of white population has been in the country, the towns and villages, while in the larger cities it has decreased. In the city of Havana, in 1841, the total population, excluding the garrison, inmates of prisons and hospitals, was 135,740, of which 66,784 were white. This number had fallen in 1846 to 105,751, of which 53,044 were whites. The suburbs contained 25,010 inhabitants in 1841, and in 1846 only 24,020. The entire population of city and suburbs thus fell from 160,750 to 128,597, or twenty per cent. In Matanzas, during the same period of five years, the white population had fallen from 10,301 to 10,030, the free colored from 4041 to 2738, the slave from 5778 to 4159, and the total population from 19,121 to 16,986. It is thought that the slave population is really larger than is set down, as the interest of the planters and their fears of taxation tempt them to conceal the real number of their slaves.

The agricultural and other products of Cuba in 1849, were valued at nearly $60,000,000, as follows: Garden fruit, $14,839,050; sugar, $13,639,224; esculent vegetables and fodder, $6,067,080; tobacco, $5,042,829; coffee, $2,206,131; Indian corn, $1,884,982; charcoal, $1,750,110; cedar, mahogany and other woods, $1,711,193; molasses, $1,462,728; other agricultural productions, $3,278,175; total value of agricultural productions, $57,972,202. Beef, $3,605,780; pork, $1,346,056; eggs, $1,156,880; birds, $1,074,210; milk, $326,040; hides, $180, 280; mutton, $120,000. Total value of the dairy and domestic animals, $7,819,200; agricultural productions, $57,972,202; grand total, $59,791,572.

The population is taxed annually to nearly $24,000,000 by assessments levied upon every species of industry and amusement. The taxes go to support an army of 20,000 troops, and officials sent from Spain to govern the island. Cuba has been denied a representation in the Spanish Cortes, and the Captain General is absolute in his decrees. The press is under a rigid censorship, and the citizens under many vexations interferences, exactions and restraints.

AN INTERESTING RELIC.—There has been presented to Mr. Johnson, at the Agricultural Rooms, by the Hon. John M. Botts, of Virginia, a very interesting relic of ancient times—a powder-horn, on which is very finely engraved a map giving the courses of the Mohawk and Hudson rivers, etc., from Albany to Schenectady, Fort Stanwix, Oswego and Ningara; and from Albany, by Halfmoon, Saratoga, etc., to Lake George, Lake Champlain and Ticonderoga. The date engraved on the horn is July 20, 1759. The British coat-of-arms is very finely engraved, and a soldier in uniform and an Indian warrior. The following places are designated with engravings of forts, block-houses, etc. The names are given as engraved: "From Albany—Schunkady, Johuston, Hunter, Stonraby, Fort Heury, Ft. Barkmar, German Flats, Ft Stanwix, Ft. Ittills, Canada Creek, Lake Oneida, 3 Rivers, Falso, Oswego, Lake Ontario, Fort Niagara, July 26, 1759. From Albany—Halfmoon, Stillwater, Saratoga, Royal Block Hous, Ft Edward, Lake George, South Bay, Ticonderoga, Lake Champlain." The coat of arms, with lion and unicorn, is very finely drawn; at the bottom: "Dieu et Mon Droit;" on the shield: "Honi soit qui mahy Pense." New York is represented on it also, with shipping, fort and windmill. The style of the work shows it to have been done by some person skilled in drawing. A brother of Mr. Botts obtained this horn from a wood-chopper in a woodman's cabin, in the woods of Virginia, who had received it from his father, and he from his ancestor, who obtained it from an old soldier in the early wars on our frontiers. GUM ARABIC.—In Morocco, about the middle of November, that is, after a rainy season, which begins in July, a gummy juice exudes spontaneously from the trunk and principal branches of the acacia tree. In about fifteen days it thickens in the furrow, down which it runs, either in vermicular (or worm) shape, or commonly assuming the form of oval and round tears, about the size of a pigeon's egg, of different colors, as they belong to the white or red gum tree. About the middle of December the Moors encamp on the border of the forest, and the harvest lasts six weeks.

The gum is packed in very large sacks of leather, and brought on the backs of bullocks and camels to certain ports, where it is sold to the French and English merchants. It is highly nutricious. During the whole time of harvest, of the journey, and of the fair, the Moors of the desert live almost entirely upon it, and experience proves that six ounces of gum are sufficient for the support of a man twenty-four hours.

DARIEN SHIP CANAL.—A correspondent of the Freeman's Journal indicates Mandinga Bay—said to be a fine harbor on the Atlantic side—and thence to Chepi, as the location most likely to attract the next survey. The distance across is reported by the Indians as twenty-nine miles, though in the correctness of this estimate he has no confidence. The most formidable obstruction on the route might be overcome by tunneling the highest elevation; but to do this effectually would require eight miles of tunnel! Even this, he supposes, would make the route preferable to the pass at Nicaragua, which has been pronounced feasible for a canal at a cost of £7,500,000. The calculation is every way a vague one, but not unworthy of being tested by actual survey.

A CURIOUS CASE.—The Cincinnati (Ohio) Reporter mentions the re-marriage, at that place, on the 11th of February, of Mr. Elias Jones and Mrs. Delia Swap, the same parties having been married in 1822, against the wishes of relations. Previous to the birth of their second son, in the absence of Mr. Jones, his wife was induced by her relations to desert her home. Mr. Jones immediately went to sea, when Mrs. Jones, supposing her husband to be dead, married Mr. Swap, and became the mother of two children. After a space of twenty-five years, Mr. Jones returned, and learned that his two sons were living, and that his wife was then a widow. Mr. Jones, with his two sons, paid a visit to the partner of his youth, and they were re-married, as above stated.

The Philadelphia Ledger has an average daily circulation of 55,000 copies. It was started eighteen years ago, with no capital but the energy of its proprietors, and now yields a revenue equal to the interest of one million dollars. Its circulation is considerably larger than that of any other daily journal in the world. Notwithstanding this the Ledger is printed on dirty, brown paper, and presents the worst typographical appearance of any of the first class dailies in the nation.

THE NORTHWEST.—The Cincinnati Railroad Journal, speaking of the rapid growth of the Northwest, includes Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota in the classification, and thus glances at the probable population. In 1800, 50 240; 1810, 260,042; 1820, 792,719; 1830, 1,470,028; 1840, 2,567,840; 1850, 4,720,683; 1860, (estimated) 8,168,300; 1870, 10,167,900. In less than twenty years, in all probability, the seven Northwestern States will contain a population nearly equal to that of the whole United States in 1840, and will contain as many miles of railway as the United States now have.

Mr. Jonathan Harrington died at Lexington, Mass., on Sunday, the 26th ult., aged ninety-five years. Mr. Harrington was the last survivor of that gallant band of patriots who opposed the progress of the British troops on the plains of Lexington, on the memorable 19th of April, 1775.

LINES ON THE LOST NAVIGATOR.—SIR JOHN FRANKLIN AND HIS COMPANIONS.

[illegible] sea,
So [illegible] beside the light
From [illegible], where day with silent might

Is [illegible] still appears,
Hoping on gleaming the long-lost brave
To love's fond gaze, the last mute relic wave
Which their [illegible] great rears.

While in the long hall home,
The mother, wife and children anxious wait,
Oft smooth the fireside chair, oft stir the grate,
As fo' at last they've come.

Prepared, he bade them stand,
Amidst the gates of Night, and to the hall
Where song eternal hills, and sun and all
That dormed yet diamond band,

Bounded, but without delay,
They pass through Death, yet never reach the tomb,
Imperishably fixed they wait the doom
Of their still life-like clay.

The [illegible] come and go,
Like [illegible] embalmed, they're resting there,
Each in the [illegible] sepulchre,
And [illegible] of snow.

Yet Ocean tells their knell,
From shore to shore the solemn [illegible] assemble,
And with its voice of many waters blends
Their dirge [illegible].

And the winds wail for them,
For many a breeze which loves the seamen brave,
By shelly beach, or in its cave-like cave,
Now sings their requiem.

The secret of their fate
Shall, when the sea gives up its dead, be shown,
And God [illegible] judgment by his great White Throne
The world shall congregate.

THE BIG BUCK.

I met my friend Jack N. at a wedding in South Kentucky. It was a rollicking festivity, at the house of a wealthy tobacco-planter, giving away his last and youngest child to a frank, manly-looking young fellow, who was, as usual, a second, or third cousin, for your true Virginian never marries out of the family," and every planter in South Kentucky was a Virginian, of course.

Amidst the merry crowd, I very soon made out the tall, lank figure of my friend Jack N., whom I had not met for several years. Indeed it would be difficult to mistake him in any crowd, for he was as lean and as sharp as a rail-splitter, with his beaklike nose, and pro- [illegible] high-blooded [illegible], and with his head thrown back in a hearty, fox-hunting guffaw, there was something indescribably keen, game and dashing in his appearance.

I expected, when I approached him I found him in the midst of a glowing description of his last run with his dogs, and closely surrounded by an eager auditory of young men, for Jack was no great hand with the women.

"Spot" has just seized a big "treeprong" buck by the throat, and brought him to his knees, when Jack caught my eye. The [illegible] of "Music" "Sound," and "Rattler" died away upon his tongue, in thick-coming ut terance, as he stared at me for a moment, of doubtful recognition.

"Hallo! Charlie W.! by old Bell-Mouth!" (Jack always swore by his favorite slow-track dog, Bell-Mouth, who never gave tongue on a false trail.) "Why, my boy, how are you? Just in time—the bucks are just in the 'blue.' The dogs are as lean as I am, and as fierce as [illegible] tigers for a chase!"

"I'm your man!—but lean as you are, Jack, why, you make them carry weight in a high wind, don't you? Glad to see you, by my faith! They say you've got the finest pack west of the Alleghanies, now?"

"West of the Alleghanies! Pshaw! man, nothing to equal them, on top of the sod! Twenty-five, all told, with throats like the trump of resurrection! When they open in full blast, they make the hills skip like young lambs—and the trees head before the sound, like in a hurricane! I tell you, they make the Mississippi walk upstream, and the catfish stand straight up on their tails, out of the water, to listen to them."

"That 'll do, Jack! When do you go back home?"

"Start in the morning—you'll be all ready?—Won't let you off under three weeks—We have the cream of the hunting season now?"

"Won't promise for all that time—but I will be ready for you in the morning!"

"That's a good boy! bring nothing but your rifle—if you want birds, I have guns enough, and Pete's nose is as keen as a brier."

A [illegible] days' ride through the wild and pic- [illegible]turesque "Barrens" brought us to the banks of the Mississippi River. Here we entered upon a [illegible] deep stretch of land, covered with the most tremendous forest I ever saw. It extends from Columbus, or the "Iron Banks" as they are called, up some thirty miles, nearly parallel with the present course of the Mississippi—though greatly elevated above the present bottom—and constituting what is thought to be the old bank of the river.

From seven to ten miles in width, this singular tongue of land is without a single inhabitant, except the settlement of the N.'s about a mile from Columbus—though composing some of the richest land of the State—from the fact of its being an old military reserve, and covered, as Jack said, "six deep with titles,"—which had sufficed to keep at bay, even the unscrupulous squatters—so that it was literally given up to the possession of wild animals, and consequently, at that time, the greatest hunting-ground within a hundreds of miles.

Here, the N.'s—who were a wealthy and aristocratic "Old Dominion" stock—had opened a large plantation, immediately upon the river bank, where it descended three hundred feet, perpendicularly to the water.

From the portico of the Mansion House placed upon this lofty perch, you could command a clear view of the majestic river to its junction with the Ohio, thirty miles above. This was a [illegible] sight, you may rest assured, when sometimes twenty steamboats in view at a time—rolling like huge omnibuses along the "Broadway of Creation," as Jack, who had once visited New York, afterwards insisted upon calling his favorite river.

Such a [illegible] bulldog, as greeted us when we split at the gate! The hounds had first discovered us, and to the shout of their master, gave us a reverberating echo. Then the pleaninnies came pouring in sooty legions out of the cabins of the outbuildings "quarter" which flanked the mansion in the back-ground—their black, shiny faces stretched in yells and grins, exhibiting an ivory ecstasy of delight at the return of "Massa Jack"—while the hounds nearly tumbled us into the dirt with their rude gambols. In a moment the whole plantation seemed alive, and Jack's favorite hunter Lara, which had the freedom of the yard, came prancing into the melee.

The ladies of the hospitable mansion met us at the door, and I was greeted with that gentle and high-bred frankness, for which the true Virginia woman has always been noted—which has that indescribably motherly and sisterly something in it, which makes the stranger feel at once that he has found home.

His mother and three lovely young sisters, and with his mulatto foster-mother, who stood with a loving and humble smile upon her good looking face in the back-ground, along with her son, Jack's foster brother and body servant, Cato.

Time to supper.

Ah! that delicious supper! the fresh, juicy venison, the cakes of grated green corn, kneaded in its own sweet milk by some mysterious person known only to Virginia women—and coffee that is a re-distillation of nectar, thickened with golden cream!

Then to bed.

Cato roused us with the dawn; and we went out to see the dogs fed, preparatory for the morning hunt. It was, indeed, a magnificent pack, such as I had never seen together before. Twelve of them were of the same family, and of great size and power, standing very high upon their legs, and marked with great uniformity with black spots upon a pure white ground.

"Spot," the sire and leader of this noble group, was of a pure white body, with a single black spot in the middle of the forehead—from which he took his name. He was a most powerful animal, and able to cope with the largest buck, alone. He was a stag-hound, carefully crossed upon the short-legged and long-bodied fox-hound.

"Music"—the dam—was a fox-hound of the "true Spartan breed," with a voice like a distant alarm-bell; while the organ of old "Spot" was as sonorous as the boom of "old ocean" against hollow cliffs.

But among them all, my eye instantly detected a magnificent creature—a black tan hound, that to me seemed absolutely perfect, as a specimen of canine symmetry. His coat was as fine as the [illegible] silk; from his head, which was [illegible] like a serpent's, his fine, broad [illegible] ears, with their great curling [illegible], depended more than an inch below the tip of his nose. His neck, like a young stag's; his chest, barrel-ribbed, and deep as a panther's; his limbs [illegible] as a gray-hounds, with a broad, strong back; limbs that seemed to have been [illegible] with most wondrous skill out of fine steel; and such a voice! bugles, clarions, cymbals, bells, winds, waters, echoes, mingled, clashing, rolling, roaring, in one tide of rushing sound; altogether, they were nothing to that voice! "Nowhere, nor nothing" as Jack exclaimed, "to the voice of 'Black Terror' and 'Smile,'" as he named a beautiful tan slut of smaller size, which stood beside this noble animal.

The history of this splendid couple was a singular one, as Jack gave it to me on the spot.

He was sitting in the portico one morning, looking out over the river, which was very much swollen, and filled with drift wood. He observed some strange, black objects, which seemed to be struggling with the current. He called to Cato for his spy-glass, and saw at once that they were two animals of some sort, who were trying hard to climb upon the drift-wood which floated in the middle of the mighty stream.

Here was an adventure at any rate; and, followed by Cato, Jack descended the steep bank of the river. When he reached the water, he found that his boat had been torn away by the current. Here was a nonplus with a vengeance! Jack was staggered but for a moment, when the low plaintive howl of a hound reached him across the waters.

It was a terrible venture; but Jack's coat was off in a minute, and, looking round to Cato, he only heard him say, "Go in, Massa Jack, I'm here," when he plunged into the turbid current, followed by the brave boy. Jack said if it had been a man's voice, it could not have "hurt him," more than the sound of that hound's plaintive howl.

Suffice it, the adventure, after having nearly cost them both their lives, was successfully accomplished, by bringing these two hounds, which were coupled together by a chain, to the shore, some four miles below, by the help of the drift-wood, which they pushed before them. The poor animals were nearly exhausted, and had probably been in the water for many hours.

Jack vowed that a whole plantation couldn't buy them. They had probably fallen from some steamboat, and had got caught by their chain to the drift-wood, which had prevented them from swimming ashore.

The whole kennel was fed upon bread exclusively, during the hunting season, and were never permitted to touch any meat except what they themselves killed. This kept them in fine bottom and wind for running, and made them very savage.

CHASE OF THE BIG BUCK.

A delicious breakfast is rapidly dispatched, the horn is sounded, and we are all off for our stands in the deep forest.

Cato, who "drives," [illegible] to the left, at the corner of the plantation, followed by the whole pack, while we follow a bridle-path, leading straight ahead, into the depths of the forest.

In a half a mile I am stationed just on the verge of the "old bank," as it is called, of the river, with the deep forest, through which Cato is driving, on my left, and on my right, after a sheer descent of twenty feet, a tremendous swamp, which was now dry, except where traversed by deep lagoons filled with quick-sands. Jack rode on some half a mile farther to his stand.

My instructions were, not to let the hounds pass my stand, if I missed the deer, which would attempt to get by me into the almost impenetrable swamps, where, if the dogs followed him, they would be lost for the remainder of the day.

I had not long to wait; for I could just begin to hear my heart beat in the restored silence, and a neighboring squirrel had only just commenced barking at me, when a low and distant bay, followed by a faint whoop, showed that a trail had been struck. Gradually the sounds gathered, as voice after voice joined in, until at last the thunder bass of old Spot boomed out, and all Music followed with a blast; and now the clashing clangor of Black Terror's tongue leads off the burst of symphony, and the forest rang to reverberations which startled the heart into my very throat.

Peal on peal, and now a sudden silence—my blood is running like mill-tails through the swollen veins, and the arteries throb almost to bursting. Crash! there it goes again! heavens! what music! How the leaves flutter, and the trees sway to my vision!

"Whoop!" in a smothered gasp. If I could only yell! Here they come; I wonder the forest isn't level before the mighty roll of sound! Ha! lost again! No! it is only muffled as they go down some valley! Now they rise again! Gods! if I could only give one yell! How it deafens! they must be right upon me! they will be running over me, deer, dogs, and all! I am no Actæon! Oh, hurrloanes, and thunder claps—that! here he comes! and out bounded, within ten feet of me, a tremendous buck, with his mighty antlers, like forest trees, thrown back upon his rump! He has passed an instant.

Crack! away with one prodigious bound, he clears the twenty feet of bank, and is crashing through the swamp.

What a rear! here they are! bristles up, tongues out, Black Terror ten paces ahead, Spot next, then Music, and all the rest in a crowd, looking savage as hurried wolves. You might as well talk of stopping the Mississippi—they have smelt the blood—what a terrific burst! Black Terror's leap is as long as the buck's! Old Spot roars again! They are out of sight! That's Jack's yell! Hark! his horse's feet already! He is coming, furious, because I did not stop the buck!

And furious he was, sure enough! I began to exclaim at the top of my voice, before he came in sight, but it was no use. He comes clattering up and nearly rides me down.

"Why the deuce didn't you stop that deer? Are the dogs gone? Blook Terror will never stop. Confusion, man? Were you asleep?"

"He was as big as an elephant, Jack. Here's plenty of blood," said I, trying to appear cool, and pointing to the ground with my gun, "he's done for."

Jack sprang to his feet and examined the signs. "Oh, thunder! you have shot him too far back, and through the loins; he will take to the river—what a track! it must be the 'big buck,' I shall lose Black Terror! Come ahead, and let's cut him off before he gets there, if we kill our horses!" And away he dashed through the wood.

I followed as fast as possible, and such a ride as that was! Through vine-matted thickets, over the dead trees, leaping at break-neck speed the wide lagoons—away! away! we clattered, foaming through the dense swamp like wild men possessed of demons.

At length we burst upon open ground, and Jack gave a yell that would have waked the dead: "Too late! too late! the Big Buck, by Old Bell-mouth! he'll take the river."

Jack's yell had slightly startled the buck, which was making for the river, along the bank of a wide lagoon. He turned sharp, and attempted to leap the lagoon, he disappears, on we rush, at mad speed; but Jack knows what he is about, and his horse too, while my mare leaps. Plump, we land in the middle of the lagoon, followed by a roar of laughter from Jack.

"Next time, shoot farther forward, if you please, old boy!"

But it was no joking matter to me—we had landed in a quicksand. I looked around with an expression of terror at Jack, for I felt my mare rapidly sinking under me.

"Catch that limb above you," shouted he, "and tie your bridle to it, or you will both go under."

There was no time for mincing matters. I let go my gun, which sank out of my sight forever. Rising on my saddle, with a desperate effort, I reached the stout limb of a bending cotton-wood tree, which I dragged down, and to which I managed to secure my bridle by a strong knot. I succeeded finally by the aid of the cotton-wood, in reaching the bank, and by this time, when I looked back, I found that my poor mare had sunk nearly up to her eyes.

I now looked round, and saw Jack, busy enough, between beating off the dogs and attempting to secure the buck, which had stuck fast also in the quicksand. He succeeded in throwing a rope about his horns, and when the "driver" came up, we dragged it out at our leisure, after having secured my poor "Celeste," who, from hanging so long by her head-stall, had grown quite black in the face.

The buck was a prodigious animal, and had several times before been chased by Jack, when it always took to the river, and had thus lost him several fine hounds.

We had many a hearty laugh over my adventure in the quicksand and the chase of the "big buck."

The exports of gold from Russia had been prohibited.

The Ashes of Columbus.

The remains of Columbus rest in the cathedral of Havana. The cathedral will repay the traveler for a visit. It is a plain but noble building, and the monuments are disposed generally with good taste. It contains some good pictures and a fine marble monument, surmounted by a statue of the Virgin. On the right of this an urn, containing the remains of Columbus, is enclosed in the wall, behind a fine bosso relievo, in marble, of the bust of the great navigator, the size of life, under which is the following inscription:

"O Restos e Imagen del grande Colon
Mil Siglos de su guardados en la urna
Y en la remembranzia de nuestra nacion."

O remains and image of the great Columbus,
For a thousand ages continue preserved in this urn,
And in the remembrance of our nation.

Opposite to the tomb of Columbus there is a small and beautiful painting, bearing date 1473, and said to represent the Pope and Cardinals celebrating mass previous to the expedition of Columbus.

The following is from Washington Irving's most interesting account of the life and voyages of Columbus:

"The body of Columbus was deposited in the convent of S. Francisco, and his obsequies were celebrated with funereal pomp in the parochial church of Santa Maria de la Antigua, in Valladolid. His remains were transported, in 1513, to the Carthusian convent of Las Cuevas, at Seville, and deposited in the chapel of Santa Christe. In the year 1536, they were removed to Hispaniola, and interred by the side of the grand altar of the cathedral of the city of San Domingo. But even here they did not rest in quiet. On the cession of Hispaniola to the French in 1795, it was determined by the Spaniards to bear them off to the island of Cuba as precious relics, connected with the most glorious epoch of Spanish history.

"Accordingly, on the 20th December, 1795, in the presence of an august assemblage of the dignitaries of the church and the civil and military officers, the vault was opened beside the high altar of the cathedral; within were found the fragments of a leaden coffin, a number of bones, a quantity of mould, evidently the remains of a human body. These were carefully collected, and put into a case of gilded lead, secured by an iron lock; the case was enclosed in a coffin covered with black velvet, and the whole placed in a temporary mausoleum. On the following day there was another grand convocation at the cathedral; the vigils and masses for the dead were chanted, and a funeral sermon was preached by the archbishop. After these solemn ceremonials in the cathedral, the coffin was transported to the ship, attended by a grand civil, religious and military procession. The banners were covered with crape; there were chants and responses, and discharges of artillery; and the most distinguished persons of the several orders took turns to support the coffin.

"The reception of the body at Havana was equally august. There was a splendid procession of boats to conduct it from the ship to the shore. On passing the vessels of war in the harbor, they all paid the honors due to an Admiral, and Captain-General of the navy. On arriving at the mole, the remains were met by the Governor of the Island, accompanied by the Generals or the military staff. They were then conveyed in the utmost pomp to the cathedral. Masses and the solemn ceremonies of the dead were performed by the bishop, and the mortal remains of Columbus were deposited in the wall, on the right side of the grand altar, where they still remain."

PAINFUL INTERVIEW.—A correspondent of a Detroit paper relates the following incident: Seeing a paragraph in your paper of the 4th, speaking of the omission, in all the lives written of Alexander Hamilton, of the name of his wife, reminds me of a thrilling and painful incident, to which I was an eye-witness, connected with that lady, (who, by the way, I suppose few will need be informed was, before marriage, a daughter of Gen. Schuyler, of Albany.) About the year 1822, as near as I can recollect, I was on board one of the old Fulton and Livingston line of boats, (say the James Kent, or the Chancellor Livingston,) on my way from New York to Albany. All who traveled in those days will recollect that the dinner hour was quite an interesting as now. The ladies were, of course, provided for first; and the gentlemen, who stood near the foot of the tables, could crowd upon the back seats, (so that they respectfully retreated as the ladies came down,) until the latter were all seated; then such as were not crowded quite off, could take a seat on the signal being given.

Among the first that were passing up next to the berths, and back of one table, was Aaron Burr, and it was my lot to be next to him. We got as far up as those ahead of us could go, before coming to some occupied by ladies on that side, and all came to a stand facing the table. At that moment there came down opposite to us a large lady, richly dressed in black, and veiled, and while yet standing, directly opposite to Burr, she put her veil aside, and raising her eyes across the table, she saw, with his eyes directly upon her, Aaron Burr, and only separated by the width of the table. She gave a loud scream and fell, but there being quite a number standing by, they caught her and took her out. The boat was then about approaching Newburg, and she insisted on being put ashore at once, as she would go no farther in the boat with Burr on board, and it was done as she wished.

During the whole scene at the table, Burr stood like a statue, looking on with a stoic-like indifference and composure, never moving a muscle; and as soon as Mrs. Hamilton was removed, he sat down and ate a very hearty dinner, and went his way, as usual.

It was remarked at the time, that Mrs. Hamilton said it was the first time she had ever set her eyes on Aaron Burr since the day he killed her husband, and no doubt it was the last.

BYRON AND MARY CHAWORTH.—Grace Greenwood, in her into visit to England, paid a visit to Newstead Abbey, the well known residence of Lord Byron. In speaking of the event, she beautifully and touchingly alludes to the love of the poet for Mary Chaworth:

Strangely sorrowful, almost agonizingly regretful, were the thoughts which swept over my mind, wave after wave, and shook my heart like a tempest, as I stood in the place where the young poet passed many hours of silent thought, it may of lonely wretchedness. I never before so deeply felt how passing mournful was the story of Byron's first and only love. That Mary Chaworth returned the passion of her young poet lover, I have not a doubt; but, like the Montagues and Capulets, the houses of Cheworth and Byron were at fued. Mary had not the strength and truth of Juliet, and so they were parted—a separation by far more pitcous for her, and more fatal to him than death amid the full summer brightness of happy love. This, not Shakspeare's, was the true-soul tragedy. Might she not have redeemed even his wayward and erring nature, by the divinity of a pure love and a steadfast feith? But it was not to be. Many bestowed her hand upon a man of whom little better can be said than that he ranked "among the most eminent sportsmen of the day"—lived, it is said, to weep wild tears over the words which have linked her name in sorrowful immortality with her lover's, and died in broken-hearted ness, at last—while he, grown reckless, restless and defiant, the very core of his heart turned to bitter ashes, forgetting his God, and distrusting and dispising his brother, swept on his glorious, shameful, sorrowful and stormy career, till the shadows deepened, and the long night closed in.

INCIDENT IN WESTERN LIFE.—A peltry forty acre land claim in Wisconsin has led to two separate tragedies, resulting in four deaths. Less than a year since, Mr. Cartwright, one of the disputants, killed Mr. Furman, another claimant, was arrested, and in the month of February admitted to bail. He returned to Oacla, Wanshura county, his residence, against earnest remonstrances, for the excitement in the neighborhood was intense against him. When it was ascertained that he was in their midst, the inhabitants, to the number of one hundred, repaired to his residence, intent upon lynching him. He had taken refuge in the chamber, and repelling their advances, shot from his retreat and killed two of the party, James Langdon and Mr. Troop, and then being sensible that further resistance was useless, surrendered himself into the hands of an officer, with the assurance of prosecution; thence he was removed to a Justice's office for examination. By this body of men he was forcibly taken from the officers, tied hand and foot, and suspended by the neck until dead. Mr. C. leaves a wife and large family. Thus, within one year have four lives been sacrificed all for the paltry item of a forty acre claim.

The Horrors of Starvation.

The following, which is the experience of a miner, we clip from a recent California paper. Two men sought a distant "digging," became completely shut in by a heavy snow, and soon consumed all their food. The writer says: "On the second day of our starvation I found the carcass of a mule that I had lost in the fall, which the coyotes had nearly entirely devoured; but on examination we found a small piece of flesh remaining on the lower thigh, which we carefully cut off, with the hope that we could eat it ourselves. But it was no go; it would not stick. We tried it in every way possible, but to no purpose. It was more than our stomachs could bear. What now to do we could not tell. To get out was impossible. Death seemed to stare us in the face. My companion became so despondent that he gave up all hope and would not leave the camp, although he was a much larger and stronger man than myself; yet I kept up much the best. But at the same time I saw little chance but to starve; yet I had a faint hope that he would die first and then—For fear he might take advantage of me, I seldom let my rifle out of my hands. I kept on my feet all the time, although I was getting exceedingly weak; and the snow on the river bar was four feet deep and from six to ten feet deep on the mountains. Now, all my fairy dreams of wealth and happiness when I should get home, were turned into gloom and darkness; gold lost its lustre. To become a cannibal was horrifying; the thought of having to starve to death and become food for the wild beasts was intolerable. Gold was of no use; I would have gladly given all I possessed for one pound of bread, but, alas! I could not get it. My heart grew faint within me. I knew full well that there was no chance for my men to get to me before I must starve to death, unless my companion should die, or I—— To become a murderer seemed too heartless and treacherous; but what could I do? In it not better that one die than both die? Thus I reasoned, and struggled against reason, until hope was lost in despair. But hark! an idea occurs to me. I remember seeing the track of a coyota near the carcase of that mule! Hope springs up; new vigor is aroused. I snatched up my rifle and started off in the direction of the mule with a light heart and an eager and quick step, with a hope of yet escaping the dreadful calamity that seemed to await me. On my reaching the carcase, I saw that there was a coyota in the habit of coming there; how to contrive some way to kill it was the next thing to be done. After some examination, I posted myself behind a large rock. It was now getting near dusk, and no coyota yet. I sat with eager expectation, hoping the next moment would bring some wild beast in sight. At the first appearance of the animal, I threw my rifle to my face and fired, inflicting a death shot. Now my heart was filled with joy, and I felt that He who created me was able to feed me, and that it was no more than just that I should feel the sting of the lash I had so much deserved from the hand of Him who had thus far blessed and prospered me. On my return to camp, I met my companion, who, but a moment previous, struggling in hopeless despair, might now be seen with a brightened countenance, with tears of joy chasing each other down his emaciated cheeks."

BULWER LYTTON'S FAILURES.—"Perhaps it may encourage young writers if I remind them that I was not successful at first in any one line that I attempted. My first attempts at prose composition were refused admittance into a magazine. My first novel was very little read, and it is not included in the general collection of my works. My first poetry was thought detestable—and my first play very narrowly escaped being damned."

NEW STORY BY DICKENS.—The title of Mr. Dickens's new work is "Hard Times." It will be published weekly in the Household Words, the first number to commence on the 29th of March, the whole to be completed in five months. Dickens's recent inquiry into the Preston strike is said to have originated the title, and in some respects to have suggested the turn of the story.

SCREW STEAMING.—The English papers received by the last arrival, record the performance of the mammoth new steamship Himalaya, on her first voyage. It appears that she ran the distance from Gibraltar to Malta—1000 miles, in 74½ hours, and from Malta to Alexandria—830 miles—in 61¼ hours. This is equal to about nine days between New York and Liverpool. Her greatest run in twenty-four hours was 360 miles, and her highest rate of speed at any time 16 knots—equal to 18½ miles.

A young man was sent to the State's Prison from Poughkeepsie, N. Y., a few days since. While his mother was getting into the wagon to bid adieu to her unhappy son, the horses started and she was thrown on the ground and her back broken. She lived but a few hours afterwards.

CHERRY PECTORAL,

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS,

BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH,

CROUP, ASTHMA AND

CONSUMPTION.

Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notoriety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the Cherry Pectoral does not only as a general thing, but almost invariably cure the maladies for which it is employed.

As time makes those facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually become the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log-cabin of the American peasant to the palaces of European kings. Throughout this entire country, Cherry Pectoral is known as the best remedy extant for diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, Cherry Pectoral is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms-houses, Public Institutions and in domestic practice, as the surest remedy their attending physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases and for children it is safe, pleasant and effectual to cure. In fact, some of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from parents who have found it efficacious in cases particularly incidental to childhood.

The Cherry Pectoral is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it under his own eye, with unerriable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.

We have endeavored here to furnish the community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should commend itself to their confidence—a remedy at once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and countless trials proved itself to be; and trust by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of uniform strength to afford physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy that will do for them all that medicine can do. A NOBLE HYMN.

The Episcopal Recorder, in denouncing the malism of the Puseyites, says: "John New- has powerfully pointed out the extent to ich our doctrines of grace remove them- es from this ceremonial theory:

"In this sinful world I dwell,
Nor fear its enmity;
Here I find a house of prayer
To which I inwardly retire,
Walking unconcerned in care,

ur Church, by grafting this noble hymn in ritual has added her testimony to the rine that the altar of grace is framed, by architects, no matter how skillful, but God's own Spirit; not in Gothic cathe- s, no matter how splendid, but in the el of the converted heart."

"noble hymn" it truly is; but it was written by John Newton. Its author Charles Wesley. The Recorder may find Mr. Wesley's "Redemption Hymns," shed in 1746, when John Newton was a ched prodigal, a slave in Africa. The e stanzas grafted in the ritual of the P. E. rch, were obtained for that purpose by a king mutilation of the noble hymn; com- the abridgment "Since I have known a our's love," in the ritual with the original, llows:

, I come with joy to do
The Master's blessed will;
m in outward things pursue,
And serve his pleasure still.

ithful to my Lord's commands,
I still would choose the better part,
rve with careful Martha's hands,
And loving Mary's heart.

reful without care I am,
Nor feel my happy toil;
pt in peace by Jesus' name,
Supported by his smile.

yful thus my joy to show,
I find his service my reward;
ery work I do below,
I do it for the Lord.

heu, Oh Lord! in tender love,
Dost all my burdens bear;
ft my heart to things above,
And fix it ever there.

Midst busy multitudes alone;
rectly waiting at Thy feet,
Till all thy will be done.

Let others blindly fly;
this evil world I dwell,
Unhurt, unspotted I.

re I find a house of prayer,
To which I inwardly retire;
alking unconcerned in care,
And unconsumed in fire.

ou, Oh Lord! my portion art,
Before I hence remove;
w my treasure and my heart
Are all laid up above.

r above all earthly thing,
While yet my hands are here employ'd,
s my soul the King of kings,
And freely talks with God.

Of living thus to Thee;

In his recent missionary ad- ia Philadelphia, he directed the utten- f his audience to this fact; and offered llowing consideration in illustration of bject. He said:

ere is a very common impression abroad hey are the ministers of the Gospel who are bound to go. But this is not the for if we look at the Scriptures, we find t was not only the Apostles, but others ho were called to go and make known nsearchable riches of Christ. In the ivo Apostolic Church all were animated e Spirit of Christ, and consequently all, ying ways, acted the part of mission- In England and Scotland there are who reside in their palaces, surrounded the comforts and appliances of affluence and who are tired of having nothing to it can hardly be so, at least to the same , in busy America) and they often com- that they don't know what to do, nor e to go, to get rid of weariness and ennui. e cause of Christian men, I have often d said that they ought to go and visit ld of missions, even if it were but for a times, and thereby in person subserve the Redeemer's cause." I mean, that Christian laymen, who have health and hereditary wealth, with comparatively little or nothing to occupy their time; and many, perhaps, who have made sufficient to retire from their business, should really and truly go; and if they went in a Christian spirit, there is no calculating the amount of good which they might be able to accomplish. If such men were to go the heathen field, even for a year or two, how it would cheer the hearts of converts and missionaries! They might not understand the native language, but through the missionaries they could communicate with all around; they could give free expression to their sympathy and love; and thus their influence would soon be felt by all missionaries, converts, and blinded heathen! The latter, especially, from their own low carnal nature, are full of suspicion. They always think that we have some interested motives in seeking to convert them. There is nothing virtually more important than the removal of such suspicion from their mind. It is a fact, that they often speak missionaries as "men hired in Great Britain and America to love the souls of men!" They know no better; and hence, unworthy phraseology.

But, if men who are able went forth at their own charges, how soon would such erroneous and injurious impressions be dissipated, when they saw those who went purely for the love of the work, and who were not paid for it. And, therefore, I have plead, and will plead, that such Christian laymen should volunteer their services, and enlist themselves in this glorious cause; and I have said, and I will say, that you ought not to look wholly to ministers to go; for I do hold it indisputable that there are many laymen whose bounden duty it would be equally to go, and thus manifest their obedience to the Divine command, and sympathy for the perishing. Some do go even now to foreign lands as travelers; they go, perhaps to Egypt, in quest of mummies, and rotten rags, and antiquarian remains. They may dwell in catacombs, and spend their time in excavations; and if they find some smouldering relics, Oh, how happy they are! and how they are journalized and memorialized as patriotic and self-denying discoverers! Let the world have it so if it will, and let us profit so as we lawfully can, by the world's diggings."

INFANT PIETY.

The author of "Shady Side," following in the vein of Bushnell's "Christian Nurture," says:

"Your little one, whose animal life is so lately separated from your own, is still, in its spiritual life, a part of yourselves; it has yet no accountability, no individuality. Its soul is linked with yours. Why should it not be included with you in the folds of the Good Shepherd? You are, under God, to mould and stamp it after your own renewed image. Hence, you put upon it the outward seal—the washing of water—to symbolize the fact of its expected transformation into the likeness of Christ—its prospective regeneration by the Holy Ghost. You have a right to presume on its being a child of God, soon after it can discern between good and evil. This ordinance is to contribute to this result by your own faith; not in any mystic virtue in it, but faith in God's plan to include in his covenant the children of his people. But let not your faith waver, or your purpose falter. As you bring your darling to its public consecration, let the language of your hearts, speaking in the ordinance, be: 'This unconscious child is a part of ourselves; we purpose it shall be the Lord's; we will nurture it in a holy atmosphere, and trust the Divine Grace to bless our endeavors and renew it unto holiness, that it may grow up a child of God in the family of Christ. Presuming on this result, we dare label it now as the Lord's—a partaker with us of the faith and promises of the Gospel.'

"And, remember, Mary, this step throws upon you the duty of watching the growth of the child's moral being, as you would daily watch your own heart and life: to secure, by God's help, penitence towards him, for its first voluntary acts of disobedience, trust in him for all needed mercy, and love to him for what he is, and for what he bestows. To do this requires more patient watchfulness, and a more careful ordering of their own temper and conduct than many believing parents are willing to be troubled with. The consequence is, that the precious lambs of the flock, instead of being tenderly nurtured under the ample provisions of the covenant, are let loose from the fold, to take their chance with others in the unsheltered common. There are exceptions to this fact, and among them I trust will be our darling. It is your privilege, my daughter, to lead her by your side in the paths of the Good Shepherd.

"You asked me, in your last, to say more of my children. Ah! what fond mother shall dare give her pen carte blanche on a topic so near her heart, and so exhaustless? Abby, we humbly trust, is in favor with God. She is a tender-hearted, spiritually-minded child; holding daily communion with Jesus, whom she has loved from her earliest knowledge of his name. Divine grace seems to have reserved her unto holiness soon after she knew the difference between right and wrong. This was what I expected when I consecrated her in baptism, and the Lord has not disappointed me. 'According to your faith be it unto you.'"

CHANGES IN THE MODERN GREEK.—Dr. Kiag finds that works printed in Modern Greek ten or fifteen years ago, now need a thorough revision on account of the great improvement made in the language within that time. A distinguished Professor in the University remarked to him, two or three years since, that he could not use his own lectures prepared a few years previous, without re-writing them, such were the changes in the language.

NO! NO!! NO!!!

BY REV. C. K. MARSHALL.

Can you say "No?". Millions can say "Yes." Not one in a hundred can say No! It is one of the first and highest accomplishments for a young man to be able, on all proper occasions, to reply firmly, kindly and decisively—No. Young men are constantly solicited to enter into plans or pursuits for amusement, for the gratification of the passions and appetites; for the advancement of doubtful schemes, or the abetting of evil practices, to which consent, once given, is prophetic of inevitable destruction. You are solicited by a gentleman of charming manners and fascinating address to take a game at some play for a trifling bet; you are snared, as the spider "ropes" in the silly fly, and you lay the corner-stone of the character of a "blackleg;" and twenty years after you will bear in mind what rich deposits were sealed up forever in that corner-stone, and woe, and shame, and worthlessness you have entailed upon yourself by not repelling the enchanter, and resolutely answering, No!

You will be importuned to drink in all the plastic phraseology of politeness, by men of wealth, fashion, and the learned professions; and ten to one, if some religionists, and even clergymen, do not join with them to entice you on; but the current once entered; the Circean cup once sought; the voice of reason and conscience once hushed; and then you need only read the end of millions to know your fate. We tell you there is no hope, nor safety, except in a courageous negation. Tell every man No; and, though you may offend, you will triumph. Heaven and good men will sustain you. Beware of the enchanted ground.

The merchant has closed a trade with a planter; and turning to him with a smiling face and most affectionate air, says: "Now do me the honor, sir, to take a 'refresher' of a little the oldest and the best the land affords." The customer hesitates. At home he is a Presbyterian, a Baptist, a Methodist, an Episcopalian; or, perhaps, only a Son of Temperance. He linger; stutters;—but the merchant has him by the arm, and, like a bailiff with his victim, marches him off. Poor, inconsistent, weak, irresolute man; he could not speak it out. No was in his heart, crying from every sensibility; consistency, manliness, example, all cried No! but he had not the utterance; he could not speak it. On he goes, like a bullock to the shambles, and ——drinks! True, the single drink was a bagatelle; but, then, he hangs out the white flag at home, at church, at the pleasure party in his own vicinity; but feels the ineffable curse of inconsistency when abroad. He learns to despise himself; he has cause; for the want of self-respect is the direct assurance of doom. The man goes on to ruin; leaves a sad legacy of shame to his family; all because he would not say No!

A certain general once asked an acquaintance of mine to take a glass of wine with him. The young man never used wine, drank no liquor; but he was flattered by so distinguished a gentleman's attentions, drank; and when a ruined man, said he took his start at that point; he could not say No. A friend said to an acquaintance of mine: "Please endorse my note." He could not reply No; yet he feared the consequences, and they came—sad, dark, ruinous. He was bankrupted by that one signature—could not say No!

The new Temperance law passed by the last Legislature requires that a majority of the legal voters of a city, or if out of the city, a majority of the voters in a police district, should sign a petition in favor of an applicant before he can obtain a license to retail vinous or spirituous liquors. Many will ask respectable citizens to sign such petitions. The grave still calls for a few more of the same sort with which drameries and drinking-saloons have been gorging it for years—and must be fed. Death has his rights; he is a great democrat, and a first-class power; sign his bill of privileges; let him work—men must die.

The wine-cup is surer than the revolver or the sword. There are not yet widows enough; nor enough of poor, homeless, unpitied, sorrowing orphans, whose wretched fathers drank up their school-books, their sunny hours, their comfortable beds, their good clothes, their sweet bright hopes, their happiness, their all; save, the inheritance of life, and shame, and want. Send round your prayer for another license. Take the skull of a drunkard's skeleton, and fill it with the blood of the last martyred victim of the "cup," instead of an inkstand, and go round to your fellow-citizens, the "legal voters," and give them a chance to record their names in a consistent and becoming manner. Roll on the business, the jails will be vacant soon, if the law operates as it was designed to, the manufactures of the Penitentiary will be diminished, the Hospital funds will give out, so much revenue will be lost to the town, or county, or school—sign the paper.

There he goes with his paper. What a sight to behold! Are manly pursuits all overstocked? Are useful employments dishonorable? How does he feel, trudging round and begging "legal voters," to excuse him from hard work, and let him set up an "infernal machine" that, while it is bound to kill its victims, can be worked by the laziest and most worthless men alive? When you see the petition—when it is presented for your signature—can you say No? Will you say No? If you put your name there, will you be willing that your sons and grandsons shall go to the Records and see your name in such a place—for such a purpose? Yes, some will do it. The good citizen will be mad, and asked to sign his name to the petition; and, while the honest monitor within cries No! No!! No!!! he writes his name on the prayer, on the face of the swift witness, and gives the lie to his sense of duty, and the claims of morality. He cannot say No! He wants the moral power—the great purpose—the hearty resolve to do right if the Heavens fall. No is a little word, but many a battle has been fought within its circumference, and many a flag of victory waved from its towers. But, alas! a wide Golgotha, with its bleaching bones of the victims slain around its granitic walls, tells of the thousands who have perished there.

If the young man expects to succeed in business, he must learn to say No; if he wants to be honored by his neighbors and countrymen, he must learn to reply to pride, prodigality, passions, and all the thousand temptations from within and without—No!

The earth is full of wrecks. Every beach is strewn with them, and the fragments of precious cargoes are scattered, in mockery of early promise, on a thousand barren shores, because young men would not say—No!

"If sinners entice thee, consent thou not." Play the man; he is a hero that does it. Do right, and defy the world! Conscious rectitude is mightier than the chains that hold the stars to their moorings. And when you are dead, your eulogists will not be called on to wade through a life of filth to find, perchance, a few paste gems on which to justify the paltry words of faint praise; but he will tell the listening multitude that you were a philanthropist, and just; and could on all proper occasions, with gentleness and charity, and with a will, say No! and it will suffice; they will infer the rest; your name can never die!

Let who will, pray the legal authorities to set up more Rum Hells within this State; more "Scheidam Schnapps" Wolf Traps; by all means keep your signature from such a place—from such a prayer! You will blush in ten years from this time to be told that your name is on such a document in the archives of the city, or country. Learn to say No!

RICHARD WATSON.

The English Wesleyans have started and are sustaining a Quarterly Review. It has reached the third number. The London Watchman, in noticing it, extracts largely from an article on Richard Watson. Between the editor of the Watchman, and the writer in the Review, our readers may get a more vivid and full view of this remarkable man than his American admirers and students generally have:

We have left till the last the eighth article, on "Richard Watson," because by many this will be esteemed the article of the number. We observe that it is by far the longest article, extending to more than fifty pages, and exceeding by twenty pages the longer articles among the rest. And assuredly Richard Watson in a Wesleyan Review deserved this pre-eminence. The article is a disquisitional review of the principal features in Mr. Watson's character, and reminds us somewhat, in this its disquisitional character, of a well known and highly valued life of the late Rev. W. E. Miller. The article is powerfully written, and is distinguished by great freshness of feeling and by originality of thought. The writer's admiration of Watson is most profound and enthusiastic. And he has evidently known us well as loved him well. We could wish, notwithstanding, that there were, on the whole, less of disquisition and more of Watson in the article. We desiderate, too, a discriminative and illustrated criticism of his writings. No writer offers better opportunity for this than Watson. With the remarks on the Institutes, as a masterly defence of Evangelical Arminianism, we agree in general, but should except to a few particular statements. That work, we cannot, if we would, forget, was begun thirty years ago, and written among many distractions. How has natural science,—and much, too, in Biblical science and criticism,—outgrown that date! Much of the former part of the Institutes is quite inadequate now. And as to some of the champions on the "Attributes" in particular, and especially that on the "Omnipresence" of the Deity, how often have we sighed that the masterly and majestic reason of Watson had not thoroughly thought out those subjects for himself, and given us his own original meditations and conclusions, instead of the bare outline of his own, and unsatisfactory extracts of others, which he has given. We must say, too, that his exquisite and invaluable posthumous work, the "Exposition," sadly needs, especially in the historical allusions and statements, the accurate revision of a competent editor. What Watson himself would have done, had he lived to complete his work, another hand should now do in his stead.

These points, however, apart, our readers will find in the article we are speaking of by far the most elaborate, eloquent and successful estimate of Watson's character ever published. We extract the following striking passages:

To say, as we have done, that Mr. Watson was a better preacher than anything else, is to place him in a very high position as a pulpit orator. It was our good fortune to hear all the celebrities of the pulpit of the period in which he lived; but we certainly never heard his equal. Some of his written sermons are beautiful specimens of composition; but they bear but an imperfect resemblance to his spoken discourses. This resulted from the circumstance that they were really extemporaneous. His preparations were of the most meagre kind—that is, so far as they were written; and many of them were not written at all. We are not, however, from this to presume that he had not reflected deeply and profoundly on the subjects to be discussed. But the material being in his mind, and not in a manuscript, he had the power of fusing this material with the glow of his genius in the progress of its delivery. This gave life, freshness and power, which never can be secured by other modes. His language was as accurate from his lips as from his pen,—as appropriate to the theme, as chaste as forcible, as elegant, and, as must be the case in all similar instances, had much more force than written words. Even the argumentative part partook of this animation; but the declamation, the creations of imagination, the poetry, were overwhelming. One of his sermons was as different from a memoriter sermon, as a man is different from a statue: in the one we have the form without the life; in the other we have the entire man, body and soul. But he never lost his chart, never plunged into chaos. The reasoning of one of his oral efforts was like a chain of gold running through from end to end; and it cost no great trouble to perceive the linking; but the luminous flashes of genius brought to illustrate and impress this reasoning on the minds of his auditory were just like the sun, who, never losing his central position, throws around him the effulgence of day.

Every man is made for his work: Mr. Watson was made for his. God had been most bountiful to him. His person was remarkable, like his mind. His physique was exquisitely formed, as if to be the fitting casket of the brilliant jewel lodged within. Nobody could meet him without stopping to look back, asking, "Who is that?" But that head! The face was elongated, and somewhat pale, with an appearance of constant suffering, and often overshadowed with a tinge of melancholy. The mouth was expressive of every thing but obstinacy. The sense of the ridiculous, satire, scorn, contempt, defiance, imaginings, love, joy, all found expression in those wonderful lips. The nose was prominent,—not exactly Grecian, not exactly Roman, but beautifully English, and expressive of both genius and generosity. His eyes were dark, oval, deep, brilliant, piercing, and, if we may say so, inexpressibly expressive. His look of scrutiny pierced to the bottom of the soul; his look of complacency inspired instant confidence; his look of affection kindled the feelings into a hearty glow; his look of devotion was calmly meditative; his look of inspiration was like a blaze of sacred fire. No one could possibly mistake the meaning of his eyes: they spoke as intelligibly as his tongue. But that brow! We know not what to say: we are afraid of failure on the one hand, and of being accused, by those who did not live in his day, of exaggeration. But we believe that in this case exaggeration is impossible. Our only means of judging of the human head is by comparison. This principle necessarily comes in; and our estimate must be formed therefrom. We have seen heads of greater breadth than that of Mr. Watson, indicating greater power in some of its forms. We have seen men possessing much more brain in the mass; but its distribution was perfectly different. In him the brain appeared to be mainly given to assist mental exercise, the great mass being found in the frontal portion of the head. Indeed, those posterior developments which are supposed to indicate the animal passions were nearly absent. But the brow was prodigiously developed, as if by some extraordinary process, the whole substance of the brain had been forced to this point,—as if the intellect had demanded and engrossed every particle. The forehead did not taper inward from the sides, but was square; neither was it retiring, as we often see in heads otherwise fine, but was as nearly perpendicular from the eyebrows as possible, and of great height. Taken in connection with the face, there was real sublimity in the loftiness of this brow, as there is sublimity in the Alps and the Andes. We certainly never saw such a head; it was unlike that of any other person. If placed in the midst of those of an entire nation, it would be found different from them all; if measured by the ordinary standard, it would as far transcend them as the giant transcends the man of common stature.

This, then, was the instrument by which the soul had to work; and we cannot be surprised, that, with such an instrument, achievements in mental superiority and excellency were attained. But there is a connection betwixt the brain and the whole nervous system; the sent of sensation may be local; but sensation itself is universal. Mr. Watson was acutely sensitive. We remember, on an occasion when he had been preaching one of his masterly sermons, a distinguished Dissenting minister present made use of the words, "That wonderful mental machine!"

ANIMOSITY OF THE GREEKS TOWARDS THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.—The Mayor of Athens said a short time since to Dr. King, "With the Protestants we may one day form one fold, under one Shepherd; but with the Roman Catholics never." The increased hatred of the Greeks towards the Catholics, which is very apparent, is owing in part to the dispute about the holy sepulchre at Jerusalem.

A STEP TOWARDS DESPOTISM.—The Jesuits have been permitted to re-enter Mexico, in return for which permission, the Mexican Government have received $250,000 to pay the interest on Mexican bonds held in England. They were expelled from Mexico during the struggle for freedom, and their estates confiscated.

NEWSPAPERS IN ATHENS.—In Athens there are not less than fifteen weekly and semi-weekly papers, besides six or seven monthly and semi-monthly magazines. It is only twenty-five years since it began to be rebuilt; its population is less than 30,000. Truly, the Athenians have not lost their ancient character of being eager for news.

Kalafut, of which so much has been said lately, is a town of two thousand houses. It is surrounded with walls, has a quarantine, townhall, a custom-house, three churches, and a cavalry barracks.

Venice.

The correspondent of the New York Observer gives the following impressions of Venice in a letter from that city:

We reached Venice—this enchanting city—in a dense fog, and I could admire nothing, but the magnificent stone bridge which connects it with the main land—the longest bridge, I suspect, in the world—more than two miles in length. After passing the Custom-house, the first thing I did was to jump into a gondola, and the gondolas have not disappointed me, nor the canals, nor the boatmen, nor, in fact, anything of which I had read. This city is really unique, and gives every indication of having been a mistress of the sea, a city of princely merchants, a depot of trade, a museum of all that was rare and valuable of the Middle Ages. Its trade is gone, its population has declined, its political importance has passed away forever, but the palaces, the churches and the monuments of mediæval magnificence remain, especially those rich treasures of Grecian art which the Crusaders carried to Venice.

The palaces are not so grand as at Florence and Geneva, but they seem to be more numerous. I visited a great many, and was astonished at the evidence of former wealth. And there seems to be as many pictures and picture-galleries as at Florence, though not of so high order. It seems scarcely possible for a man to have painted so much as Titian's. Every church and every public building seems ornamented with his works and those of Paul Veronese and Tintoretto. The old palace of the Doges is quite grand and unique. It forms one side of the most magnificent square I have yet seen in Europe; at least one corner of the square, the other sides being taken up by the cathedral, and shops equal to those in Paris. The Palais Royal is evidently a poor copy of the Piazza St. Mark, only it has no cathedral. As for the cathedral, although not so imposing as I had expected, still it is beautiful and grand. Its whole ceiling is one series of mosaics! It is filled in every corner with monuments, marbles, pictures and treasures. The man must have been very rich who built that costly church, which seems to have been the result of countless robberies, chiefly on the Eastern churches and monuments. Its chief treasures are Grecian pillars and marbles taken during the Crusades. Its interior is rather gloomy, but exceedingly rich, especially in mosaics. And its facade is ornamented with the celebrated bronze horses which Constantine carried to his new capital, and which the Romans before him had transported from Athens. They have successively been the ornaments of Athens, Rome, Constantinople, Venice and Paris. Napoleon carried them away as among the choicest remains of ancient art. They were restored, with several of Titian's pictures. The wealth of Italy is in these relics, and it is a shame to rob this land of all which it possesses. I have visited a great many other churches, some of which are quite equal to those in Rome. As their beauty and value consists chiefly in costly marbles, I can give no idea by description. It is amazing that such wealth should have been so squandered.

My chief pleasure in Venice has been in being rowed about in the gondolas. I had never before seen so much skill in rowing. A man with one oar shoots his canoe-like boat through all the windings of the canals with great velocity, and touches nothing. I did not think that rowing was so much an art until I attempted to row myself; but I run the gondola ashore in no time. I could not even keep it straight for a minute. The boatmen are very civil, but great beggars. I found Venice the most expensive place I have visited in Italy, as I could not go to see sights by myself, and have to pay to see everything. The hotels also are dear. Everything is dear, and it is a mystery to me how the people live.

But this is an everlasting mystery in all countries and ages, even in those flourishing towns with which we are most acquainted. But Venice is not flourishing. It is a city of other times. It has no trade and no manufactures to any extent compared with what it had in the middle ages. Its wealth is in pictures, in churches, in recollections. It is a modern Tyre in decay. It will be less and less every passing generation. There is still some life in Florence, but Venice reminds one only of former glories. There are no new buildings, no new bridges, no new public works. The shops are indeed fine, and the squares crowded with people, still one cannot resist the feeling that the glory has departed forever.

And yet no city except Rome has taken so strong hold of my feelings. I could linger here a month. I never should tire of the principal square. I never should be wearied in being rowed from point to point. Every gondola has a nice covered seat, protected from the weather, and, if necessary, from the public sight, and is made luxurious by soft cushions. Reclining on these seats, and gliding without noise amid the heavy palaces of ancient patricians was both luxurious and exciting. But I have observed that the people generally close the windows of the gondola, and read as they are rowed along. Ladies generally ride in this way, as the streets are narrow and winding. I however walked to every part of the city, and was in no danger from carriages. Not a carriage, not a horse is to be seen in all Venice. The gondolas take the place of carriages. But I must close, as my sheet is full, and as I am incapable of expressing the feelings which fill my soul. L. J.

Female Beauty in Old and New England.

It is generally allowed that there is more of what is called chiseled beauty in America than in Europe,—that the features of the women are finer, and the head more classical. But here ends the triumphs of our sisters of the West; their busts are far inferior to those we admire at home, and a certain attenuation in the whole figure gives the idea of fragility and decay.

And this idea is correct. What they want is soundness of constitution; and in consequence of the want, their finely cut laces, taken generally, are pale instead of fair, and sallow when they should be rosy. In this country, a woman is in the prime of her attractions, at thirty-five, and she frequently remains almost stationary till fifty, or else declines gradually and gracefully, like a beautiful day melting into a lovely evening. In America, twenty-five is the farewell line of beauty in woman, beyond which comes decay; at thirty-five, she looks weary and worn, her flat chest symbolizing the collapsed heart within; and at forty, you see in her thin and haggard features all the marks of premature age.

It is customary to regard this as the effect of climate; but some think it folly to go to an inanimate cause, when the whole system of artificial life in America offers direct defiance, as they assert, to the known hygienic laws. This view is supported with great intrepidity by a woman's journal in Providence, called the Una—not a lady's Magazine, fair reader, but a regular broad sheet written by and for women, whose leading articles are on women's rights, and whose advertisements are from women-doctors, women-professors, women-lecturers, women-everything. Una admits the fleeting character of her country women's charms, and contrasts mere especially Old England with New England, yielding frankly the pas in beauty to the former. She hints, we must own, at some very problematical causes of the early loss of female charms in America, such as "the bounding of life's horizon by the petty cares that wait on meat, drink and raiment; the absence of genial and improving intercourse, and of earnest interest in the hopes and fortunes of this race; and the little rivalries and little aspirations on which, for lack of better objects, so many a soul is fain to waste its energies."

All this is very well to the philosophic Una, who pays her taxes under protest, since she had no voice in laying them on; but the implied notion that our pretty country women have no petty cares connected with their food, no little rivalries and little aspirations, but plenty of earnest interest in the destinies of the races, is very compliamentary. After flourishing little, however, about these grievences, which, we fear, is not wholly unknown to our English beauties, she proceeds to the main point. "What," she asks, "is the diet of New England generally? Hot biscuit, fat pork, and tea! these are the staples. Every are varied with preserves, made pound for pound, and endless variety of cake, and the inevitable pie. Pastry, which most children in New England are not allowed to touch until they get their long frocks or tailed coats on, is here the every-day food of young and old. Salt pork is cheap—that is, greasy falsemeness makes all pall sooner on the appetite than any other ment, and so it forms the piece de resistance at almost all tables, except those whose owners are well to do in the world. Tea is the great panacea for all fatigue, low spirits, dampness, coldness, pains in the head and in the back; and in short, for nearly all the ills that flesh is heir to; the quantity taken by middle-aged and elderly women almost surpasses belief. Certainly, to put the average at six or eight cups a day, would be setting it low enough.

What mere human beauty could stand these horrors? Fancy Miss Angeling, dressed for her first ball, and sitting down before she goes forth conquering and to conquer, to keep up the stamina with just a little snack of fat pork, goose berry jam and pumpkin pie! Is it any wonder that this young lady should wither at twenty-five? Yet fat pork has its advocates. Cobbett was delighted with the fondness of the Americans for "extreme unction," and on his return to this country, did everything in his power to force the greasy dish upon the English palate, affirming that a dislike to fat pork was a decided symptom of insanity. We may allude, likewise, to the important part played by hog's lard in the composition of comforts. The thousand and one kinds of paste and pomatum for the skin and hair are all of this substance, only differing a little in the color and perfume; and in nineteen cases out of twenty hog's lard in bear's grease. Why should a substance improve beauty when absorbed by the skin, and destroy it when taken into the stomach? This is a question we leave to be settled between Una and the chemists.

Another cause of the unhappy condition of female beauty in America is stated by the outspoken Una to be—the dirtiness of the fair sex. This is dreadful. Not one woman in ten, she asserts, permits cold water to touch her whole person every day, and not one in five performs the same ablution once a week; "while, if the truth could be at once flashed forth from its hiding-place, it would show still longer intervals, from the barn thought of which imagination shrinks." We do not know what is the case in this respect as regards the majority of our own country women; and, to say truth, we are afraid to ask.

The wrath of Una falls next upon the sleeping accommodations. "Three-quarters of New England," she tells us, "sleep in slightly enlarged coffins;" and in our opinion, a capital plan it is, for if the fourth quarter were stowed with the rest, the people might as well be in their graves at once. These coffins are called bed-rooms, for no other reason than that they are large enough to hold a bed, a light-stand, and a wash-stand; and "they are often rendered redolent of sweetness by thickets of coats, pantaloons, dresses, and petticoats hung on the wall." This is so faithful a sketch of the bed-rooms of the middle class Londoners, that one might fancy Una to be speaking, by mistake, on the wrong side of the question, till we hear that the dens described are "purified by the perfumes of the adjoining kitchen, and the lead, dry heat of its red-hot stove. Here "pa, ma, and the baby," with now and then a broom of small fry in a "trundle-bed," seethe and swelter through the winter nights, and fit themselves admirably for facing the nor'-wester in the morning. Here, when one of the family is sick, he is pretty sure to die; because a fever almost inevitably takes the typhoid form from the fetid atmosphere around, and the struggling currents of health are sent stagnating back to the hardened heart and lungs."

Up to this point, Una makes out no case specially against her country women; and if the argument ended here, we should have to bring in Nature guilty of what is laid to the charge of the American women. But now, at the very fag-end of the discourse, comes the whole gist of the matter, and see why it is that English women are superior in freshness of looks, and in their duration of beauty, not only to their transatlantic sister, but to the women of most of the countries of Europe. "All day long in winter," says Una, "the stove heat burns into the brain, and withers the cheeks, and palsies the muscles, and enfeebles the step; and though summer comes with its outer air and its fruits and flowers, the lords it is asked to remove are too much for it, and the years circle round, the weary, soul-consuming years, and the bad diet, and the uncleanly habits, and the foul air, and the hot stove have done their miserable work. Beauty is gone, health is vanished, hope has set, and the young mother, who should be just beginning to shed beauty and goodness and light around her, has shrunken mournfully into the forlorn and wrinkled and unlovely old woman. When will our country women awake and ponder the things that concern their peace?"

The stove, in fact, including the foot-stove, or chaufferette, is the great enemy of beauty throughout the world. Wherever this is used, there is no such thing seen in the woman as middle age; all are either young and pretty—if nature has bestowed charms—or old and ugly. The blooming middle age of the English woman is the grand distinctive feature of our island; and it is owing neither to the absence of fat pork, in their diet, nor to the presence, in their feelings, of earnest interest in the destinies of mankind, but simply to their inhaling a pretty considerable quantity of fresh air, both in summer and winter. Not that they imbibe enough, far from it. Their sleeping arrangements and their ablutions are both very imperfect we know; but it may be a question, whether their negligence in these respects, though hurtful to themselves, is not advantageous to us of the ruder sex. Things are bad enough with us as they are, but if English women "awoke and pondered the things that concerned their peace"—what would become of the peace of the men? [Chambers's Edinburgh Journal.

DEATH OF THOMAS NOON TALFOURD.—The advices by the steamer Franklin announce the sudden death of this distinguished scholar and jurist, which took place on the 12th of March, while delivering a charge to the grand jury at Stafford, England. In the walk of literature, Talfourd attained an honorable distinction. Commencing with the arduous duties of a reporter for the daily press, he soon became an eminent lawyer, member of Parliament and a contributor to various literary periodicals, and at length produced the tragedy of "Ion," the work by which he is chiefly known to readers in this country. This was brought out by Mr. Macready at the Covent Garden theatre on the 26th of May, 1836. "The Athenian Captive," and "Glencoe," though inferior to "Ion," are allowed by competent judges to possess a very considerable degree of merit. "Vacation Rambles" is the title of another popular work by the same author.

A HARD HIT.—Some years ago, Roger M. Sherman and Perry Smith, of Connecticut, were opposed to each other, as advocates in an important case before a court of justice. Smith opened the case with a violent and foolish tirade against Mr. Sherman's political character. Sherman rose in a composed manner, and remarked;

"I shall not discuss politics before this court; but I am perfectly willing to argue questions of law, to chop logic, or even split hairs with him."

"Split that, then!" said Smith, at the same time pulling out a short, rough looking hair from his head, and handing it over to Sherman.

"May it please the honorable court," retorted Sherman, "I didn't say bristles."

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1854.

ANTI-LIQUOR LAW.—The time is near at hand when the citizens of Mississippi will be called upon to decide whether licenses for the sale of ardent spirits, shall be renewed. In connection with this subject, we copy from the Flag of the Union a communication from the Rev. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, on the duty of saying "No" to the importunities of those who may be desirous of continuing the business. He presents the proposition in a strong light, and in that independent style for which he is so distinguished. To him the friends of temperance are more indebted, perhaps, than any other man, for the [illegible] and passing of the excellent [illegible] Liquor Law. The pen—"gray [illegible] which the Governor appended the act, has been presented him, and is now at Hyde & Goodrich's, waiting a handsome silver casing.

PUTNAM AND HARPER.—McGinnis & Carver, 36 Camp street, have obliged us by laying an early copy of each on our table. The first article in Harper, "Travels in New Mexico," is a confirmation of the information Rev. Mr. Nicholson has given us of the scandalous lives of the Romish clergy and the degraded state of morals in that country. Vices of [illegible] debauchery, gambling and concubinage, are practiced openly, as the Mass.

BALTIMORE CONFERENCE.—This body recently met in Baltimore, and continued in session for fifteen days. It is the largest Conference of the Methodist Church, embracing, in addition to the greater part of Maryland, considerable portions of Pennsylvania and Virginia. It has 325 preachers—only 270 of whom are effective. The increase the past year was 720. Amount raised for missions $29,234 15. For the tract cause $5240 82.

The appeal of the Southern Commissioners from the Western Suit is before the Supreme Court, and we may look—in course of time—for a decision. A correspondent of a city paper, writing from Washington, April 6, says:

The case in the Supreme Court to which I casually alluded yesterday is an appeal from a decision in Ohio, in a case between the Methodist Church, South and North, where the former had sued for its share of the Western book concern. Mr. Stansbury is associated with ex-Secretary Ewing in behalf of the appellees, and Mr. Badger is for the appellants. The case attracts a good share of interest. Mr. Stansbury is represented as a lawyer of excellent ability.

A SHOT ACROSS THE BOWS.

The parsonage of Carondelet street church was honored the past month with the presence of a burly, consequential gentleman, styling himself "Dr. Kay"—all the way from England. He was traveling for liberal information, gathering statistics and patronizing this new and rising country generally. Withal, he represented himself to the pastor of said church as a Wesleyan clergyman—knew something of the Reform movement (and of the "Wesleyan Times," too.) "Dr. Kay" hinted to preach on his first visit and more directly on his second—but the pastor wouldn't take—all of which was very provoking. "Mr. W. and his brethren" in the "Crescent City" had seen enough of strolling dignitaries of "Dr. Kay's" ilk to be on their guard.

"Brimful of wrath and cabbage," as he is about to leave the country, he will leave us his blessing, and drops this note from the St. Charles Hotel, April 7, 1854:

"Expecting in the course of the day, to leave for Europe, Dr. Kay presents his compts. to Mr. W—; and after a month's sojourn in the Crescent City, he deems it perhaps right to acknowledge the marked attention and very great hospitality of himself and Bren. in the City; to whom he stands indebted for——not so much as "a cup of cold water." From one of them indeed he received a somewhat pedantic intimation that his church would be open at certain hours, and the privilege of worshipping with them available! Being however, of opinion that there was the promise of much greater edification elsewhere, he availed himself of the common privilege of all—a course, in some degree also, determined by a most impressive specimen of Carondelet Pulpit eloquence," &c.

Some nice abuse follows. So "a chield" has been "amang" us—taking notes—and may "prent 'em." Then for another Trollopping.

"Dr. Kay" must excuse us. A cup of cold water is a small boon to one who might like something stronger; and so the hospitality of poor Methodist preachers to him who can afford to luxuriate at the St. Charles Hotel. "Dr. Kay" is one of those self-complacent, almost enviable bodies, whose opinion of themselves must be a continual feast: what need had he of attentions?

Now, this paragraph is for two reasons: 1st, To anticipate the coming "NOTES ON AMERICA—Crescent City, by Dr. Kay, tenth thousand, 800, pp. 1855." 2d, To let our English readers at 161 Fleet street, London, and especially N. Y., know that "Dr. Kay" has turned up.

It appears by the census just taken that the population of Montgomery, Ala., is 6995, of which there are 3939 whites and 3056 blacks.

PROTESTANT UNIONS.

Christian denominations are not equal to all benevolent operations. A stronger combination or a wider law of connectionalism than any of them presents is called for. Such occasions of Protestant Unions are multiplying, and it is one of the best signs of this country and age. The American Bible Society, founded in 1816, is one of the first, and certainly the noblest. There are less ones, but not less useful in their sphere—those operating in States, neighborhoods, cities and villages, and doing a work to which a sect is inadequate. There is a real unity in evangelical Protestantism, for the display and cultivation of which these are fortunate opportunities. Such Unions, well organized, present on the one hand a refutation of the infidel sneer at religious dissension, and on the other a striking contrast to that forced, lifeless unity, the enemies of Protestantism boast.

The pressure of an old and common enemy with great and growing pretensions, and concerted action, demands union among Protestants. They must present a solid front. The points on which there can be hearty fellowship and coöperation must be found out—multiplied. "Hell is organized, Sin is organized, Rome is organized." It is not a time, therefore, for single-handed warfare.

Greater than the expediency of these Unions, is their moral beauty. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" There the Lord commands the blessings of spiritual prosperity. There are revivals of religion. Churches prosper. The word and ordinances of God are administered with power, and prayer is not hindered.

Such is human nature (for even under the influence of grace it is weak and fallible) that these Unions are not always promotive of good; or, if they do good, it is so balanced by evil as to render their utility doubtful; or, if they spend their first energies in doing good only, after awhile they degenerate. Admit, this is not the rule, but the exception; yet the exceptions are sufficiently numerous to call for a correction. Might not a few simple and general rules be proposed which, being attended to in the beginning, would guard against the incidental evils? The main difficulties that embarrass these Unions seem to arise from these sources.

2. THEIR END IS NOT EXPLICITLY DEFINED. In a new village or country neighborhood the want of religious facilities is felt, and the people are willing to build a church (meeting house). It is to be a Union house. A few generous individuals go about with subscription papers, and the edifice is completed. The nearest Baptist preacher is invited to take a monthly appointment. The Episcopal clergyman holds divine service, when he can. The Presbyterian minister supplies part of the worship. And the Methodist itinerant, of course, takes it into his circuit. Things move on harmoniously for a while, and may be the first troubles arise from the success of the preaching. One denomination has grown into distinctness, and requires increased accommodation. The appointments begin to clash. A spark of discord is struck out, and the Adversary, ever ready to take advantage, fans it into a great matter. Indiscreet speeches are made. Hard feelings are indulged, and grow apace. A spirit of contention is gendered with which pure religion and undefiled cannot dwell. Many grieve at heart for this. Others, who rejoice in their element in a fuss, make the most of it. Union meeting houses are pronounced a curse. "A bone of contention it has been," says one. "I wish it were razed to the ground," another.

Or time may have changed the relative strength of parties without affecting their rights. By deaths, removals, or accretions of membership, one may be in the ascendency. It has occurred where this party took possession "bodily," to the exclusion of the rest, and scandal of religion.

But where is the remedy in either case? The original subscribers went blindly, though by generous impulse, into the business. The property is held may be by trustees who are not members of any Church, and like Gallio "care for none of these things." They may have no right to interpose a settlement, if they desired to so. There are no writings defining the extent of denominational privilege in the building and regulating the use of it. A single clause at the head of the subscription paper might have saved a world of trouble.

Again: there being no defined use of that pulpit, a strolling lecturer on biology or phrenology, a disciple of Voltaire, or a politician, may claim the use of it. Who shall forbid? There are, who would invest with some sacredness the place where the Word of God is proclaimed. They venerate the sanctuary. Others would make it as common as the market house.

The remedy of all this, first and best, is where any denomination can bring enough members and friends to its aid, let the ground be deeded, and house built in its own name. There will then be order, which is Heaven's first law, and ought to be the Church's. The people know what doctrines and religious systems they are fostering. While the pulpit may be courteously extended to others, it will be under such restrictions as to prevent its becoming a platform of promiscuous wrangling. Preaching will take a form of positivity rather than of contradiction. But when the Union plan must be resorted to, its use should be specified and regulated.

2. THE CHARACTER OF THEIR MANAGEMENT NEEDS TO BE UNDERSTOOD.

For want of this, Union Sunday Schools, Union Academies for religious education, Union Charity Societies often end to the injury of the cause they espouse and the disgust of all concerned. The exigencies calling for their organization are urgent, the manner informal. By and bye, too much power is found in certain hands. The books used, the documents issued, are not the sort originally contemplated by them all, neither can they conscientiously adopt them. But they have given their money and committed their influence. The Union having lost its equilibrium, tends to anything but regaining it; gets more and more one-sided. Suspicions and jealousies are awakened; and from the thinking reach the speaking—and possibly, if there be not watchfulness and prayer, the quarreling developement. And the wicked wag their heads at the humiliating scene, and say, "Aha, aha!"

We have seen enough of good spoiled in this way, to desire for Protestant Unions, a guaranty. By some they are deemed impracticable for any considerable achievement or time. This cannot be granted. By others, they are looked upon with distrust, because generally working the advancement of the strongest party. There is too much truth in this.

The remedy is in a CONSTITUTION! Not a cumbrous and complex document; but a plain compact in writing, setting forth the uses of the Union and by whom it is to be managed. Let the denominational representation in the Boards of Management and Offices be fixed, and the manner of appointment sufficiently guarded to protect any denominational interest that may be involved, or incidentally arise, in carrying out the general plan.

Until this entering into Constitutions before entering into Unions becomes more a rule among Protestants, their attempts to approach each other in benevolent co-operation will continually endanger repulsion. Their schemes will fall through and their bickerings be a reproach.

The genius of certain denominations seems to fit its members, in the absence of superior mental or numerical strength, for getting and wielding an unequal influence in these Unions. As a clerical friend of ours lately remarked to an amiable Agent who desired to enlist him in a Union Sabbath School movement: "In this matter my church is fortunately able to operate alone and think it better. We like to be on fraternal terms and take pleasure in the good accomplished by others; but I have observed in these Unions you always get the best of it. If there are five fingers in the pie, you always manage to have three."

Many noble charities can only stand on a general Protestant basis. Thousands are willing to help who have never taken the trouble and will not assume the responsibility of determining which denomination of Protestants is right. Yet they believe the right is among them. Permitting the management, for want of constitutional restrictions, to be wrested or to lapse into a denominational character, is not only a violation of faith to the founders of it, but gives injustice to the charity itself. Its resources are thereby cut off or materially lessened. Instead of having the right of appealing to general sympathy and aid, it has been made a sectarian affair and dependent on the limited resources of a sect.

These Unions start fairly and promise much. Indeed it sounds like an offence to mention constitutional restrictions. Of course, all the Churches will have an equal share in the offices, the committees and the management! How can these fall out, by the way? The unsuspecting zeal that presided over the inception of the enterprise having been worked off, it may be observed, in most cases, that matters have taken a one-sided direction: and this occurs with a suspicious regularity. All the important offices are filled by one denomination, and the working majority is of the same sort. In a voting country like ours, three out of five is preferable to the whole five. The control is monopolized and the responsibility divided.

These facts gradually draw attention. A few easy souls are willing to take what they can get, satisfied at not being quite cast out. For peace's sake, some not insensible to the violation of faith perpetrated, quietly pocket their share of the injury and injustice. Others feel under no obligation to cover up the matter. They expose it, and it turns out contrary to the saying of Solomon, that "the end of a thing is better than the beginning thereof."

These remarks are applicable to local Bible Societies, Young Men's Christian Associations, Protestant Orphan Asylums, and such like: all of which originate in the best impulses of the human heart, and are capable of promoting the best interests of human nature; but without checks and safeguards are prone to depart from their original basis and to be worked for denominational aggrandizement.

It is no part of our present design to be special, though for that, one need not travel far. It will not do to trust these things to chance. Upon the proper adjustment of influences and security for a fair denominational representation in the Executive and Management their harmony depends. Nor will it do to trust it to courtesy. Courtesy is not a written code. And many who lack it not in their personal relations are not agreed as to the extent of its parliamentary application. One constitutional right is worth a dozen privileges.

We love these Protestant Unions, they look well, they can do well. It is refreshing to the soul and strengthening to the arm to stand side by side with Christians of every name—promoting a common cause. But there is an evil, and he that speaks it out is not an enemy but a friend. Greater works are yet to be done by Protestant Unions than any achieved. The field is widening for marshalling great forces and great issues are impending. Whatever tends to breed suspicion and distrust should be avoided.

If need be, we shall resume this subject soon, and give it a special application and interest in all of the Unions alluded to. We hope it may not be necessary. We wait to see.

ONE OF THE OLD TIME.

In our obituary column is mention of one to whom a position in the Church of God belonged far above her social position. Christian service and grace create an eminence of their own, and present in this case a subject worthy of more than a passing notice.

Theresa Antoinette Canoe (maiden name—Gaubart) was of French descent; a native of St. Domingo. She escaped from the island by a singular providence, at the insurrection, in which a part of the family were murdered. The ship sailed to Wilmington, North Carolina, where her lot was cast for several years. She had been raised in the Roman Catholic faith, but while at Wilmington, under the ministry of Rev. Johnson, was converted and joined his church, and began a career of earnest Methodism. The liveliness and liberty of its worship accorded most happily with her temperament, and she loved the Church with a great love. In the year 1816 she came to New Orleans, and met her mother here, who, through her daughter's instrumentality, became a Methodist also before her death in 1822.

Few love-feasts have been held in any part of the city these half dozen years without Mother Canoe. She invariably spoke, and after a bit of bright experience, her talk generally took a historical turn, and she would tell the Methodists what they were when she landed here, and admonish saitably. She inquired for "her people," and it took her eight days to find them, and then a few senle worshipping in a loft. The narrative of that search was of unique interest as told in her broken English and interrupted by her "gloria in excelsis." The directions that led her to the people she sought were very like those which guided John Fletcher, when he said: "he would find them if they were above ground."

This was the "old panel" of Methodism in New Orleans; and she remarked to us, a few days ago, that besides herself none were now living, except Martin Skinner and Patrick Thomson, a colored man. About that time was the ministry of Brothers Munnafes and Mark Moore, missionaries. The former, we believe, was the first Protestant minister that died here of yellow fever; and "I close his eyes wid my own hand" was a sad yet pleasing remembrance of the deceased. The same of Steele and Larned.

The early Methodist ministers, who have labored in this field, know this name. Many, dear in Christ had gone before, and she looked with happy assurance to meeting them. Her charities and hospitalities have been liberal and of a long time. To the Church her humble services were rendered when it most needed them. Considering her position towards it from its beginning; her religious activities and steadfastness; her unostentatious life and peaceful death, we reckon her to have been such as Paul would have made mention of, had she been a member of one of his epistolary churches, when acknowledging by name, the offices of those women who had been "a succorer of many"—"bestowed labor upon us"—"have helped us much in Christ Jesus." Doubtless, she enjoys what she often exultingly sung—

"My happy soul would fly away,
To sing God's praise in endless day."

NEW MEXICO.—Rev. Mr. Nicholson, who opened a mission among the Mexicans, at Santa Fe, under the auspices of the M. E. Church, North, passed through the city on Tuesday, en route for Wheeling, Va., where is his family, from whom he has been absent a year. He came by El Paso; left Albequerque late in February; was detained on the way by sickness. The toils and exposures of this hard but promising mission have shattered him. On the way, his small company passed a scene of fresh Indian murder; but Mr. N. brought his own scalp in the right place; thanks, as he says, to an overruling Providence and a force of "revolvers." He was full of important information touching the openings in the West. The work is hard and sometimes hazardous, but the prospect of planting the gospel in those regions is not hopeless. The Roman priesthood live very scandalous lives for the most part; are divided among themselves; and hold the faith of the people by a feeble tenure. The old bottles cannot hold the new wine much longer. A converted priest, who has stood a fair probation and married his wife decently and legitimated his children, is doing a good work at Santa Fe, Pecos and vicinity. Mr. N. left him on a circuit. Having been once a friar, he makes an excellent itinerant. He told as more that must not go into the papers, lest it travel back and block up the opening door.

Several centuries ago, old Bishop Aylmer, seeing his congregation pretty generally asleep, took his Hebrew Bible from his pocket, and read a chapter, which roused attention, when the old minister sharply rebuked them for sleeping when they might have understood him, and listening when they knew not a word he said.

Philosophy! Faith! Speaking of dryness these are very dry, and of depth they are very deep. A great deal of hard reading and profitless brain-work have been imposed upon the world under these names, separately. And when they are both presented at one view—"Philosophy of Faith"—the prospect to the general reader is not inviting. Yet the book is well titled. We trust and venture to predict that it will be generally read. We were not aware that there was such a writer among us as the author of "Philosophy of Faith." In the columns of a contemporary "Advocate" we have frequently read him with profit and pleasure; but the nature of an editorial paragraph, or the length of a newspaper column, did not permit him to lay himself out, as he does here.

Mr. Cobb, without a stint of rationalistic prejudice on the one hand, or contempt of reason on the other (for he assigns it proper functions in the premises) takes high ground for Christianity. It is emphatically supernatural. Supernatural in its historical phenomena and principles, and supernaturally experienced in its influences. The scheme for human salvation being thus transcendental in its derivation and nature, "Divine wisdom has made provisions for a new mental process adequate to its efficient reception."

The words quoted give a ready clue to the ground the author takes, and consistently, regarding FAITH. He gives it a Scriptural position—the basis, the grand postulate—"Without faith it is impossible to please God." It connects the soul with the Divine source of moral life. Saving faith is an anomaly. So entirely anomalous, in regard to man's moral nature, "that by no imaginable possibility can he evoke the least inherent energy which is necessary to its exercise." The definition safely and widely distinguishes it from that faith of which it is said, in a general way, that "it is natural when directed to natural objects, and religious when directed to religious objects;" and for a reason. For, as is well and conclusively said of this latter view, "it ascribes powers to faith which, if it did possess, would render man's conversion but an ordinary operation of nature, not a new birth, a re-creation, and a moral resurrection. Faith is thus presented as an original principle of our natural mental constitution, assuming a new character, by acting in a new direction." But while that rationalizing process is protested against, that is sometimes adopted in endeavoring to explain the peculiar phenomena of spiritual life, or reconcile the carnal mind to them, it is admitted that "illustrations may be drawn from the natural life of man to illustrate the obligations and working of spiritual faith." This protest is well put. There is a cause. Chrysostom, in his day, warned against injudicious attempts at accommodating the truths of revelation, why they are such, and why they are so, to the carnal mind by inadequate parallelisms and degrading comparisons. Who has not trembled for the Ark on witnessing, after this style, well-meant pulpit efforts at setting forth the forensic character of the Atonement, the witness of the Spirit, and other mysteries of the Gospel; themes that cannot be handled too discreetly; that are seen best in their own light; and when let down below their level, to assist the comprehension of the world, fail to command its reverence. A species of rationalizing hardly less dangerous than that more offensive sort which comes of pride. To neither does our author give place—no, not for a moment.

The "Philosophy of Faith" is discussed under divisions. The Nature, the Traits and the Relations of Faith. For edification, as well as to sample the book, we present some remarks under the first. Two valuable terms introduced by German metaphysics are made good use of in distinguishing faith into subjective and objective;—"designating by the former term, faith as it exists as an attribute of the perceptive spirit; and by the latter, that system of principles which the former embraces." The attentive reader of the Bible needs not be told that in these two senses the word is there employed. To be more distinct and quoting farther—"Objective faith is the creed of an individual; subjective faith that by which the creed is lodged in his mind or heart." The chief test of saving faith lies in its subjective nature. By this the heathens are justified, if at all. This it is that vitalizes. Without it, all is mere formalism. But we prefer, as he can do it better, that the author speak for himself (pp. 47-8):

Now, faith seen in all ages, and of necessity to be the prominent element of the moral life, is farther seen considered objectively, to vary in every age. Far wider now, and embracing almost an infinitude more of objects, is the scope of the spiritual man's faith, than it was in the patriarchal dispensation; and how much wider, more extensive, the range of Abraham's faith, than that of those who are represented to "dwell in the valley and shadow of death." In the types and ceremony of the rich Mosaic ritual, what incomparably more fertile sources of faith had the children of Israel than the children of Noah. How was this fund of religious meditation increased by the recorded visions of the evangelical prophets. Under all these differing dispensations of truth, however, we have recorded instances of the moral life steadily sustained through faith. Such an identity of effect, as displayed in the moral characters of those, who, under varying degrees of light, led the life of faith, argues an identity of cause somewhere. That cause being faith, must either be faith as subjective, or faith as objective. But as the faith objective has been seen displayed in the most diversified forms, it must have been an identity of faith subjective which has characterized those who have led the moral life. The faith of these individuals, therefore, was genuine and efficient, not because it embraced such and such objects, since it embraced different objects, but because it embraced these various objects, with an indentity of peculiar nature. Their faith, in other words, was genuine, because it was of a given nature, not because it apprehended a given set of objects. To conclude: That act or state of faith which is efficacious to please God, and to constitute an individual righteous, is not always and of necessity, such an act or state, as that it must be able to embrace at one glance all the particular revelations and promises of the economy of moral salvation; but it is such an act or state, as to be, in all cases where it is genuine and efficacious for the proper ends of faith, identical in its essential nature: and it so seizes on any particular revelation of the divine will, as to involve, by implication, the entire economy of man's moral salvation. When, therefore, we start the inquiry as to the genuineness of one's faith, we are not so much to ask, what has he believed, as how has he believed.

"Abundant evidence" is claimed for confirmation of these views in Hebrews, xi. chap. If a distinct apprehension of Christ "evidently crucified" is held to be absolutely requisite to justification in every case, why should Paul accumulate the instances of this chapter as practical illustrations of saving faith, some of whom, as Rahab were dimly and distantly, if by any consciousness at all, connected with the Cross. They held a Redeemer, by implication. But the same principle that took God at his word was in them all: the same spirit of faith: the same spring of moral action.

The doctrine so boldly laid down needs limitations, and of these the author thinks he has given a sufficiency. It is important to guard against that latitudinarianism, "No matter what you believe, so you are sincere." A principle which is so divinely derived can hardly take a substantially vicious direction. It derivation imparts a polarity to genuine faith, and it is drawn from every point to Christ "lifted up." Subjective faith is dependent upon a correct objective faith for full development. A display of its proper objects nourishes faith. A correct creed, therefore, is important. "All truth is not necessary to genuine faith; but all truth is necessary to the highest forms and degrees of faith."

From these subjectives tests of faith many interesting consequences follow. It leads to an awakening personal inquiry reaching beyond the settlement of the Creed. Formalism has its refuge taken away. The rubbish is cleared off, and "Ye must be born again" is preached in its unmitigated, spiritual import. The obvious but singular fact is accounted for that some people, educated to very defective theological systems, are better than their belief; while, between men of the same kind and same amount of objective faith, there is such a marked difference of moral character. A platform rises up on which all that "fear God and work righteousness" are accepted of one another as well as of Him. This is the true fellowship, and quoting again, we conclude:

Christians and the servants of God, in every age or nation, may under different dispensations and the mighty and subtle influence of error, vary widely in their objective faith, but in the homogeneousness of their subjective faith, they find a principle of unity, against which no element of discord need prevail. Individuals therefore, who have this kind of genuine faith, may unite in the common cause of God and the gospel: but those, who insist on the entire unity of objective faith, the mere dogmatists, with whom "the faith" of the church, in an objective sense, is matter of supreme consideration, never can. Theirs is a principle of unity utterly false; because it is utterly impracticable. All men may have genuine and therefore homogeneous subjective faith; but it is out of the reach of our present condition, that our minds should conform to an identical system of objective faith. The effort which has been made to secure unity, on the basis of an homogeneous objective faith, shows by the very mode, in which it has been exerted, to attain its end, that it is utterly futile. It has been accompanied by the suppression of truth from the mass, in its own native channels of communication; requiring that a few should think for the many; and it has put force in requisition, to secure a professed unity of objective faith, which, produced by such means, must be insincere: for truth enters the soul by argument, and not by compulsion.

We advise our readers to get the book—it will do them good. It is a well-timed contribution and a valuable addition to our theological literature. The profound thinker and the devout worshipper will, alike, find aliment and entertainment. The reasoning is comprehensive, and done in a style of philosophical accuracy, while the spirit of the book bears directly upon experimental religion, and is happily calculated to quicken the Church in the attainment and exercise of the "faith which works by love" and purifies the heart.

THE VEXED QUESTION.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to make a suggestion. A great deal of interest seems to be manifested of late relative to the Local Clergy in the Church. Various plans are devised for their employment and government. While one is desirous to have the itinerant field enlarged so as to take them in; another is for cutting them off altogether for fear the Local field will ultimately swallow in all the Itinerancy.

Truly, the Local Brethren, now-a-days have about the same connection, and stand in the same relation to the Church, that the "fifth wheel" would to a wagon.

All the Local Preachers would not like to be fenced in to the Itinerant field; so those looking in that direction may be disappointed. In all probability, the General Conference will not take it upon itself to threw away the "fifth wheel" (it being useful sometimes) so those desiring that class of officials cut off may also be disappointed.

That local common or old field, in which so many of the preachers of our Church enjoy themselves to the full, thereby tempting many from the itinerant ranks to lean on the fence, and join in their pleasures, may be permitted to remain hard by the Church with the gap down.

Let me suggest, that the General Conference make a rule that when a man joins the Itinerancy, a location asked and granted, shall work for the person a disability to exercise any of the functions of a minister in the Church.

In fact, that the person thus located shall be, and remain as a private member of the Church, just as if they had never been promoted to the ministry.

After such location, if the person desires again to preach in the Itinerant field, let him begin anew.

Under such a rule as this, the true itinerant spirit will be kept up and fully developed. Locations will not be so frequent. Marriage, farming, merchandise, etc., will call so many from their labors, when it is a fixed fact that all must lay down their robes before leaving their official status in the Church.

CONNECTION.—Archbishop Hughes has over his signature, the paragraph going the rounds of the newspapers, connecting the name with the acquisition of Cuba. He thought it strange that he should go into politics, putting, on any cause, such a fair portion of her Catholic Majesty's territory under the Republican flag.

Drainage in New Orleans.

With the Mississippi on its border, there can be no limit to the use made by New Orleans of its waters. I have already explained how by means of an upright shaft these waters might be made to percolate through the city, receive its tributary from each, house, and eventually flow into the river below the city. The velocity of this flow will be proportionate to the elevation of the shaft; the quantity, to its size; both are in the power of the engineer.

It is easy to imagine this great city freed from every part of the excretion of men and animals, and if the velocity and quantity of the current were sufficient, even the surface drainage might be accomplished by its means. All that is required is, to cause these various matters to flow into uprights communicating with the main pipes and supplied by pumps of adequate size and power.

Into this system of pipes those of the water supply may ultimately empty themselves. Through London, forty-five millions of gallons of water flow from the various water supplies daily. How much easier would it be to supply New Orleans with water at once for use and for the purpose of drainage?

But another object, besides cleanliness, may be accomplished by the means proposed. The flow of an ample and adequate quantity of water through the city, and, it may be, through the dwellings, would have the effect of proportionately cooling its burning soil and atmosphere. What is the mean temperature of the water of the Mississippi at New Orleans? In proportion to the lowness of that temperature will the atmosphere and soil be itself lowered.

This question has never, I believe, been considered by the highest and the ongoing. We are far better acquainted with the means of elevating the temperature of the atmosphere and of surrounding objects, than of depressing it. Yet the principles of the two operations are the same. By a sufficient number and distribution of pipes flowing with the water of the Mississippi, the dwellings at New Orleans may be maintained, at all seasons, at a refreshing temperature, as well as of a delightful purity and perfect salubrity.

The drainage of the city will not, as now, flow into marsh between the city and Lake Pontchartrain, making it one extensive fever-mobile. On the contrary, this marsh should be readily drained by means of deep trenches and one adequate pump on the shore of the lake; it will then become a beautiful garden instead of being, as at present, the source of the most noisome and pestiferous vapors.

MARSHALL HALL.

Buffalo, March 1, 1854.

FEMALES vs. LIQUOR SELLERS.—A man named T. Alexander died at Winchester, Ind., on the 28th ult., it is said, from excessive drinking. On the afternoon of the same day, forty or fifty women marched in a body to the liquor store of David Aker, made him sign a pledge not to sell any liquor after that, and then rolled the contents of his establishment, consisting of [illegible] barrels of whisky, and six or eight kegs of brandy, etc., into the street, emptied them into the gutter, and paid him $110 in cash for his loss. They next proceeded to Wm. Page's, fastened his door, but it was soon forced open, and rolled his liquors into the street, and poured them into the gutter also. Seven or eight other establishments, according to the N. Y. Tribune from which we copy, were similarly treated. Subsequently Mrs. Alexander entered suit for damages against the man who sold liquor to her husband.

INTEMPERANCE IN LOUISIANA.—A city contemporary makes the following statement: "During the last year there was expended something near $30,000,000 for intoxicating drinks in this State; $20,000,000 of this was expended in New Orleans alone. There were made about 16,000 arrests, directly and indirectly, for drunkenness, in the city and State; about 400 deaths by delirium tremens; about 75 murders, besides a host of other crimes. Over 1000 have been reduced to vagrancy and pauperism; the resources of the State have been crippled: thousands have been kept out of employment; society at large has been seriously, deeply damaged in all its relations, and the health and energies of some of our best citizens have been destroyed and ruined in life."

A new paper, published weekly and gratuitously, has been commenced in New York, called El Mulato, advocating the emancipation of the blacks in Cuba, and the gradual extinction of slavery.

GRAND JURY FINDINGS.—On Saturday last Grand Jury presented true bills against the owing persons for the following offences:— inst John Sullivan, Robert Compton and rick Walsh, Commissioners of the election at polls of the Seventh Precinct, on the 27th , for knowingly receiving illegal votes; while ngin the capacity of commissioners. Also ust James H Wingfield, James Parker, Jr. Dr. R. M. Graham. First count, for threat- g and teonacing the Commissioners of elec- s at the Seventh Precinct polls, on the 27th ; second count, for obstructing and inter- ting the inspectors and clerks of election in discharge of their duty' at the same polls, forcibly taking from them and destroying ballot box.

NORTHER OUTRAGE BY THE BOARDING-HOUSE NERS.—We have another to add to the list outrages committed by that ruffianly and perate set of men known as boarding-house ners, upon the captains and sailors of ves- trading to this port. Capt. Eldridge, of ship Young Brauder, lately arrived from on, while walking along the Levee near his el, at an early hour on Saturday evening, was attacked by a gang of these wretches, beaten nearly to death. His first intima- of their hostility was an exclamation from of their number, "There goes that old gray led ——," and the next instant he re- ed a blow in the back part of the head with lt, sling-shot, or some such weapon, and insensible. The monsters then fell upon kicking, beating and stamping his body face until he was incapable of motion, and features almost bruised out of human shape. interference of some persons in the vicinity ably saved his life, but he was carried on d his vessel, at Post 34, First District, in a ical condition.

it possible that, in one of the most populous frequented portions of the city, in open light, so foul an outrage should be commit- upon an unoffending and respectable old , and the perpetrators go unpunished? Is sible that our municipal government can- afford protection to citizens against a gang awless villains, who seem to have no fear of consequences of their crimes, and not the t regard for men's rights or lives. These perate and remorseless attacks, by the run- e of unprincipled landlords, upon captains sailors arriving in our port, and generally rant of the cause of their ill treatment, become frequent, and the matter is a cry- evil, to which some effective remedy should mediately applied. We suggest, if the or- ary methods of attaining the ends of justice that our city authorities abolish the insti- of boarding-house runners, and treat per- engaged in it as vagrants, following no est pursuit to obtain subsistence.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN.—The new Board of ermen held its first meeting last evening, rs. Adams, Braud, Caldwell, Sinnott, Irwin, el, Gilmore, Pierce, Bailey, Lagenbuhl and don, present. Mr. Caldwell was called to hair, and a message from his Honor Mayor is was read, expressing the usual, formal-, congratulatory and complimentary, in ms most appropriate to the occasion.

A protest from Messrs. J R McMurdo, E d Perry and Eugene O'Sullivan, the defeated didates for Aldermen of the Seventh Ward, then read. The protest sets forth the vari- circumstances that concurred to defeat their tion, at the polls of the Seventh Precinct, illegal proceedings, the breaking of the bal box, in which they firmly believe there were less than 140 votes, the majority of which o undoubtedly in their favor, and concludes protesting solemnly against the accession of sers. Pride, Prague and Bailey to the dignity Aldermen, and praying that the Board order new election for Aldermen to be held in the resaid precinct. The document was referred a special committee of three, Messrs. Sinnott, ams and Irwin, who retired to deliberate on it, and a recess of ten minutes was agreed n. At the expiration of half an hour the mittee submitted the following report and olutions:

The committee to whom was referred the qual- ations of the members of the present Board Aldermen, beg leave to report that Messrs. H. Durell and H. L. Peire, from the Second trict, Mr. J J. Lugenbuhl, from the Third trict, and Mr. Jesse Gilmore, from the Fourth trict, are duly elected and qualified.

We further report that, inasmuch as a pro- has been laid before this body, and it ap- ars that the ballot-box in one of the precincts been destroyed by violence, and a large mber of our fellow-citizens deprived of s ice in the election, we are not satisfied that e election of Messrs. Chas. Pride, N. E Bailey d Jas Prague, from the First District, valid. beg leave to offer the following resolutions.

(Signed) R. W. ADAMS,
P. IRWIN,
N. SINNOTT, Jr.

Resolved, That the election held in the First District on the 27th of March, 1854, for three mbers of the Board of Aldermen, is hereby clared to be null and of no effect, in conse- uence of the destruction of the ballot-box in the Seventh Precinct.

Resolved, That the Mayor be and hereby is authorized to order a new election in the First District, with as little delay as the due advertisements require, to fill three vacancies in the Board of Aldermen from that District.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Board of Aldermen notify Messrs. E. W Sewell, C. H Yancey and E. W. Perry, to retain their seats and fulfill the duties of Aldermen of the First District until their successors in office be duly elected and qualified as required by law.

The latter resolution was withdrawn, and the former were adopted by a vote of 7 to 6, the chairman giving the casting vote in the affirmative.

The Board then proceeded to elect a President, and Mr. Jas. H. Caldwell was declared unanimously re-elected. Mr. Durell; the only candidate nominated in opposition, having withdrawn his name. Mr. Charles Claiborne, the former excellent Secretary, was also unanimously re-elected. Mr. Deforges was elected Sergeant-at-Arms, and Mr. Bergman, Porter.

The Board then adjourned.

BOARD OF ASSISTANT ALDERMEN.—This body met last night in accordance with the requisition of the City Charter. General Lewis (the Mayor elect) transmitted a list of the members elect, and the Secretary, on calling the roll, found that twenty-two members were present Col W. S. Campbell was called to the chair A committee of five was appointed to examine and report upon the qualifications of members, and a recess of five minutes was had.

The Committee, consisting of Messrs. Wiltz, Dolbear, Tracey, Thayer and Stith, reported in favor of all the members present. Col Campbell, after a short absence, returned and informed the Board that it was the opinion of the City Attorney that the Board of Assistants had been sworn in informally, inasmuch as it was done by the Ex-Mayor, whereupon the members repaired to the Mayor's office and were sworn in by the new Mayor. On motion, the rules of the late Council were adopted with the exception of the 25th article, (which provides that Committees shall be balloted for viva voce) giving the appointment of the same to the chair

The Board then proceeded to the election of a President, when Col. W. S. Campbell was unanimously elected. On announcing the result, the Colonel addressed the Assembly in a plain, sensible speech, such as Col C. could alone have delivered, and entirely consonant with his high character as a man of business. He concluded by referring to the fact that as he had been elected without reference to party, so he hoped that their deliberations would be destitute of any political or sectional bias.

Mr. Julian Neville was then elected Secretary of the Board. Mr. Neville received 18 votes and Mr. Faignet received 9 votes.

Mr. E. W. C. Campbell was elected Sergeant-at-Arms by a vote of 18 to 9 against his opponent Louis Pilcher.

At this moment Mr. Stith, from the Committee on Credentials, presented a petition from certain gentlemen claiming that they were duly elected Assistant Aldermen from the Third Ward, on the ground that they received a majority of the legal votes in said ward, but which majority did not appear in consequence of the destruction of the ballot-box in the Seventh Precinct; the petitioners protest against Gerard Stith and others taking their seats, and praying for a new election, etc. The protest and certificate from the veritable Commissioners of the Seventh Ward "powls" were referred to the Judiciary Committee.

A resolution for providing a sufficient police force to protect captains and seamen from boarding-house runners and others, was read and referred to the Police Committee.

A joint resolution was offered by Mr. Stith, requesting the Mayor to tender an invitation to the Southern Commercial Convention, now in session in Charleston, to assemble in this city in December next.

General Intelligence.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, April 3, 1854.

There has been little of general interest in the Congressional record to-day.

In the Senate, Mr. Cass presented another of those petitions, which are getting to be numerous from all quarters of the country, asking the interference of our Government to procure for its citizens the rights of religious worship abroad; together with the rites of sepulture, which last in many parts of the world frequented by our citizens, are now the subject of ecclesiastical fees and ceremonies not at all in accordance with that "freedom" which, with us, is an established fundamental right.

Mr. Gwin, of California, presented a petition from some of his constituents asking the legalization of a gold coin of $50 value.

After a brief discussion of the bill authorizing the appointment of an additional number of cadets at West Point, the Senate passed into executive session to consider the Gadsden Treaty. The House spent the day in considering a bill reported by Mr. Olds, from the Committee on Post-offices, for increasing the salaries of Post-masters throughout the country.

Accounts from St. Petersburg announce the design of filling Mr. Badeau's place here with the Count de Medem, and attaches upon a more extended plan of Embassy than heretofore. One of the first inquiries of the Embassador will probably be concerning the authority of our Minister at Constantinople, Mr. Spence, for assuring the Sultan that the sympathies of this nation were with him in the European struggle now going on.

The Chargé at Sardinia, Mr. Daniel, has sent on his resignation.

Mr. Pendleton has asked for his recall from Buenos Ayres, and there will no doubt be found enough applicants from Virginia to fill these two vacancies.

The jury in the case of Schaumburg returned their verdict late on Saturday night, and it was announced this morning as follows: "Guilty of an assault, but not with intent to kill!" In shooting a man through the body does not fix the design to kill, what does?

Considerable feeling is manifested here at the efforts now on foot in California to supplant Senator Gwin by making an election before his return, and before the meeting of the Legislature last preceding the vacancy. I have no personal acquaintance with Dr. Gwin, but it is sheer justice to say of him that no State in the Union is more efficiently represented than is California by him. If she sends any one here who will do more for her in a legislative capacity, she will send a remarkable man.

Messrs. Cutting and Breckenridge have each left the city and journeyed to their respective homes; this is better than going to their long home. CHRONICLER.

A MONSTER STEAMSHIP.—The ways for laying down an immense screw and paddle steamer for the Eastern Steam Navigation Company, are in the course of completion at the yard of Messrs Scott Russell, the extensive ship builders at Millwall, England, where some hundreds of piles have been driven in order to support the huge fabric. Many hundreds of tons of iron for her keel are ready to be put together, and the contracts have been signed for the completion and launching of the ship within two years from the present time. The following are a few particulars of her dimensions: extreme length of her main deck, 700 feet; being 420 feet longer than the great Himalaya steamer; extreme length of keel, 680 feet; extreme breadth of beam, 83 feet; depth of hold, (forming four decks) 58 feet; length of principal saloon 80 feet.

TRAGICAL SCENE.—A most tragical occurrence took place recently in Waupaca county, Wisconsin. A farmer sold a yoke of oxen and received his pay in paper money. The man who purchased the oxen, being in a hurry to start off, requested the farmer to assist him in yoking them up. He accordingly went to the yard with the man for the purpose, leaving the money lying on the table. On his return to the house, he found his little child had taken the money from the table, and was in the act of kindling the fire in the stove with it. From the impulse of the moment, he hit the child a slap on the side of the head, so hard as to knock it over; and, in the fall, it struck its head against the stove with such force as to break its skull.

The mother, who was in the act of washing a small child in a tub of water, in an adjoining room, on hearing the fracas, dropped the child, and ran to the room whence the noise proceeded, and was so much terrified at what she there beheld, that she forgot the little child in the tub for a time, and upon her return to the room found the little one drowned! The husband, after a few moments reviewing the scene before him, seeing two of his own children dead, without further reflection, took down his gun and blew his own brains out!

Telegraphic.

THE COMMERCIAL CONVENTION.

CHARLESTON, April 9.—Delegates to the Commercial Convention are rapidly coming in, and there is every prospect of having a very large meeting. Dawson, of Georgia, Leslie Coombs, of Kentucky, and Trousdale and Jones of Tennessee, have arrived. It is thought that either Jones or Trousdale will be elected President of the Convention.

A telegraphic dispatch from Charleston, dated the 10th inst., says: "The Convention, consisting of representatives from thirteen States, assembled at 12 o'clock this morning, and the Mayor of Charleston was temporarily called to the chair. The Chairman decided that this was strictly an adjourned Convention from Memphis, and he invited the Hon. Wm. C. Dawson, of Georgia, to take the chair as permanent President A committee subsequently nominated Dawson for President, and also nominated thirteen Vice-Presidents and thirteen Secretaries, one of each from each State represented. A committee of three from each State was appointed to prepare business, and the Convention adjourned to meet to-morrow.

There are 15 delegates from Maryland, 130 from Virginia, 300 from Tennessee, 40 from Georgia, 5 from Louisiana, 22 from North Carolina, 7 from Mississippi, 17 from Alabama, and Leslie Coombs from Kentucky. South Carolina is largely represented."

CHARLESTON, April 11.—The Convention has been occupied with resolutions relative to a Railroad to the Pacific, and a direct trade with portions of the Union. James of Tennessee, and Albert Pike of Arkansas, spoke at considerable length on the subject, and the latter declaimed against the policy of waiting for Congress to extend Government aid to the project or make it a Government affair.

The resolutions were referred to a special committee, which will report to-morrow. The Convention then adjourned.

Later from Texas.

The steamship Louisiana, Capt. J. Smith, arrived from Galveston yesterday, bringing Galveston papers of the 8th, and papers from the interior as late as the. The following is a list of her passengers:

Maj Gen Zachary Taylor Smith, U S A, maj E B Babbitt, lady and servants, miss Babbitt, master Babbitt, mrs Webster, Clayton and lady, Schwing and lady, mrs Ezell, dr Holland and lady, mr Bassett and servant, mrs Hooper, master Hooper, Wyberd and lady, Hinton Earle, Medland Hancock, T Packard, Chiey Wm Bossatt, Jackson, Herron, Smith Little, Martin Rickes, dr Anderson, Jno McElroy

The reports on the growing crops of Corn, Cotton and Sugar are favorable.

The crops in Gonzales county, says the Inquirer, are in almost flourishing condition. Corn is knee high and growing rapidly, and the planters have commenced scraping Cotton

We learn from the San Antonio Ledger of the 30th ult. that Messrs. Edwards & Pyron started from San Antonio on the 27th for California, with a drove of six hundred beef cattle. Their party consisted of about forty men; among them were "printers, blacksmiths, wheelrights, carpenters, lawyers, doctors and grave-diggers."

A court martial is to be held in Austin on the 17th inst, for the purpose of trying J. M. Steiner, for killing Major Arnold, at Fort Graham, last October. Brevet Brigadier General Wm. S. Harney, will preside over the court, which will consist of thirteen officers.

The 21st of April, the anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto is to be celebrated appropriately in the principal towns throughout the State.

The "Spring fights" in Western Texas have opened with a great deal of spirit. The San Antonio Ledger says: A friend informs us that a serious row occurred, a few days since, at the rauch of Manuel Flores, all about one of mother Eve's daughters. One man was shot through above the crotch, another stabbed in the side and badly cut on the head, and a third had his face seriously carved. None of them were mortally wounded.

FROM SANTA FE AND EL PASO.—The San Antonio Ledger, of the 30th ult., has intelligence from El Paso. It gives some particulars of a fight between what it calls "the Salt party from Dona Ana," and "the party from El Paso." The latter, it says, was composed of twenty-seven men—seventeen Americans, one Englishman, and the rest Mexicans. They were all well armed, and had with them a six pounder. This party met the Dona Ana party at Los Chinos, laden with salt. They were commanded to surrender, which they refused to do, when the fight commenced, and lasted twenty minutes. The six pounder was fired three times. Dona Ana's party fled, leaving two men killed, one mortally wounded, on the ground. They had three mules, two horses, and about fifteen head of cattle killed. The victors captured and drove off one hundred and seventy-one head of cattle The only damage they sustained was the loss of one horse, and returned safely after an absence of twelve days.

Business was very dull and there was but little prospect of speedy improvement.

Peach-trees were in bloom, and nature was putting on her emerald robe for the approaching season.

Intelligence from Santa Fé to the 25th February has been received at San Antonio.

Gen Garland arrived in Santa Fé on the 31st of January from Albuquerque.

The Legislature adjourned sine die on the 2d of February.

THE END OF A STATESMAN'S CAREER.—A French paper states that Lord Brougham has placed the following inscriptions over the entrance door of his chateau at Cannes:

Invenit portum; spes et fortuna valete;
Sat me lusistis; ludite nunc alios.

That is, "I have reached my haven; hope and fortune, farewell; ye have sported with me enough; now find another dupe" Lord Brougham's French neighbors construe this as "an announcement of his intention to retire from public life, and to pass the remainder of his days among them in the genial climate of the Var." However that may be, the adoption of such a motto at the end of the career of such a brilliant statesman, is a very instructive fact He stands forth, like Solomon at the end of life, writing "vanity of vanities" on all.

Fashion, says the Buffalo Republic, plays some queer freaks with its waud. The last innovation is, we believe, the using of the middle name and dropping the first and "christen" index. For instance, Jones, who always was distinguished in his younger days by pinin John D or "Jack," has concluded that appellation to be "vulgar," and is now only known as J. Daw Jones, more appropriate to be given to full, and would doubtless be a most correct index to the fellow. Peter D. Jenkins has become convinced that Peter is too homely a cognomen for one who walks so high in aristocratic circles, and brings him too much on a level with the common herd; he, therefore, now plumes himself P. Green Jenkins. Just so with Isaac C. Bacon; all the fellows are making the change, and he cannot see how he can keep in good standing at the club, and not join in the revolution, away goes the "Isaac," and "I. Cooke Bacon" is engraved upon his card. So goes the new mania, no matter how ridiculous; but it is the "rage," and the brainless devotee of fashion's shrine must arm and equip according to rules.

ANNEXATION OF CANADA TO THE UNITED STATES. In the House of Representatives on the 31st inst. Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, asked leave to introduce the following resolution: "Resolved, That the President be requested to cause negotiations to be opened with the Government of Great Britain, with a view of ascertaining upon what conditions that Government will assent to the annexation of the Canadas to the United States of America." The reading of the resolution caused much laughter. It was finally rejected by a vote of 119 to 28.

COLLISION AT SEA.—The steamship Caledonia, bound for Halifax, at midnight on Wednesday, the 29th ult., came in collision with the brig Belle, Capt. Magner, from Boston for Halifax, which sunk immediately. Mrs. Keefer, a passenger, and the steward, were drowned. The others were rescued by the Canada's boats, but subsequently transferred to the Arabia, and arrived at Halifax. The Canada lost her bowsprit, and was otherwise slightly damaged.

The Benton (Texas) Advertiser states that there is no ground for apprehension of danger from the Indians at Fort Belknap. The danger, if any, was greatly exaggerated by the worthy chaplain who sent the first report. The soldiers belonging to the garrison had returned from the pursuit of the Indians, but had not succeeded in finding the objects of their pursuit.

[From the N. Y. Herald, April 8.

Later from Europe.

The Collins mail steamship Baltic, Captain Briggs, arrived at four o'clock yesterday afternoon. She left Liverpool on Thursday, the 23d ult.

The Baltic is under command of Capt. Geo. Briggs, Capt. Comstock having left the ship at Liverpool on a visit to the Continent.

She brings Liverpool dates of the 23d, with London papers of the 22d, and a telegraphic dispatch of midnight, of the latter date, also from London.

The Cambria had returned from Malta, and will be again dispatched.

It is announced that dispatches from St. Petersburg had reached Vienna and Berlin, stating that Russia rejects altogether the ultimatum of the Western Powers.

The Marquis of Clanricarde failed to elicit from the Government its intentions with respect to neutral flags in the coming war His endeavor to gain precise information was attended with no better success than other inquiries on the same subject.

A telegraphic dispatch from Vienna states that Baron Meyendorff had an audience of the Emperor, which lasted two hours; and it is reported that on the explanation of the intentions of Austria will depend the stay of the Russian Minister in that capital.

Another dispatch states that something of extreme importance was settled on Friday, the 17th ult., between the Austrian and Prussian Governments, as a member of the Prussian embassy went to Oderberg by special train, immediately after a conference between Count Buol and the Prussian Minister.

Seventy thousand men had been quartered at Sebastopol, and thirty thousand at Odessa. Between Moscow and Odessa one hundred thousand were on the march.

The Russians were preparing chains to stretch across the mouth of the Danube. The Russian subjects in Turkey, England and France, are about to be summoned to return home. The export of gold from Russia is reported to be prohibited. Since the prohibition of the export of corn from Odessa, the price had fallen from 9 to 3 silver roubles. Failures were feared at Odessa.

We learn that reinforcements had arrived at Kulafat. The Russians, it is said, will assume the offensive in April.

The French Government had received intelligence of the conclusion of the convention between England, France and Turkey. These Powers had themselves to pursue no separate negotiations with Russia, and the defense of Turkey is duly provided for.

The aspect of the London stock markets was very flat, and prices were lower, while the tendency was, if anything, somewhat inclined towards a further fall. There was not a very active business doing in Consols, and the quotations were 89¾ to 89¾ for money and 89½ to ¾ for account. Exchequer bills are 5s. to 10s. prem.

Four French ships of war, under the command of Admiral Deschenes, have sailed from Toulon to join Napier's fleet in the Baltic. The ships sent are the Austerlitz, 100 guns; the Hercule, Duquesclen and Trident.

Sir Charles Napier, in the steam frigate Vulcans, arrived at Copenhagen on the 20th.

The first acts of Fuad Effendi on reaching Janina were to grant a general amnesty, and remit part of the taxes; and, secondly, to send a messenger to Athens to demand an explanation of the conduct of the Greek Government.

There are reports of some further difficulties with the Greek insurgents, but they are of no authenticity.

The Danish ministry remained in office.

Abd-el-Kader has contributed 3000 francs, at Brussels, towards the expenses of the war.

On the 20th, in the Commons, Mr. Kinnaird put the following motion:—In what State the correspondence between the British and United States Governments, with reference to colored seamen, being British subjects, on the vessels to which they belong arriving at a port in any of the Southern States, being imprisoned on account of their color, now is; and whether there would be any objection to lay the correspondence on the table of the House? Lord John Russell, in reply, stated that there had been a great deal of correspondence, and beneficial changes had been proposed in Georgia and South Carolina, which would soon be carried into effect. He thought it was better not to produce the correspondence, as hopes were entertained that there would be great improvement in the legislation of the States he had mentioned.

The London Correspondent of the Herald, in his letter of March 21st, says: As regards the rumors of new negotiations of peace, they are rumors and not worth listening to. The hour of negotiation is past. The rejection of the last ultimatum of the Western Powers by the Czar has been received here and at Paris by telegraph. It has not yet been officially communicated to the Foreign Secretary. As soon as it is, a royal message will be sent down to the houses of Parliament, and the official declaration of war will follow. Sir Charles Napier's fleet is already in the Baltic. The English Embassador at Berlin sent him a courier with the news of the rejection of the ultimatum as soon as he received it, that he might act according to any previous instructions he might have received. The armaments of Russia on the Baltic are on an immense scale, and hard blows will take place. The Russian navy can, to say the least, show fight The following statement is, I believe, reliable:

The entire marine of Russia is collected at two stations, those of the Baltic and of the Black Sea. Of these, that of the Baltic is divided into three sections, and that of the Black Sea into two. But this does not include the various gunboats and small craft. Each division of the fleet consists usually of one three-decker, eight two-deckers, six frigates, one corvette and five smaller vessels. Thus, the Baltic fleet would number twenty-seven vessels of the line, including three three-deckers, eighteen frigates, and fifteen corvettes, brigs and smaller vessels, besides a considerable number of steamers. That of the Black Sea, on the other hand, will amount to eighteen vessels of the line, and among them three three-deckers, besides twelve frigates, ten corvettes and several steamers Hence, the Russian marine amounts in all to forty-five vessels of the line, thirty frigates, five corvettes, and twenty brigs, besides the very considerable force of steamers and gunboats, which the Russian inspiration places at four or five hundred vessels. The aggregate of the Russian crews is given at fifty thousand men, of whom thirty thousand eight hundred belong to the Baltic, and nineteen thousand eight hundred to the Black Sea fleet. The grand Russian three-deckers are the Russia, of 130 guns; the Twelve Apostles, of 120 guns; the Three Saints, of 120, and the Warsaw, of 120. Admiral Prince Menschikoff is at the head of the naval staff; the Grand Duke Constantine is High Admiral of the Russian fleets; Van Kolsakoff and Von Ricord are also Admirals Among the Vice Admirals are persons named Glasenauss, Katschaloff, Von Berg, Count Heyder, Von Lutge, Putislin, Karnioff, Nachimoff, Kmanny, Melioholf, Bogdenovich, Von Plater, etc

Her land preparations on the Gulf of Finland are immense. The Emperor in person, accompanied by the Grand Duke Constantine, has just visited all the fortresses, the three principal ones of which are—Cronstadt, Orienbaum and Helsingfors The corps of guards and grenadiers—the first mustering 25 650 effective infantry, 13,200 cavalry, with 2000 sappers, 3 00 artillery, and 116 field pieces; and the second the same number of infantry, sappers and artillery, with 5728 cavalry and 112 field pieces, or a total of 73 000 flute infantry, 19,000 cavalry, 6000 artillery and 4000 sappers, making a general total of 104,000 in round numbers—are destined to garrison the strongholds, from Abo, in Finland, to the Gulf of Livonia. These will be supported by the special Finland corps of 14,000 men, and by the numerous veteran and garrison battalions, called "Inward Guard," of which there are about six battalions of 1000 men each, in the districts from St. Petersburg to Riga, inclusive, so that, at the smallest computation, the effective force disposable between Abo and Riga amounts to 120,000 men, with 260 field pieces. It appears, however, that the second corps d'armée, hitherto occupying Poland, has received orders and will commence its march to the East forthwith. It is to be replaced by the first corps, occupying at present the Government of Minsk, and by part of the corps of guards Nearly the whole of the frontier Governments of Russia, from Finland to the Prussian frontiers and thence from Poland to Bessarabia and the Crimea, have been placed under martial law, by a ukase of the 6th instant In addition to the forces above mentioned, sixty battalions of reserve, consisting of the fifth battalion of as many infantry regiments, have been completed, and are in readiness to move.

The fact alone of these immense preparations will suffice to convince any one that Nicholas will show fight, and from the Baltic to the Black Sea there may soon be heard one continuous roar of artillery. I believe that Denmark, Sweden and Norway will declare for France and England at the first outbreak Large sums have been voted in their respective Parliaments almost unanimously, for army and navy The Prussian Chambers have likewise voted thirty millions of dollars for warlike preparations, and the Sardinian Chamber the sum of thirty millions of francs.

The documents I alluded to in my last—the secret and confidential plans of Russia respecting the proposed dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire—have been presented to Parliament, and published extensively in all the London journals If any doubt existed in the mind of any man as to the intentions of the Emperor Nicholas with regard to Turkey, these documents will dispel it. The proposed dismemberment was indignantly rejected at the time by the English Government; but one would think that the knowledge of the fact ought to have enlightened them as to the object of Prince Menschikoff's mission It is seldom that documents of this confidential and secret nature find the light of publicity; it is a glance behind the scenes of the political curtain with a vengeance I leave it with you to analyze the documents yourself; they are well worth perusal. Candia and Egypt are offered to England Turkey is spoken of by the Czar as a poor sick man, that may any day slip through our fingers, and it is necessary to be prepared with the steps to be taken at his dissolution. The Emperor expressly declares that he would not allow the establishment of a Byzantine empire. So much for the hopes of the Greeks. The idea that his recent interference was to benefit the Christian subjects of the Porte, also falls to the ground, as he avows his object the dissolution of the Ottoman Empire.

THE VERY LATEST NEWS.

Paris, Sunday evening, March 19.—The news of the rejection by the Czar of the ultimatum of the Western Powers, brought as it has been by telegraphic dispatch from Vienna, has taken the public by surprise, as it was thought that the Czar would postpone giving his answer till the expiry of the six days. BETROTHAL OF THE SULTAN'S DAUGHTERS. At Constantinople, on the 24th of February, an interesting ceremony took place, being the legal confirmation of the betrothal of the Sultan's eldest daughter, the Sultana Fathma, aged fourteen years, to Ali Galib, aged twenty-one years, the son of Redschid Pasha, one of the Cabinet Ministers. A long train of men, bearing on their heads trays of fruit, flowers, brocades, jewels, etc., as wedding presents, marched in procession from Redschid Pasha's house to the Sultan's palace, accompanied by a train of pretty Turkish damsels handsomely attired. On the same day were celebrated the first betrothals of the Sultan's three remaining daughters with the sons of high dignitaries of State, all the princesses being quite children. The presents for these different marriages will, it is said, cost 40,000,000 piastres, Redschid Pasha alone having spent 6,000,000 piastres in jewelry.

HATRED OF THE CIRCASSIAN WOMEN TOWARDS THE RUSSIANS.—As an incident of the bitter hatred felt by the Circassians towards the Russians, it is stated that a few years ago, a slave ship sprung a leak out at sea, just as a Russian steamer passed in the distance. The Turkish slave-dealer, who preferred even the chill blasts of Siberia to a grave even in deep water, made signals of distress, and the steamer came up in time to rescue the ship and its living cargo from destruction But so deeply is hatred implanted in every Circassian heart, that the spirit of the girls revolted at the thought of becoming the helpmates of the gray-coated soldiers, instead of sharing the sumptuous couch of a Turkish Pasha. They had bid adieu to their native mountains with little emotion, but as the Russian ship approached, they set up a terrible and despairing scream. Some sprang headlong into the sea, others drove their knives into their hearts. To these heroines, death was preferable to the bridal bed of a detested Muscovite The survivors were taken to Anapa and married to Cossacks, or given to officers as servants.

Documents and Observations

On the capture of the American Steamer Black Warrior, as published in the "Diario de la Marina," Translated into English by H. H. A.

Among the documents comes the Presidential Message, which we have already published.

[illegible] official document in which the United States speaks to his national Secretary General Pesuela is at the Government; our columns have to give place to refutations of or absurdities that appear in the of the States of the Union. The country has long forfeited all credit and repute among men of judgment and sense throughout this world, and accordingly reaps nothing but contempt. It would be improper on the part of the editor of a newspaper, in this case, to rise and argue with the President of [illegible] which he too comes to lower himself to write in the manner we have seen with you that are so, and you that that name of your fathers, and that are kindly and hospitably received and treated by this land: you all that has occurred in the case of the Black Warrior, know: that a Custom-house regulation strictly enforced to defeat fraud on the part of an Anglo-American trader is an [illegible] to that nation, and such to Mr. Franklin Pierce, [illegible]. Know: that if a country is situated in the neighborhood of the States becomes necessary to them in relations, it would be madness to permit aggressions and such a to commercial rights as that is country exacts rigid conformity to foreigners should submit to the laws of the land that receives them bosom. Know that, if these laws do not please them, they do not go elsewhere, as the old peace-promoting Franklin would advise them to do, but they insist require theirs to reign in that country, and if they do not succeed in this with a nation possessed of honor and pride that would rather sacrifice her last man, then they make out that, by such independence of the other party, they are suffering insults to their national flag. Know ye good men of all countries and opinions, that this is the language which now is held from the chair once occupied by the gentle of justice, peace and moderation, by the philosophic, the honorable Washington! Behold him [illegible]ating, under pretences as insignificant, a war that would, for two nations be a bloody and to them more painful as experience Behold him listening to none but [illegible] punished for a fraud, in order to vilify his heart's desire and with the utmost [illegible] ness the pendnot of our first authority, a gentleman whose reputation is every- [illegible] and in such a manner established that he [illegible] deserved the honor of a more minute investigation of his deeds before characterizing them so outrageously. Know then, ye that are on the spot, what they were: for the publication we are going to make of them, with official documents, is directed to those that have not like ourselves witnessed the proceedings of this low and trifling business, with which they would wish to make a noise over all the world.

We also hope they may reach the ears of the President of the United States and make him think differently from what he has hitherto done upon the evidence of the erroneous and passionate communications from his Consul here, and from Messrs. Tyng & Co.

which compose the history of what has occurred in the case of the Black Warrior.

[No. 1.]—First communication to the Most excellent the President of the Council of Ministers.—Most excellent Sir: To prevent the ill effect which in your Pre-eminence might be produced by perhaps exaggerated news, that may be communicated through private channels, about the detaining and abandoning of the North American steamer Black Warrior, I am going to give to your Excellency, in my double character of Captain General and of Superintendent of the Royal Treasury, a succinct narration of what has occurred since the arrival of the said vessel, a relation which will in an authentic manner be corroborated by the official documents accumulated in the dispatch of the case, the testimony of which, as far as they go up now, I accompany, and the same I repeat also to our representative in Washington as in such cases I am instructed to do by Royal order. On the 28th day of last month, that in which the steamer Black Warrior arrived in this port, her consignee repaired to the Custom-house and requested to enter her in ballast. Next he presented a manifest in harmony with that declaration, that is to say, a manifest in which nothing was expressed or declared except articles of ship's provisions; and lastly, he solicited the clearance of the vessel, reiterating the conviction of the vessel's sailing in ballast; and it must here be observed, that when the searcher's visit was paid her, according to article 1. of the Instruction for the Custom-houses, a Custom's officer delivered to the Captain a list of the regulations and obligations (written in English) to which, like all others, he must subject himself, and in spite of which neither he nor the consignee would add, within the legal term, to the fraudulent manifest of which I have already spoken. The head of the Custom-house, before granting the clearance solicited, ordered the Commander of Tide-waiters again to visit the ship and make sure of the fact of her carrying no cargo; but having found on board of her a great number of bales of cotton which she was carrying from Mobile to New York, as he said, her departure was stopped and judicial proceedings commenced; because, according to article 190 of the said Instruction, the Captain had incurred the penalties which article 162 points out.

The discharging and depositing of the cotton was next, by a decree from the Court of Rents, proceeded to, which the captain wished to oppose, finishing with committing the rash act of abandoning and leaving the vessel which he and all the crew quitted. This was the reason why the Administrator of Customs, with previous consent of mine, in polite terms invited the house of the consignee to name an agent who might, as his representative, assist in that operation, and also to go through some other indispensable formalities in order to leave the steamer dispatched: but this step of pure grace and whose sole object was to avoid consequences detrimental to the passengers and that house itself, was not accepted.

In the meantime the consignee came to me, clearly confessing the fault, attributing it to their ignorance and begging of me the grace of not exacting higher duties than those paid by any vessel with cargo entered for transit; but I did not judge it proper to comply with his request, partly from respect for the law, partly also because, the cause once judicially commenced, it was no longer my province to adopt the resolution solicited, and above all because, weighing the above mentioned circumstance of having placed in the captain's hands the list of instructions, of which also I enclose a copy, they could no longer argue the plea of ignorance of usages and languages, and much less that of the same captain's having done so on other occasions, since the law has never been suspended here, and as former concealments, far from [illegible] meaning his reclamation, made his case worse. I therefore limited myself to ordering the two petitions to be attached to the judicial proceedings which are about to be brought to a close, it being my duty to inform your Excellency beforehand, till I shall have it in my power to send the complete testimony, that, as the steamer had been abandoned in the manner explained, she was placed under the charge and in custody of the Commander of Tide-waiters, not without having requested the Commander-in-chief of this Marine district to give the assistance of some mariners who might, being now on board of her, attend to her safety and preservation, till, after unloading her and upon the conclusion of the cause now under investigation, the Court shall decide upon the release or sale of the vessel. Up to this day more than 900 bales of cotton have been discharged, and there still remain on board some packages and barrels the contents of which are unknown and which I have ordered to be inspected, availing myself in the meantime of the departure of this mail to inform your Excellency of what has occurred till to-day, purposing to do so with what may take place from now forward by the mail of next month, provided the final decision of the case has then, as I suppose, been pronounced. God grant your Excellency long life, etc.

Most Excellent Sir,

THE MARQUIS DE LA PEZUELA.

HAVANA, March 7, 1854.

[No. 2.]—Second communication to the most excellent the President of the Council of Ministers—Most excellent Sir: In conformity with what I announced to your Excellency in my official communication of the 7th of this month, on informing you of the detention and abandonment of the Anglo-American steamer Black Warrior, it is my duty now to conclude the narration which in my said official communication I left pending. On conclusion of her discharge, it resulted that the Black Warrior was carrying 957 bales of cotton, various packages of luggage and several other articles of commerce shipped in Mobile, and here (when she could only fraudulently do so) bound for New York. Article 190 of the Custom-house Instruction in force, directs as follows: The Captain of every national or foreign vessel that enters any port of entry in the Island, whether with cargo or in ballast, whether putting in or in transit, shall present his manifest or register in the manner and under the circumstances prescribed in that Instruction, and shall be subject to the fines and penalties which for violation of its rules are imposed in the same. Article 162 says thus: after the 12 hours, pointed out in article 16 for the rectification of, or addition to the manifest, shall have expired, all packages, that may be omitted in it, shall be seized, and besides this the Captain be fined to the amount of the value, provided always the amount of the duties which would have to be paid on the contents of the package or packages do not exceed four hundred dollars; because if it exceed that sum and if the articles belonging or consigned to the owner, captain or supercargo, the fine shall have no effect, and instead of it the vessel, together with its freights and everything else available, shall be seized. And article 175 is couched in the following terms: If in consequence of the searcher's visit, which has to be paid to every vessel before dispatching the register under which she has to navigate, there should result in her cargo some excess, this shall be seized and the captain fined to the amount of such excess. From these articles your Excellency will deduce the penalties the Black Warrior has incurred, penalties which would at once have been inflicted by the Court of the Treasury, if on proposition of the Attorney-General it had not been considered preferable in pass the proceedings, as was done by a decree of the 13th of this month, over to the political administration upon this territory, and at the sight of the memorial of the Captain of the steamer, of the opinions of the Attorney-General and Assessor, and of a decree of the Treasurer by which he submitted the solution of the case to this Superintendency, I ordered the Superior Board of Administration (the Administrator of Customs and the Visitor-General being in attendance) to act on the case.

The Board declared as legal the declaration of the seizure and fines already made in the proceedings, and as worthy of being confirmed in all its parts; but left it to my discretion to reduce the penalties if I thought fit and proper, and as had been the practice on other analogous occasions with national and foreign vessels. Actuated by a sentiment of equity, I wished to modify them; but before doing so I thought it would become me to request the Attorney-General that he would propose what fine in his official opinion ought to be inflicted, considering what the Board of political administration had declared on the subject. The Attorney-General gave it as his opinion that considering the very great amount of the seizure and fine of Instruction, there ought to be inflicted, instead of them, a fine of ten thousand dollars, besides the expense and costs of the discharge; but I, in accordance with the spirit of benevolence so striking in the report of the Board of political administration, came to resolve by order of the 16th, that all the fine to be inflicted upon the owners of the steamer should be six thousand dollars, without any further exposure whatever might be the cause of them, although from this sum had to be deducted the costs, till then produced, and the duties of which the Royal Customs had been defrauded. In consequence of this decision the consignee yesterday took charge of the vessel after depositing a bond for the six thousand dollars in which he was fined. He subsequently presented to me a memorial begging me to modify the fine still more; but this, being no longer in my power, I authorized him to address Her Majesty, through me, and so he has done in thankful and moderate terms which are in decided contrast with the furious vociferations which in their country has been excited by the enemies of this, whose authorities know how to blend, as they have done in this case and will ever do, and at whatever cost, gentleness and benignity with firmness and energy, that satisfy the national dignity. God grant your Excellency a long life, etc.

Most Excellent Sir,

MARQUIS DE LA PEZUELA.

[No. 3.]—First letter from the Anglo-American Consul.

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

HAVANA, February 28, 1854.

Most Excellent Sir—I have been informed by Captain Bulloch, Commander of the American steamship Black Warrior, that the Authorities of the Custom-house have refused to dispatch her for reasons unknown to him. On consulting with the consignees of said shipbere they assure me that she was cleared at the Custom-house on the 25th inst. in the same manner as she has been on her former trips, being expected here from Mobile on her way to New York on the 26th, that on their sending to the Custom-house to-day (the ship did not arrive till this morning) for the dispatch to take to the Captain of the ports to procure the pass to leave the port, they were informed that the vessel was stopped. The consignees as well as the Captain are ignorant of having infringed any law of the port, as the ship was cleared in the usual manner, they are, therefore, under the necessity of applying to your Excellency with a petition that your Excellency be so kind as to instruct the Authorities of the Maritime Custom-house in this port to dispatch the vessel in time to enable her to leave this port to-morrow morning.

Hoping that your Excellency will be pleased to accede to the petition above expressed. I have the honor to be with great respect Your Excellency's very obdt. servant, the Commercial Agent in charge of the Consulate,

[No. 4.]—The Secretary's answer to the Consul of the United States of this place.—My dear Sir: The most Excellent the Governor and Captain-General directs me to say to your honor, as I now do, that, on receipt of your communication of this day, relative to the detention of the American steamer Black Warrior by the Custom-house of this port, he demanded full information on the subject from the Administrator-General of that branch, who has reported that at the request of the consignee of the said steamer, Mr. Charles Tyng, he ordered the Commander of Tide-waiters to pay the searcher's visit to the said steamer and the result of that visit was that she was not in ballast, as the consignee said, but that she had 400 bales of cotton on board; that after taking the necessary steps he suggested to his Excellency the Treasurer the penalty of seizing the goods and fining the Captain, according to the regulation of the Customs; and the said Treasurer fining it all in order, directed him to proceed to the same, for which purpose he gave orders to the Commander of tide-waiters to have the seized goods discharged and deposited, having acted in all this with the necessary urgency, lest the steamer should suffer delay; and lastly, that before giving this order to the Commander of Tide-waiters he had a conference with Mr. Tyng to see if he would be security for the Captain, that the vessel might go out early the next morning, but he refused.

These are all the particulars of the case, which by order of his Excellency I communicate in answer to your Honor, remaining, my dear sir, your most obedient servant,

Most Excellent Sir: The United States steamer Corwin, Lieut Commanding Craven, will by my order leave this port for Charleston at 4 o'clock this afternoon with a bearer of dispatches to Washington, who will be happy to take charge of any communication that your Excellency may have to send.

Captain Bulloch having abandoned the steamship Black Warrior into the hands of the Authorities of this port, will proceed in the steamer Corwin on his way to Washington, which I notify your Excellency in case that any demand may exist against him. The crew of the Black Warrior have all left her.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your Excellency's very obdt. servant, the Commercial Agent in charge of the Consulate,

His Excellency, the Marquis de la Pezuela, Governor, Captain-General, etc., etc., etc.

[No. 6.]—His Excellency's answer.—To Colonel Robertson, Consular agent for the United States in this place.—My dear sir: I thank you for your kind offer to forward any correspondence of mine to Washington by the steamer you speak of in your letter of this day's date, and should the case occur I would do so with much pleasure, although I know of no necessity for it just now. As regards the Captain of the Black Warrior, I cannot authorize him to go, as he wishes to do, because his case is pending in the Court of the Treasury, which has not yet had time to report on the subject of the affair in which he stands compromised for having made a false declaration in order to exempt himself from the payment of duties, the more so as he has abandoned his vessel without any legitimate grounds.

I therefore remain, my dear sir, your most respectfully, THE MARQUIS DE LA PEZUELA.

To his Excellency the Captain-General.

Most excellent sir: Messrs. Charles Tyng & Co., consignees of the American steamer Black Warrior, which yesterday arrived in this port from Mobile, respectfully represent to your Excellency that the commander of the said vessel as an officer of the United States Navy, and little versed in the regulations of this Custom-house, has made many voyages like the present, bringing on board his vessel cotton shipped in Mobile for New York, and that he has omitted manifesting the same on his arrival in this port from ignorance of the dispositions that are in force for cargo in transit, nevertheless the memorialists went, yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock, to ask permission in the Custom-house to make the declaration the Captain had omitted because of ignorance, and because he had done so in all his former voyages, and as they were extraordinarily denied, this, and moreover called upon for heavy fines which they do not consider they ought to pay because of the peculiarity of the case, both so simple and so innocent; they beg your Excellency will graciously take into your high consideration the force of our simple reasons, and granting that in such omission there has not been intended the least malice, will direct, if your Excellency should think proper, that we shall only pay to the Custom-house the duties that correspond to a vessel which enters this port with a cargo for transit. This is the gracious favor we look forward to from the well known discretion and justice your Excellency knows how to administer.

Most excellent sir,

CHARLES TYNG & Co.

HAVANA, 1st March, 1854.

[No. 8.]—Second Memorial of Charles Tyng & Co.

Most excellent Sir: Messrs. Tyng & Co., merchants residing in this place, with due respect represent that they are truly sorry for all that has occurred with the Black Warrior, whose consignees they are, and all that has caused the detention of that vessel in this port. Foreigners by birth, little versed in the language and much less in the laws and regulations of the Customs, they have fallen into an error from pure ignorance, but by no means from desire of hurting the Royal Treasury or of creating difficulties.

The nature of the case, the frequent voyages of the steamer, always consigned to the memorialists, without any unpleasantness whatever in any of them, will convince your Excellency that it has never been our intention, nor that of Captain Bulloch to doubt the Customs' laws or usages of the port, which, on the contrary, we are disposed ever to respect, and we repeat that nothing but a very natural desire to procure a quick dispatch for the vessel, would perhaps have made us omit the steps most conducive to our object, but without any desire of interfering in any way with the dispositions of the authorities. From your Excellency, as the decided protector of commerce and of the foreigners resident in this capital, we confidently expect that you will take into consideration the immense damages that fall to our responsibility. The Custom-house, already satisfied as to the nature of the cargo the Black Warrior brings, can suspend her discharge and avoid further expense, and permit her to proceed on her projected voyage, leaving us to the indulgence of your Excellency as well as notorious justice which in the resolution it is going to adopt will not confound him that involuntarily errors with him that does so premeditatingly. With these hopes we beseech your Excellency to direct that on the terms of our memorial we may be permitted to proceed to the reshipment of the goods discharged, and that, after passing through the formalities of the Custom-house still pending, the steamer Black Warrior may continue her voyage with all her cargo. This is the gracious favor we hope for from your Excellency's justice. Havana, 2d March, 1854. Most excellent sir,

CHARLES TYNG & Co.

[No. 9.]—Messrs. Tyng & Co.'s Memorial to H. M.—Madam: Chas Tyng & Co., merchants of Havana, at the Royal feet of your Majesty, and with the most profound respect beg to represent, that by the Superintendency of the Royal Treasury of the Island of Cuba, after taking into consideration the previous proceedings of the case, there was inflicted a fine of six thousand dollars upon the proprietors of the steamer Black Warrior. This fine was put instead of confiscation of the cargo not manifested by the Captain upon his arrival, without the least intention of defrauding the Royal duties, as it consisted of articles not consumed in the country, and as they only came in transit. Thus the payment of those six thousand dollars would become one loss more to the proprietors of the vessel and cargo, wherefore as soon as the decision was communicated to the memorialists they at once offered to receive the steamer the Captain had abandoned from the first, in order to represent to your Majesty graciously to take into consideration the same previous proceedings as the Superintendency had, the enormous losses suffered by the detention and discharge of the vessel, the expenses re-shipping the cargo, for the continuation of the voyage, and to exempt the memorialists as consignees of the owners of the vessel from the payment of the six thousand dollars. In virtue of what has been represented to your Majesty, they reverently beg your Majesty will, with her high wisdom and justice, leave them exempt from the said payment, as a grace which they hope for from the august benignity of your Majesty.

At the Royal feet of your Majesty,

CHARLES TYNG & Co.

[No. 13.]—Superior Permission to Publish the Preceding Documents.—Government and Captain-General's Office of the ever-faithful Island of Cuba.—Political Secretary's Office.—Fourth Section.—In granting the application in which you beg me to authorize your publishing in the Diario de la Marina the message of the President of the United States on the subject of the detention in this port of the American steamer Black Warrior, I have thought fit to permit it, provided always that you also publish the documents which constitute the veritable history of that affair, for which purpose every facility will be given you to obtain copies of such as you ask for in the Secretary's office of this Superior Government.

God grant you a long life, etc.

THE MARQUIS DE LA PEZUELA.

Havana, 30th March, 1854.

Mr. Editor of the "Diario de la Marina."

In the Louisiana Courier of the 23d of this month, we have seen reprinted a communication which Mr. Robertson, the commercial agent of the United States of America in this place, has directed, under date of the 3d of the same month, to Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, relative to the proceedings caused by Captain Bulloch, of the Anglo-American steamer Black Warrior, by infringing the customs laws in force, and as in that long and diffuse communication there are set down several notoriously false precedents, we believe it to be our duty to refute them; without the least intention, however, of justifying in any way the authorities, whose acts have been founded upon the strictest legality.

It says that the captain assured him that he believed there existed a special convention which exempted his steamer and others of her class from presenting manifests of the cargo which they brought for transit; that the rules also prescribe the manifesting of the coal they bring on board with them; that this law has never been obeyed, and that this neglect and non-observance of the laws on the part of the authorities does not warrant their being put in force, for having become extinct; that he has also understood that there exists a law which directs that, when there is clear proof that there exists no intention of infringing or eluding the law of the customs, those that caused any irregularity cannot be declared guilty; and referring at the same time to another communication, directed to the same Mr. Marcy, it says that the line of English mail steamers enter, and take in cargo, presenting their manifests as entering in ballast, even when they have cargo on board, of which he had been assured as certain by Mr. Crawford, the English Consul.

Now there never has existed, nor does there exist any convention that exempts steamers from the formalities to which all other vessels are subject; and although those of the English and North American lines that rank as vessels of war, are free of tonnage duty, this franchise is, by Royal order of 3d October, 1852, denied all other steamers, including the Black Warrior, for not being of that category, which her consignee was not ignorant of because since the month of August, 1852, he has been petitioning to be admitted to the same favor, to which effect he has given bond to respond to the dues of navigation, in case the supreme Government do not accede to his petition.

The Customs do not inspect the steamers on their arrival, to see whether they have coal on board or not, because, as all of them take coal from the deposits which are in this port, it is supposed that they have little or none on board, when they have to provide themselves with it for the continuation of their voyage.

It is absurd to suppose that there is a law applicable to intentions. Such as exist are explicit and point out what must be done in cases of infringement, without leaving it to the judgment of him that has to administer them, whether there was intention of committing fraud, or not.

It is false that the English mail steamers are authorized to omit in their manifests their transit cargo. In proof of which we accompany a copy of the manifests, which the Custom-house is in possession of as presented by the commanders of the English steamers that have entered this year, and whose entries were solicited by M. Crewford, their consul, and from them it will be seen that in none of the voyages referred to, have they omitted going through this formality.

We should not have troubled ourselves about this business, if the press of the neighboring States adulterating facts and leaning upon documents containing pretended facts like Mr. Robertson's communication, had not endeavored to calumniate our superior authority, whose proceeding, ever based upon justice and morality, are too far from the depraved intentions of its authors.

Memorandum of the transit cargo manifested by the Commanders of the Royal English mail steamers in the voyages to the port of the Havana under the dates in the margin.

A SECOND EDITION OF TEN THOUSAND PRINTING!

The extraordinary favor with which this all absorbing work has been received by the united press and the public, has exhausted the enormous number first published in the space of thirty days. The republishers are now prepared with a second edition of 10,000 copies. The prediction is fast becoming verified that 100,000 copies of this charming book will have been disposed of in less time than was consumed in selling the same number of Mrs. Stowe's famous Tale's. Volumes could be filled with the commendations it has received from all sections and classes. We submit a few extracts to exhibit the admirable heartiness of this reception:

[From the Boston Daily Journal.]

"This great Missionary work contains many thrilling incidents, illustrating the remark that 'truth is stranger than fiction.' It is a work of deep interest. The public among therefrom are to be devoted to the support of the 'Ladies' Mission.'"

[From the New York Observer.]

"We have read this book with deep interest. It contains the annals of a noble charity. Some of the narratives have a touching and thrilling interest. The volume is replete with the most valuable and vile prosecution 'Hot Corn,' we were compelled recently to notice."

[From the Cleveland (Ohio) Herald.]

"The Old Brewery' bids fair to reach a circulation equal to that of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' It contains many a vivid and truthful picture of the misery, degradation, squalor, sin, and almost incredible wretchedness that exists in the purlieus of New York."

[From the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.]

"They possess interest far surpassing that of any work of fiction that has been or ever will be written on similar subjects. Whatever profits may arise from the sale of this book, will be applied to the support of the Ladies' Mission."

[From the Evangelist, N. Y. City.]

"These deeply interesting sketches are written with a simplicity and pathos which will greatly affect the reader. It is illustrated with effective engravings, and in style and appearance has everything to commend it."

[From the Genius (Va.) Gazette.]

"The most thrilingly interesting narratives ever issued from the press. The real charm, the true value of the book, consists in the literal truthfulness of every story it contains. No touching fictions will be found in its pages. It is a volume of rare merit for all to read."

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notoriety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the Cherry Pectoral does not only as a general thing, but almost invariably cure the maladies for which it is employed.

As time makes these facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually become the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log-cabin of the American peasant to the palaces of European kings. Throughout this entire country, Cherry Pectoral is known as the best remedy extant for diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, Cherry Pectoral is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms-houses, Public Institutions and in domestic practice, as the surest remedy their attending physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases are for children it is safe, pleasant and effectual to cure. In fact, some of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from parents who have found it efficacious in cases particularly incidental to childhood.

The Cherry Pectoral is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it under his own eye, with invariable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.

We have endeavored here to furnish the community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should commend itself to their confidence—a remedy at once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and countless trials proved itself to be; and trust by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of uniform strength to afford physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy that will do far them all that medicine can do. AREWELL MISSIONARY MEETING.

The last Sabbath of March," says the vocate of the 6th inst., "was truly n reli- us festival to the Methodists of Richmond Manchester. The day had been antici- ed with great satisfaction by the various gregations, and nothing occurred to defeat expectations, or mar the pleasures of the asion. The social joys of the event, for it s an event, and a most gratifying one to all, commenced on Friday, when Bishop drew, Drs. Wightman, Sehon and Jenkins ived in the city. Saturday brought Drs. mmers and Andersen, and our missionary thren, Rev. Messrs. Kelley, Lambeth and lton, and their wives, and Rev. John Kelly wife, of the Tennessee Conference, the ents of the missionary. Of other visitors sent, we recollect Rev. T. B. Sargeant, of ltimore, Rev. Drs. Early, Smith and Dog- t, and Rev. Messrs. Head, Dibrell, Rosser, nly, Moorman, Powers, Wheelwright, Bay- , Nixon, Lawrence and Nolley, of the Vir- ia Conference."

Thus passed the holy Sabbath among the ethodists of Richmond. It was a high day, l of religious enjoyments; and will be rished in the memory of grateful hearts ough the long round of revolving years y may be permitted to slay and worship the lower temple.

The farewell services of this festival occa- n were held in Centenary Church on Mon- y night. At an early hour the spacious lding was filled to its utmost capacity, ove and below, pews and aisles, by an ex- tant multitude from all ports of the city. out 7 o'clock Dr. Wightman, who acted Chairman, called the meeting to order, d requested Rev. T. B. Sargeant to open services with religious worship, which he oceeded to do, by reading an appropriate tion of Scripture, and announcing the utiful hymn:

"From all that dwell below the skies," etc.

Prayer was then offered by the Rev. Dr. ly.

The subjoined abstract of the proceedings copied from the Bulletin. It is brief in and especially defective in not furnishing abstract even of the very felicitous and pressive charge of Bishop Andrew to the ssionaries. We provided for a full report all the proceedings of this most interesting vice; but a pressure of other engagements cludes the reporter from writing out his port in time for our present issue. We ope to give in our next an accurate and full port of all the addresses on the occasion.

"The President of the meeting, having iefly stated its designs, introduced to the udience the Rev. Dr. Sehon, Secretary of e Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, outh. Dr. Sehon said, that but for the con- raint of duty, arising out of his position, he ould not speak. But the occasion was one deep interest to him and to the whole hurch. They were assembled to take final ave of home and native land, to go to dis- ant China to proclaim the Gospel. The occa- on is inspiring. Shouts follow the warrior he goes to the field of carnage. Applause bestowed upon the votaries of science who evote themselves to its elucidation. But re are men who seek not fame or fortune, ut with sublime self-sacrifice go to far off nds to labor for the good of souls. Men lk of heroism, but here to-night is the most roic sight that angel ever saw—the female ssionary parting with all her fond ones, and ving her life to God and his work. And e has her reward. Mrs. Cherry thought it good to die in a foreign land, and though foreign hands closed her eyes, and composed her limbs, and laid her in the grave, yet she gained a crown of undying glory. With such a recompense in view, who would not gladly go, if Providence led the way?

The choir and congregation then sung:

"From Greenland's icy Mountains," etc.

After which, the President introduced to the audience, with a few pertinent remarks, three young ministers, who had been set apart for the missionary work in China.

First, he presented Dr. Kelley, who was deeply moved by the circumstances of his position, and whose feelings somewhat repressed the utterance of the words that trembled on his lips. Cradled as he was in the lap of piety, and soothed to sleep with Zion's songs, it would have been strange had he failed to be deeply interested in religious matters. When nine years old—a period still bright in memory—he was permitted to call God "Father," and to believe himself His child. He could not tell when he first felt the missionary spirit. It was more or less with him from his earliest days; but he could call to mind the time when a pious missionary bore him about, and talked to him of being a missionary. One Sunday, years ago, when in his father's library, he took down Cox's Remains, and read and wept; that day gave him a strong desire to labor for souls amid the sands of Africa. Boyhood passed away, and the period arrived when he must decide the course his life should pursue. Then there was a struggle. But the China mission had been established, and he finally determined to spend his days in that service. He offered himself to Bishop Andrew, and his heart thrilled with joy when it was told him: "You shall go." Then came the parting with parents and friends. It was a severe trial when they sought to dissuade him; but his heart was fixed, and now he asked the Church to sustain him and his colleagues with prayers and with means. They would go, trusting in God, and with this sentiment he bade them farewell.

The President then presented Mr. Lambeth, of Mississippi, who was thankful for the privilege of speaking a few farewell words. About five years ago he experienced conversion, and from the first had his thoughts turned to missionary labor. He did not expect to enter upon it until he was thirty or forty years old. He first studied medicine, and then for a time law, but in neither could he be content. He felt constrained to the ministry, and he yielded to his convictions, and joined the Mississippi Conference. Here his yearnings for the missionary work returned upon him, and it was determined that he should go to China. He had parted with his friends, and was ready to go either now or hereafter. He could labor in China, if God spared him to reach its shores, and if need be, could die for this cause. He asked that the prayers of the Church might accompany him and his companions.

Mr. Belton, of Alabama, was next presented to the congregation. He had several times appeared before audiences in connection with the China Missions, but had never experienced the emotions of to-night. This was the last farewell, and he would briefly tell how it was that he occupied his present attitude. Three years ago he was converted, and at once joined the Church. He was a missionary from the beginning. He consecrated himself to God, and it had always seemed to him that the spirit of consecration was the spirit of missions. He entered the ministry in a year after he joined the Church, and connected himself with the Tennessee Conference, but was soon transferred to the Alabama. The next year he was sent to the Columbia Circuit. His colleague conversed with him on several occasions concerning the mission to China, and said that men were wanted for that work. These conversations interested him deeply. He began to think much about the subject, and the result was a firm conviction that he was called to that particular work. The duty was plain, but he wanted a willing mind. He had given himself up to God, but when the separation from home and the loved ones there, and all the comforts and privileges of the land of his birth passed before him, he could not resolve to go. The subject troubled him greatly, rendered him unhappy, and he determined to make it an object of earnest prayer.

In July of last year he had just been the rounds of his circuit, and feeling much burdened, he resolved to stop at a brother's house, and continue praying until he could obtain relief. He began to pray, feeling that the burden of the Lord was upon him, and that he wanted the spirit to bear it. For three days he continued earnestly praying, and at last the grace was given, and he felt willing to leave all for Christ's sake. He then went to old Father Ware's house, and taking up the Nashville Christian Advocate, the first thing he saw was a letter from Bishop Andrew, asking for men for the China mission. He immediately wrote to the Bishop and offered himself, and was accepted. Then he wrote his father and mother. They had been Church members only two years; and now came another trial. They opposed him throughout. His mother had never given her consent; she remonstrated to the last. His father yielded at last, but said: "I have buried five or six dead children, and now I am called upon to bury a living one." It was a tearing away from them when he bade them good-by. He dared not do otherwise, and now he was ready to go. One tie was broken, and when the shores of his native land were lost to his vision, another would be severed, and he should go to China never to return again—that is his field. He had been called of God, and having given himself up, he could do no less than go. And to-night he rejoiced that he had been called. He rejoiced that he was counted worthy to hear the Gospel to the millions of China. He should labor among them while he lived, and expected to sleep his last sleep in China, and if his work required it, he was ready to die a martyr to his mission. In this spirit, and with an earnest prayer that they would consecrate themselves to God, and do what they could to promote His glory, he bade them good-by.

[At the conclusion of these addresses, the Bishop delivered a solemn and impressive charge to the young missionaries and their wives, concluding with an affectionate farewell. We regret to have not been able to procure a report of his address.—Ed. N. C. Advocate.]

The Choir sang:

"Men of God, go take your stations," etc.

Thus closed the services of the occasion. The remark will be borne out by all who were present on the occasion, that for depth of spiritual feeling, and power of impression, it is without a parallel in the history of our Churches in this city. The addresses of the missionaries were characterized by simplicity and earnestness of feeling, and a strong conviction of duty in entering upon the work of Christ in China. Devotion of time and strength, soul and body, and even, if need be, life itself, to the cause of Chinese evangelization was the impelling motive and sole purpose of each. This seeming self-immolation for the sake of Christ; the noble sacrifice of family, friends, country and home, to carry glad tidings to those who dwell in the valley and shadow of death, produced varied and powerful emotions in the breasts of the breathless multitude who witnessed the act of these fine looking young men, as each placed himself on the altar of the Church's offering to the Pagan millions of China. It was, indeed, a sublime scene, and it kindled the missionary fire in hearts that will hereafter throb responsive to the calls to send the Gospel to those who have it not. We cannot longer dwell on a subject that, for moral significancy and religious grandeur, reaches the sublime of Christian heroism and devotion, surpassing anything of the kind it has ever been our privilege to witness or enjoy.

Our churches here availed themselves of the occasion of this missionary gathering to raise their annual missionary collections. The result is thus stated in one of our city papers, and is, we believe, nearly accurate. Speaking of the services of Monday night, the Bulletin says:

"After some remarks from Messrs. Sehon, Wightman and Summers, persons in the congregation who felt disposed contributed sums of money to the funds of the Missionary Society. We learn that about $300 was contributed. On Sunday last collections were lifted in the churches as follows: At Centenary, $484; at Trinity, $500; at Asbury Station, Union Hill, $210; at Clay street Chapel, $36. Including the amount raised last evening, the sum obtained from the churches of Richmond is $1530. A collection was made also on Sunday at the church in Manchester, amounting to $100, which sum, added to the former sum, gives the total of $1630."

A Touch of the Blue Laws.—We thought every man in this country was entitled to the largest freedom in matters of religious worship: in fact, it has been made a matter of no little boasting, especially among the more immediate descendants of the "Plymouth Rock Fathers." Here is a case, however, which knocks all that boasting one side—a bona fide Church member in Connecticut is compelled to do such things according to the letter of the statute, and not by the dictates of the spirit; else, he becomes a criminal in the eyes of the law! We expect the Psalmist David, who exhorted praisings "with the psaltery and an instrument of ten strings, and playing skilfully with a loud noise," would stand a blue chance in the "Land of Steady Habits." But, here is the item:

"A gentleman at Green Farms, Connecticut, lately left the Methodist and joined the Congregational Church. In his new place of worship (says the Springfield Republican) he found it difficult to repress those outbursts of religious feeling which were allowable with the sect he had left, and was quite often guilty of the impropriety of 'speaking out in meeting,' to the great annoyance of his new brethren. He was labored with affectionately upon the subject, but it was of no use; the occasional 'Amen!' and 'Glory to God!' would slip out in spite of his teeth. He was finally prosecuted for shouting 'Glory to God!' under the influence of a stirring discourse, and was fined three dollars and costs; the costs amounting to ten dollars. In the complaint against him he was accused of 'disturbing religious worship.'"

Origin of the Term "Old Dominion."—Few things are so well calculated to awaken in the mind of the proud Virginian, when wandering in foreign lands, touching reminiscenses of home and kindred, as the simple mention of the "Old Dominion." And yet there are comparatively few who are aware of the origin of the term which has so long and so generally been applied to Virginia. It originated thus: During the Protectorate of Cromwell, the Colony of Virginia refused to acknowledge his authority, and declared itself independent. Shortly after, when Cromwell, threatened to send a fleet and army to reduce Virginia to subjection the alarmed Virginians sent a messenger to Charles II., who was then an exile in Flanders, inviting him to return in the ship with the messenger and be king of Virginia. Charles accepted the invitation, and was on the eve of embarkation, when he was called to the throne of England. As soon as he was fairly seated on his throne, in gratitude for the loyalty of Virginia, he caused her coat of arms to be quartered with those of England, Ireland and Scotland, as an independent member of the empire—a distinct portion of the old dominion." Hence arose the origin of the term. Copper coins of Virginia were issued even as late as the reign of George III., which bore on one side the coats of arms of England, Scotland, Ireland and Virginia.

"I AM THEIR MUSIC."

BY REV. WM. S. PLUMER, D. D.

Sometimes it is an honor to have one's name heard in melody. Thus, the women of Israel sang with joy and with instruments of music: "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands." But at a later period the same David complained that he was "the song of the drunkards." And the sad, timid, gentle, loving Jeremiah, speaking of his enemies, said: "I am their music." They made free with his name. They made merry over his miseries. They poured upon him the utmost cruelty of their scorn.

Nor was his case solitary. Job said: "My friends scorn me." Asaph said: "We are become a reproach to our neighbors; a scorn and derision to them that are round about us." Other Psalmists sang the same dirge. His enemies called Paul a babbler. Of Christ it was said: "He hath a devil, and is mad." This is an old weapon of the adversary." To be acute is well, but to be malevolent is devilish. To see faults requires penetration; but to deride men requires malignity. Scorners often invent an evil report, and imagine a mischievous thing. Though we may ridicule that which has been proven to be evil or foolish, yet scorn itself, can never prove any one wrong, or unwise, or unprofitable.

True, derision is hard to bear. Few have courage to endure it. Under its stroke thousands quail. The natural temper of most men quite unfits them for this kind of suffering. They are of a shrinking spirit. They dread the finger of scorn more than they do the warrior's steel. It ought to be, though often it is not, a part of education to teach the young to bear scorn without being moved from their settled convictions. To make ridicule of any degree the test of truth, of right, and of honor, is to sap the foundations of all stability of character. The principles of those who thus believe will bend before every wind of temptation. So potent is scorn in unsettling men's minds, that Divine grace is the only infallible guaranty against the surrender of a good conscience to the demands of the witty wicked.

Yet, by the grace of God, the contempt of the wicked can be borne. Many have endured it without wavering. When the people of God have been compelled to sing: "Our soul is exceedingly filled with the scorning of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud," they have been able with the same breath, and with strong confidence, to plead for mercy, and cast their care upon the Lord. Thus David meekly bore the cursing of Shimei. Thus the martyrs bore the cruel mockings and scourgings. For the joy set before him, Jesus endured the Cross, despising the shame. To give as good as is sent, to return railing for railing, and scorn for scorn, may express fierceness, but not constancy. When Cato was vilely insulted, he calmly said: "A contest between us is very unequal, for thou canst bear ill language with ease, and return it with pleasure; and to me it is unusual to hear and disagreeable to speak it." When Stephen was insulted, gnashed upon and stoned, he said: "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." A good conscience is the best support in such seasons of trial.

If, by God's grace we can quietly bear scorn and contempt, we shall find them quite harmless. All praise and all censure of man is but the breath of worms. The applause of the world cannot save, and the denunciations of the world cannot damn a single soul. Up to this time men have commonly lauded the wicked, and condemned the just. Of him who made all things, who spake as man never spake, who dealt great blessings all around him, they said: "Away with this fellow. Crucify him—crucify him. Not this man, but Barrabbas." When men are dead, the world often builds the sepulchres of its victims, and consigns to infamy those whom it has flattered while living. And even in this life—

"Applause
Waits on success; the fickle multitude,
Like the light straw that floats along the stream,
Glide with the current still, and follow fortune."

The very men who one moment pronounced Paul a murderer, the next moment said he was a god. He was neither the one nor the other, in their sense of the matter.

Scorners are among the most hopeless offenders. They are fearfully hardened. Their doom is commonly among the incorrigible. This is so true that good men often cease to attempt their conversion by any words of solemn warning. In this they are borne out by Scripture: "He that reproveth a scorner getteth to himself shame. Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee." "A scorner loveth not one that reproveth him; neither will he go unto the wise." The only good that usually comes of reproving scorners is that others less hardened may be deterred from following their pernicious ways. "Smite a scorner, and the simple will beware."

Fierce, terrible and triumphant as scorners may for a long time be, their day of doom will come at last. The triumphing of the wicked is short. Jehovah scorneth the scorner. Judgments are prepared for him. For a while they delight in their scorning, but the day is coming when they will sore vex themselves that they ever shot out the lip. Were they at all wise, they would now weep and howl for their miseries that shall come upon them. There is but little hope for the conversion of such. There is, of course, but little hope of their salvation. It was to such Jesus said: "How can ye escape the damnation of Hell?" See also Lamentations—iii, 64-66—where the verbs are "all future, not imperative.... a prophecy, and not an imprecation;" so that we may read those verses: "Thou wilt render them a recompense, Oh Lord, according to the work of their hands. Thou wilt give them sorrow of heart—thy curse upon them. Thou wilt persecute and destroy them in anger from the heavens of the Lord."

Let all the servants of the Lord remember that it is but a little while they have to bear the taunts, and gibes, and contempt of the malignant. Soon the wicked shall cease from troubling, and the weary shall be at rest.

"There is an hour of peaceful rest,
To mourning wanderers given;
There is a joy for souls distressed,
A balm for every wounded breast,
'Tis found alone in Heaven."

How sweet will that rest be! And it shall be uninterrupted forever. Nothing that defileth shall ever enter the portals of the upper sanctuary. The Lamb is the light thereof.

REMINISCENCES OF JAS. AXLEY.

BY BISHOP MORRIS.

In 1804 the Western Conference was reinforced by a class of young men, some of whom became very distinguished Methodist preachers; among them were Samuel Parker, Peter Cartwright and James Axley. With the last named I never enjoyed but one week's personal acquaintance, but that left upon my memory an indelible impression of his person and character, of which this pen-portrait is but an imperfect reflection. He has mingled with scenes of excitement, toil and peril, well calculated to develop his physical and mental energies. Among his early fields of labor were Red River, Hookhacking, French Broad, Opelousas, and Powel's Valley. Subsequently he labored on Wabash, Holstone, Green River, and French Broad districts as Presiding Elder. These widely separated points in the Lord's vineyard, all included in the old Western Conference, indicate that he had a pretty thorough breaking into the Gospel harness after the manner of our fathers in the days of Bishop Asbury, when itinerancy was what its name imports.

Long as I had been crossing the path of that notable man, and much as I had heard of him among the people, my first sight of him was not obtained till the Autumn of 1837. That year the Holstone Conference met at Madisonville, Eastern part of Tennessee, some ten miles from which Brother Axley, then in a local relation, resided. The first day of the session, after the adjournment, I was walking to my lodgings alone, when I heard a brother some forty steps behind me say to another: "Yonder comes Brother Axley." Looking ahead I observed a man advancing toward me whose person was imposing. He was, perhaps, five feet eight inches high; not corpulent, but very broad and compactly built, formed for strength; his step was firm, his face was square, complexion dark, eyebrows heavy, appearance rugged; dressed in the costume of our fathers, with straight-breasted coat, and broad-brimmed hat projecting over a sedate countenance. His wide-spread fame as a natural genius without any early education and especially the numerous incidents I had heard of him as a Western pioneer, had excited in me a greater desire for his personal acquaintance than that of any other living man I had ever seen, except Jacob Gruber. The sound of his name falling on my ear involuntarily quickened my pace, and we were soon together. As I neared him I held out my right hand and received his, when the following salutations were exchanged:

"How are you, Brother Axley?"

"Who are you?"

"My name is Thomas A. Morris."

Then surveying me from head to foot, he replied: "Upon my word, I think they were hard pushed for Bishop-timber, when they got hold of you."

"That is just what I thought myself, Brother Axley."

"Why, you look too young for a Bishop."

"As to that, I am old enough to know more and do better."

Turning back with me, we walked to our lodging, both being quartered at the same place. Every hour that I could redeem from Conference and Council business was enlivened by his quaint but thrilling narratives of his early travels, labors and difficulties. Unaccustomed to the free use of the pen, he kept all his records in his tenacious memory, much strengthened by use, and narrated with uncommon precision as to names, dates, and the order in which facts transpired. This he did leisurely, and with perfect self-possession, but spiced the whole with such apt remarks and consummate good-humor that the attention of the company never faltered. Never was I better entertained or more instructed with the conversation of a fellow-sojourner in one week than with his. It was decidedly rich.

Next morning I observed him seated near the door, remote from the business platform, and invited him forward to conduct the opening religious service of the Conference. Then it was that some of his peculiarities were practically developed to me for the first time. His reading and prayer were brief and simple, yet quite impressive; but his singing took me entirely by surprise. He used no hymn-book, gave out no lines, but led off on a familiar hymn and tune in strains so exhilarating and devotional that both appeared to be new and super-excellent. Whether he had ever paid any special attention to tune-books is doubtful, as he was proverbial for his opposition to choir-singing. However that may have been, his voice embodied in itself more strength, more volume, more melody, and certainly more devotional influence, than that of an ordinary church choir of a dozen select singers. He was invited to a seat on the platform.

After the journal was read, an unimportant resolution was offered, over which there was a little sharp-shooting by speech-makers. Our guest, though opposed to the motion, did not interfere in the discussion. The brethren, having fired their minute-guns, came to a vote, expressed in the usual way, by raising their hands; two hands were plainly visible, and another was partly elevated, and then suddenly drawn down. Before the chair had time to announce the decision, Brother Axley vociferated, in a very quaint manner, "Just two votes and a half for that!" The effect upon the risibles of the lusty ecclesiastic was electrical; the gravest of the fathers were convulsed with laughter. Only the author of it seemed to be self-possessed.

There were points of singular contrast in his character. His exterior was rough as a block of granite fresh from the quarry, and his manner of reproving disorderly persons at popular meetings over which he presided, was said to indicate severity; yet his conscience was so tender, and his moral sensibility so acute, that a mere suggestion from a friend that he had erred in any given case would draw from him prompt acknowledgment with a shower of tears. His dress and address indicated the rustic, probably perpetuated by the force of early habit; and yet in social intercourse he was both kind and attractive. His conversational talent was of a superior order. Without classical learning, or much pretension to book knowledge, he was such a master in practical, every-day affairs that he could not only do right, but instruct sages and divines. He could so present even a common-place topic as to throw interest around it, and by his musical powers he conquered some who could be reached by no other means. I was informed that individuals who were at first his enemies and persecutors because of his profession as a Methodist preacher, on hearing him sing, became his warm friends; and I do not doubt it. Indeed, he told me himself of an instance in which he was relieved from great embarrassment by singing, without saying anything as to the merit of the performance. It occurred while he was laboring on the Opelousas mission, in Louisiana, perhaps about the year 1807 or 1808. In order to supply some destitute neighborhoods with the Gospel by enlarging his mission, he went on a tour of exploration where he was a stranger to all. Some of his adventures during that expedition would, by the ministers of this generation, be regarded as specimens of moral heroism. But, omitting other incidents, I shall refer only to the point in hand.

One evening, after riding all day without any dinner, he called at a house where the family consisted of a widow lady, a grown up daughter, a number of children, and some servants, none of whom were religious. The lady and her family regretted his coming, would not grant his request to remain over night, and clearly intimated by looks and actions that he was an unwelcome guest. The reader may ask why he did not leave immediately. The reason was; he knew, if defeated in obtaining lodging there, nothing remained for him but a berth in the dark wood without, food or shelter, in an inclement season of the year. As he rested a little to warm himself, and consider [illegible] he should manage to pass that dreary night, the thought of his forlorn condition as a homeless stranger, without money or friends, came like a dark cloud over his mind. His deep, sad cogitations proceeded in silence. Then, as was natural in the extremity, he turned his thoughts toward his Heavenly Father's house above, where he hoped sometime to find a home free from the ills of mortal life. Being a little cheered with the prospect, without leave, introduction, or ceremony, he began to sing one of the songs of Zion in a strange land. As he proceeded his depressed feelings became elevated; by which of faith ranged above and beyond the desolate wilderness he had just been contemplating as the place of his night's sojourn; the family were all melted into tears; he took fresh [illegible] and sang on with the best [illegible] he had finished, perhaps, [illegible] when the lady called a servant and ordered him to put the gentleman's horse into the stable; and the daughter added: "Be sure to feed him well." Thus the strains of sacred melody, such as Axley could wield, removed all opposition and relieved the case.

Brother Axley made every important interest of life a subject of prayer, as all Christian people should. Toward the close of our week's interview he incidentally alluded to his courtship and marriage, which occurred, I believe, after he had been a minister some years. He opened his mind to his friend by letter, inclosed in another letter to her brother, with whom she resided. To the brother he wrote, if he had any objection to the correspondence with his sister, to burn it, and that would end the matter. The letter, however, was delivered into her hand, containing a proposition of marriage, and a notice that he would be there on a given day to receive the answer. On the day appointed he came, obtained an interview, and opened the cause by stating he wished to talk over the subject alluded to in his letter; "but, first of all," said he, "we must pray for direction." They kneeled together, and he led in prayer. After prayer he wished to know whether she consented to the proposed union. She thought it would not be unwise to have longer time in which to decide; but he deemed that needless, as they were well acquainted, and insisted on a present and direct answer. The result was marriage.

LONGING.... By James Russell Lowell.

Of all the myriad moods of mind
That through the soul come thronging,
Which one was e'er so dear, so kind,
So beautiful, as longing?
The thing we long for, that we are
For one transcendent moment.
Before the present, poor and bare,
Can make its sordid environment.

Still, though our pottery ail and strife
Glows down the wished ideal,
And longing moulds in clay what Life
Carves to the marble real;
To let the new life in, we know
Desire must ope the portal;
Perhaps the longing to be so
Helps make the soul immortal.

Longing is God's fresh heavenward will
With our poor earthward striving;
We quench it that it may be still
Content with merely living;
But would we learn that heart's full scope,
Which we are hourly wronging,
Our lives must climb above hope to hope
And realize our longing.

Ah [illegible] to our praises,
[illegible] our actions
[illegible] when we loved his ways,
[illegible] our spirit be known!
[illegible] might sound be also taught
[illegible] full satisfaction,
When we are simply good to thought
How we fall to action!

Robespierre.

Frequently, when stillly standing in his olive colored coat, with fixed eye, contracted brow, and shrill voice, accompanied by hard gesture, Robespierre was pleading at the Tribune for the people's cause, Mirabeau, in the midst of whisperings and mockeries, had been seen to contemplate in pensive curiosity that [illegible] pale-visaged and strangely smiling, whose physiognomy breathed forth, as it were, a dreamy gentleness, in whom all things spoke a passion for order; and who appeared full of respect for himself—so careful was he of his attire, so grave in his attitude, so studied in his speech.

Who might this new comer be, on whom lingered thus the presentiments of genius, and what part was he to play in the revolution? He was to demand justice for all men—for all without exception; he was to be the preacher of right. With him there was to be no promise; for is not truth one? [illegible] claim him; he is of the party of [illegible] ideas; that suffices. At his first step in the career where he was to leave the trace of his blood and a name renowned, he earned the surname of The Incorruptible. As a simple advocate, honest people quoted his integrity; as a legislator, the wicked feared him. Always ready to defend the people, he knew not how to flatter them; he had at once too much pride and too much virtue. In the midst of a society in disorder, he worshipped regulation. Anarchy he abhorred. Popularity, to be earned by cynical habits and language, he despised. He never concealed his disdain for extravagancies in theory or action. Yet Freron admired him. Hebert respected him; and he forced Marat to praise him.

His life was laborious, austere; his manners did honor to his principles. Others, among known Tribunes, might display a suspicious opulence, sup by the light of golden chandeliers, and intoxicate themselves with wine and luxury. He occupied, in the Rue Saintonge, a wretched apartment, shared and half paid for by a companion youth. He spent scarcely thirty sous for his meals, went on foot where duty called him, and out of his salary as deputy, piously diminished by an annuity paid to his sister, could not always set aside sufficient to buy him a coat.

But if there are imperfections which an imperfect nature willingly covers with its sympathy, there are weaknesses which we adore, and these Robespierre had not. Something impenetrable enveloped his ideal. His virtue, like a sickly star, shone without beaming. Even on the lips which commonly opened only to exalt him, it seemed as if his presence checked light praises and familiar smiles. When he spoke of mercy, he awakened fear. Yet, at Arras, where he was born, his childhood, we are assured, had given evidence of frankness and of charming tastes. Although already inclined to serious meditations, laughter, even to tears, came easily to him, for an aviary in those times formed his republic. Early an orphan, he tenderly loved his brothers, and idolized his sisters; next to them came his dear birds. Later, when he left the College of Louis-le-Grand, the doors of which had been opened for him by the affection of the Abbe de Wasai, and where he had Camille Desmoulins for fellow pupil, his thoughts began to turn towards love, and took form in gallant verses. He entered the society of the Rosatis, celebrated the light songster of Vert-Vert, in a town worthy of his hero, and earned the academical crowns of his province. What shall we add? The oath which Malle. Deshorties swore to him, that she would never be another's, but only his—that oath of love broken in absence—plunged him into prodigious and [illegible] factual grief. [Louis Blanc.

Boyhood of Distinguished Men.—Dryden displayed no evidences of more than ordinary intelligence until he reached mature manhood; and Johnson says of Goldsmith, that he was "a [illegible] flowered late." Schiller was a very [illegible] and much fonder of ball and leap- [illegible] than of books. The most interesting thing told of [illegible] child by his biographer is, that once, [illegible] child of a storm of thunder and lightning, [illegible] climbed a tree, and when asked by his parents why he did so, replied, whispering: "That the lightening was very beautiful, and she wished [illegible] where it was coming from." This story [illegible] furnishes an illustration of the [illegible] the young mind delights [illegible] for itself in its own way; [illegible] character this anecdote is [illegible] the architect of the Eddystone [illegible] when a boy in petticoats [illegible] ered on the top of his [illegible] of fixing the model of [illegible] constructed. [illegible] of the most distinguished [illegible] of those distinguished [illegible] altogether undistinguished [illegible] yhood. Sir Isaac Newton, [illegible] man, stood very low in his class [illegible] though he was fond of mechanical [illegible] and of drawing various materials. Sir David Brewster says of him, that "when he arrived at Trinity College, he brought with him a more slender portion of science than falls to the lot of ordinary scholars; but this state of his acquirements (continues his biographer) was perhaps not unfavorable to the development of his mental powers. Unexhausted by premature growth, and invigorated by healthful repose, his mind was the better fitted to make those vigorous and rapid shoots which soon covered with foliage and fruit the genial soil to which it had been transferred."

The distinguished Sir Humphrey Davy said of himself: "I consider it fortunate that I was left so much to myself when a child, and put upon no particular plan of study; and that I enjoyed so much idleness at Mr. Coryton's school. I perhaps owe to these circumstances the little talents that I have, and their peculiar application. What I am I have made myself. I say this without vanity, and in pure simplicity of heart." And it is so in fact. Every man who achieves greatness does so, not through his acquirements under teachers when a boy, but through his self-education after he has become a man.

We might adduce an immense number of instances of positively stupid boys who have become distinguished and highly useful men—for instance, Isaac Barrow, the great divine, was at his boyhood chiefly distinguished by his propensity for fighting, in which he got many a bloody nose; and his father used to say, that if it pleased God to take from him any of his children, he hoped it might be Isaac, who was the least promising of them all. And that prodigy of learning, Dr. Adam Clark, when a boy, was never happier than when "rolling large stones about," caring nothing for learning or reading of any sort. But at this kind of work he became "uncommonly lively," though his father proclaimed him to be a most "grievous dunce." Thanks to Adam Clark's power of rolling about the large stones, in his boyhood, he was afterwards able to roll about large thoughts in his manhood.

Napoleon and Wellington were both dull boys. The former is described by the Duchess d'Abrantes, who knew him intimately when a child, as "having good health, and in other respects, he was like other boys." And she adds: "My uncles have a thousand times assured me that Napoleon, in his boyhood, had none of that singularity of character attributed to him."

A New View of Niagara.—The Ohio State Journal tells a story of an Irishman of the better class who thought he must conform to the fashionable mode in paying a visit to the Falls of Niagara. Paddy arrived at the Falls and taking a look at the surrounding wonders, addressed himself to a gentleman: "And is this Niagara Falls?" "Yes," was the reply. "And what's there here to make such a bother about?" "Why," said the gentleman, "do you not see the mighty river, the deep abyss, the great sheet of water pouring down?" Paddy looking at the [illegible] waterfall, replies hesitatingly, "And [illegible] shades of [illegible]

MCGUIGAN AND CARVER.—These polite and enterprising book merchants, 36 Camp street, are doing a business brisk and heavy; and, we hope, profitable. In Alabama, however, the blue clay, at a great depth, has more the appearance of stone than with us; while after passing through it, shifting sand has generally been found, among which abundant streams of good water have been discovered. The large iron pipe with which the excavation is lined, and which is of the most substantial and durable character, has already been sunk about one hundred and eighty feet, and will soon be lowered to the entire depth of the hole, when the boring will recommence. The shape of the outer log, which was found and hoped through at the depth of one hundred and fifty-three feet, has, after much ... trouble, been overcome, and thus ... serious obstacle to the rapid and energetic ... progress of the work has been removed.

SOUTHERN LADY'S COMPANION FOR APRIL.—This is the first number of the eighth volume. The worthy editor, Dr. Hinkle, thus speaks of its condition financial:

"As the Companion has been a nursling of ours from its birth, we had hoped for the proud satisfaction of presenting it to the General Conference with a large list of promptly paying patrons; but while we need not be ashamed of the number of patrons, we do anticipate deep mortification in being compelled to report to the General Conference a list of some 3000 or 4000 subscribers among the ladies of the South, with a debt against them of $10,000 or $15,000.

Alluding to the examination which it is about to pass at the approaching General Conference, he says, "We think it probable that the work will be enlarged—that an able editor will be appointed to conduct it—that those who are in debt for past volumes of the Companion will be required to make immediate payment at the increased price ($1 50), and that no more will be permitted in future to have the work without paying for it in advance."

EXHORTERS; WHERE ARE THEY?

In times of yore, so far agone as those of St. Paul, John Wesley and Francis Asbury, this class of men were lively and efficient instruments of good in carrying on the aggressions of the Gospel; and in contributing to the successful evangelism of the masses.

In those times he that exhorted waited on exhortation, and much was the profit to himself and others. He was neither Deacon nor Elder—not even assuming the title of preacher. Whatever these exhorters were, it is plain they stood apart from other offices and names in the Gospel economy—they were not pastors—they were not ordained men.

Doubtless, they were not chiefly expounders of the Word; nor was their labor expended in doctrinal exercises. Their duty was hortatory. That department of the pulpit called "application" was their province. To wield truths already vindicated—for the most part acknowledged; to bring out the slumbering capital of instruction, imparted and received. They were to operate in fields already sown: where a Paul had planted the requisite staple of information and conviction, and where it only remained to gather the fruit by developing these elements to their legitimate results. It matters little about names; call them lay-preachers; or, be Scriptural, rather, and call them "Exhorters." Their true sphere was the applicative and devotional: gifted, it may be, peculiarly in all the persuasives of melody, prayer, and tearful heart-eloquence.

That this class of instruments was designed to fill the ordained ranks is far from certain. It was not merely a feeder to the higher offices of the Ministry, any more than the Ministry proper was a supply to this. Exhorters were exhorters—they abided in that wherein they were called—exhorters for life. We suppose that they were important members of the great system of instrumentalities for the diffusion of the Gospel. As such they are necessary; their province is among those who have heard; who are already indoctrinated. They are a part of the system as God has arranged—to be always a part of it.

Such men there were in Paul's time; in Wesley's time; our book of discipline supposes them to exist. Where are they?

In these days there are no children in the world such as there used to be; all must be, by some fiction of society, considered grown. It is scarcely less true that there are no exhorters. There are preachers, ministers, and too often by a parallel fiction of Church license, and the suffrage of orders.

We need exhorters—we need them much. It was never designed that we should get on without them, and it is, therefore, scarcely possible that we should. This question, by possibility, looks to the Local Preacher topic, which our contemporaries are just now discussing. A local preacher ordained is an anomaly; an itinerant exherter would be almost as much so.

Is it not hereabout that those we are inquiring for have been lost?

PURSUIT OF SUBSCRIBERS UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

"Oh, for a hundred such Agents!" every Editor will say on reading the following. Well may they say it. Hoe's and Adams's double cylinders have not done so much for the religious press as such agents would do for it. For, of what value are "a thousand copies in an hour," if there be not readers and supporting patrons. We thought of making a riddle on it, after the manner of Samson, but will leave somebody else to do that—not being gifted that way, ourselves, anyhow. The Agent, Rev. T. M., writes:

REV. H. N. MCTYEIRE—Dear Brother—We regretted not finding you at Tuscaloosa during our last Conference; neither did you send an agent. I am still more convinced every year of the importance of having an agent, with the accounts from both Departments. Our Committees frequently make mistakes, not being men of business habits. It would be well for each editor to select a suitable man from each Conference, when he cannot attend in person, and let him have all accounts; so there be no mistakes. A man thus selected and appointed would prepare and take an interest. Even if the editor was present, this would be a good arrangement. I could give several instances that would suggest the importance of the above arrangement. What think you?

I was making some effort to get subscribers for our periodical; in an interview with one of our brethren, I insisted that he should take a paper. His reply was: "I am too poor." Seeing quite a number of bee-gums near at hand, I proposed taking the amount in honey. This seemed to try his faith; he proceeded: "How will you get it home?" I replied: "That is an arrangement of my own." Another difficulty came up in regard to the value of the gum. I still insisted that I would arrange all that, in order to get him to take a religious newspaper; So, after we had thoroughly canvassed the whole matter, he agreed to take paper, and paid the money. When I left the circuit his family enjoyed the weekly visits of the Advocate; and, I presume, if my successors have done their duty in this regard, that kind family still enjoy the visits of that friendly sheet. I am frequently asked from that quarter: "If I am still fond of honey!"

I give this to show that a little effort, in a friendly way, may serve to put the Advocate in every family.

"THE PHILOSOPHY OF CHRISTIAN REFLECTION. By Merritt Caldwell, late Professor of Moral and Intellectual Philosophy, Dickinson College. Miller, Orton & Mulligan, Publishers, Auburn, N. Y." This is a small 12mo. of 164 pages, of neat typographical execution. It contains an introduction by the Rev. Wm. Hosmer. This to us is no presumption in favor of the book. Its best commendation is the reputation of its lamented author.

METHODIST PRESS.

The Editor of the Western Christian Advocate reports a lecture of Rev. Mr. Tyng, of Cincinnati, before the YOUNG MEN'S TEMPERANCE LEAGUE. Mr. T. is the son of the distinguished Episcopal clergyman of New York, and like his father is above no useful work:

Mr. Tyng devoted himself principally to the question of a comparison between the wine of ancient times and the wine of modern times, and he showed, as conclusively as any thing could be showed, that the two articles were not so much as forty-second cousins to each other. "Words frequently change in their meaning," said Mr. T. "Two or three centuries ago the word fellow meant a sheep-stealer; but we should not, therefore, when we of this age call a man a right clever fellow, be understood as saying that he was a right smart sheep-stealer. The word villian was once used to signify a husbandman, but there are precious few farmers who are scamps nowadays, and precious few villians who are farmers. So with the word wine. In ancient times the wine was without a particle of alcohol, and could not, therefore, be like the modern drugged wine, with its twenty-five or thirty per cent. of alcohol, nor like even the still and sparkling Catawba wines, with their seven, eight and twelve per cent. of alcohol. In all the juices of the grape, when pressed out, are two articles, without which vinous fermentation could not take place, namely: sugar and gluten; the former soluble, the latter insoluble. Now, the gluten, if separated from the grape-juice, will prevent fermentation, and, of course, the formation of alcohol, and it can be separated from the wine by repeated strainings or filterings. The ancient wines were so filtered and strained, and hence the expression in Isaiah, xxv, of wine well refined on the lees, means wine well and repeatedly and carefully strained, and the power to ferment or to generate alcohol thus taken away." It would afford as pleasure more extensively to report Mr. Tyng's remarks, but our space forbids. We will mention, however, that he demonstrated incontestibly that the ancient wines were frequently, when not strained, boiled down into syrup—the same way that we boil down sugar-water into maple-molasses - that it was common to carry wine so boiled down in sheep-skins, and to take a small portion of it when required, and mix it with ten or fifteen, or even twenty parts of water, as historians state, and thus form the drink called wine. The wines of Arcadia and Palestine, being made from unusually sweet grapes, were susceptible of being boiled to a very thick consistence. Now, wine, such as ours of modern times, having alcohol in it, cannot be thickened by boiling, for the alcohol flies off at 170 degrees, and water boils at 212 degrees, and by the time you are done boiling modern wine, it has all flown off, and nothing remains but a dark, dirty sediment.

The same, slipped off from pen and scissors to hear Rev. Mr. Caughey preach and reports: Text—"Rejoice evermore."

His introductory and other remarks were to the point and very characteristic. "I would as soon expect to find orchards of apples at the North Pole," said Brother C., "or to see an elephant make a spring into the air and fly off like a bird, as to see a man rejoice evermore who was unconverted, or who was without clear evidence of his conversion. An unconverted man is filled with confusion and darkness, and can't rejoice any at all hardly, much less evermore. Christians, to rejoice evermore, must pray without ceasing—must always be in a frame of prayer. What ascends in prayer descends in blessings. Christians must indulge in ejaculatory prayer. or as an archer shoots his arrows, into the sky, so must they shoot their desires to God. They must indulge in a succession of mental breathings to the Lord, or their souls will die. The lungs live, and we live in our bodies by inhaling constantly the atmosphere. If we should stop inhaling, we should die. The mill-wheel propels all the machinery of the mill when it goes round; but the wheel can't go round when there is no water on it. As water is to the mill-wheel, and as air is to the lungs, so is prayer to the soul. It sets all the spiritual machinery in motion".

AN OUTPOST.—Such is Brownsville, on the Rio Grande. Rev. O. M. Addison was sent there, at the last Texas Conference. The Methodist Church was planted there by Rev. N. A. Cravens. Of the state and prospects of the Church and the country generally, Mr. Addison gives an opinion not despairing, yet not flattering. We quote freely from the Wesleyan Banner, 1st inst:

The work is already in progress, and for several years past the Presbyterians and Episcopalians have each employed a minister here; the latter have a neat brick church in progress of completion which proves an ornament to the town. Our Presbyterian friends have been worshipping in the Methodist church; but they now contemplate building for themselves; so, at no very distant day, may be seen the houses for Protestant worship on this confine of Papal Mexico.

Our Church, once in a flourishing state, has dwindled so low that five members now represent Methodism in Brownsville. These few sheep, for the want if a pastor, felt almost abandoned in the wilderness, and nothing but the opportune arrival of the new preacher saved them from total discouragement. After having the church renovated and refitted, we began our regular services, which, up to this time have been very well attended. A Sabbath school has also been organized with eighteen scholars, and five teachers; the prospect is good for a still further addition. No absentees have to be marked at our class-meetings, and all things considered, the missionary feels encouraged, and looks for the blessings of Heaven on his labor.

The general state of society, always except the Mexicans, will, perhaps, compare favorably with any community in this, or the older States; but it must be conceded that a spirit of practical infidelity prevails to an alarming extent. This has its plainest indication, in the open, and almost universal desecration of the Sabbath, on which holy day business and pleasure are as eagerly pursued as if the claims and blessings of the Gospel were yet unknown. The peculiarities of Mexican trade and habits, with the reckless tendency of frontier life, may have induced this state of things; but it is to be hoped that the intelligence of the community, and the proper appreciation of good morals, will lead to the abandonment of this heathenish practice, disgraceful alike to the guilty as Christians, and citizens of the United States.

It is a favorable augery of the future to know that the Mexicans have been recently restrained by the city authorities, in some of their excesses on the Christian Sabbath, the worshipper is no longer disturbed in his devotions by the noise of the drum, inviting attendance at the fandango, and we pray that this partial reform may end in a complete suppression of all improper doings on this consecrated day.

At a rough estimate the Mexicans compose about seven-eighths of the population of the town, the majority of which are of the lowest class, a more degraded set of beings in a civilized land, cannot well be conceived of; a common negro could not fail to feel his authority. Their jacals, thickly skirting the suburbs, first attract the notice of a stranger upon entering the place; they are built of upright sticks or cane, with a coating of mud to stop the cracks; the earth serves for the floor, and the roof is thatched with a species of straw or rushes, and its general exterior might be mistaken for a Hottentot hut. The interior, furnished with a few hides for bedding, and a machine for grinding corn, constitutes the requisites for housekeeping. The women are said to be all faithless, and the men constitutionally thievish; (of course, among the better class there are exceptions.) Nothing outside of a lock and key is safe from the roguish talons of a greaser. A few minutes suffices to place the depredator on a foreign soil, and should you properly be found next morning in Matamoros, the only recourse is to "let patience have its perfect work:" it is hopelessly beyond the reach of recovery. This thieving propensity is exercised upon every thing, great and small, that is at all stealable, from the Bible in the pulpit to the old milk-cow in the chapparal.

If I am correctly informed, this "rag-tag-and-bob-tail" rabble rank among the "sovereigns," and are entitled to all the privileges of the ballot-box. This a great imposition on the people of our State, and must be productive of much evil. I know hundreds of negroes on Texas plantations far better fitted to exercise the rights of suffrage than one half the greasers I have fallen in with on the Rio Grande.

So far as my experience extends these hombres enjoy abundant leisure: even the ageadors that supply the town with water, find time to collect at the corners of the streets, and engage in their favorite pastime of gambling.

These fellows conduct their business in quite a primitive style, and from their number, it must prove profitable. A spindle in the centre of each head of a strongly bound barrel form the axles upon which the loops in the two ends of a short lariat work; the middle of the rope is then thrown across his breast, and the waterman walks off, the barrel trundling after him. These are the "Old Fogies:" but "Young America" mounts his horse, and taking the tongue of a water-cart in his hand, trots off with his load: should it prove too heavy, a rope connected with the cart is fastened to the saddle-bow.

The Rio Grande flows along side of the city, and is about the size of the Brazos river, with sufficiency of water for navigation to Rome, and is remarkably crooked. Two ferryboats, under the Mexican flag, ply constantly from opposite shores, crossing foot passengers at a picayune each. This stream separates us from Mexico, and its recent history is fraught with interest to every American. Near its banks the patriot Texans fought the bloody battle of Meir. Here, too, the thunder of Taylor's artillery first awoke the slumbering echoes, in opening the triumphant campaign that gave to our Confederacy New Mexico and California.

REVIVAL.—Rev. R. J. Harp, of Lake Providence, writes to a friend—"The revival in the Church still continues. About sixty accessions (whites) to the Methodist Church, and twenty to the Presbyterian, besides twenty-five or thirty colored—making in all over one hundred who have joined, and probably seventy-five have professed faith in Christ."

Of the Sunday School, he says—"Our Sunday School has sent for one of the finest libraries in the State. We have received, in donations of cash and books, near three hundred dollars. Our library will comprise nearly 2000 volumes of miscellaneous reading books, and over 200 note and question books."

This is as it should be—Revivals and Sunday Schools in close connection. Books, Catechisms, Revivals, the Holy Ghost, and the Advocate has not been forgotten. A good list of new subscribers is an excellent appendix, the best supplement to a revival. Let our agents who enjoy these times of refreshing, remember. We like Brother Craven's first fruits amazingly.

REVIVAL AT FRANKLIN, LA.—Rev. N. A. Cravens, pastor, writes on the 13th inst.:

"Our meeting, which has been in progress since the 26th of March in Franklin, closed to-night. The result of which is an accession of one hundred and three white members, and sixty-two colored. Three-fourths of the whites profess to have received pardon by faith at this meeting, and many of the servants have also made a profession of religion.

"As a first-fruits of the revival I send you fifteen new subscribers for the N. O. Christian Advocate."

"Twelve white members also joined our Zion at Pattersonville last Sunday and there is a good prospect for a general revival there."

MACON, MISS.—We are getting on smoothly and pleasantly in Macon. We have an efficient and liberal membership, and Church-going community. A more agreeable up-country station is not to be found.

We have just finished and dedicated our new church. It is a handsome brick edifice, with a basement; the upper room elegant and comfortable. Dr. J. Hamilton, of Selma, preached the dedication sermon a few Sabbath's since. It was one of his best efforts. The congregation were delighted and profited. On that occasion we raised over $1100, the balance due on the debt of the church; and it was given to God free from debt. We pray it may soon become the scene of great power and glory. Yours, etc.,

A MODEL STATION.

There is a station the Alabama Conference which, we think, as much deserves to be called "The Model Station" as any one of its class in the South. A new church edifice has recently been erected, of brick, with a basement. No expense has been spared to make it elegant and comfortable. Thus, they have begun right.

The female members are pious, zealous and laborious. The males, however, do not, as in most places, come short of the females in piety and zeal. Quite a number of females, and nearly all the males, are always ready to lead in prayer, when desired. Class-meetings and prayer-meetings are very well attended.

The congregations are large, attentive and serious. The singing is good, and constantly improving. The extremes of Old Fogyism and Young America are both avoided. They desire to hold fast to all that is good in the old, and profit by all that good is in the new. They suffer no public collections to be taken up for the benefit of the minister. They attend to this privately.

When the preacher met his stewards, at the beginning of the year, instead of reducing his assessment to just such an amount as would barely keep him from starving, they asked him to name such an amount as he wished them to give—not to be modest, but tell them how much he wanted. They said they knew the disciplinary allowance was far from being enough. They were willing to give any amount the preacher would name, whether great or small. And, after a sum had been fixed, they told him if he ascertained that this was insufficient, they would increase it as much as he desired. They thus placed the preacher above secular wants.

Who would not labor, heart and strength, for such a people? We leave the curious reader who says "Where is this place?" to

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

MARY E. GLOVER.

They surely have no need of you,
In the place where you are going,
Earth hath its angels all too few,
While heaven is overflowing."

Will the cursory reader, as he glances over these columns, linger a few moments, and attend a simple recital of sufferings borne with a patience, and death met with a triumph, such as we never witnessed before?

The character we shall attempt to portray, is neither ideal nor exaggerated; though, it may be difficult to convince the reader of the fact. We have read of similar cases, this is the first we have ever known.

In an abode of elegance and comfort, a child of affliction is suffering and dying. You see at a glance that she is very young. She has but entered upon those years in which romance and beauty invest all this lower world. Judging, however, by the fortitude with which she bears the intensest suffering, you would decide that she had the wisdom and strength of many years. Why this lamb-like patience? this unruffled calmness? this sweet and holy joy? Is it because the kindest of friends and relatives surround her couch and anticipate her every want, and sympathise with and console her? Is it because she receives all those attentions, nice, delicate and appropriate, which refinement can suggest or wealth can procure? Nay, reader, these cannot relieve those fierce and tearing agonies which rack her frame nor shut out death from her chamber. The touch of softness, the words of sweetness, the looks of kindness, the hands of gentleness cannot produce such sweet, unmurmuring resignation, such high and holy rapture. Listen, reader, while we unfold the secret.

Mary Elizabeth Glover was born in Demopolis, Alabama, on the 6th of May, 1837. From her earliest years, she manifested, in an extraordinary degree, that tenderness of heart, amiability of character and disinterested kindness, which belong to youthful loveliness. She was always cheerful, harmless and happy, shedding the sweet influence of her sunny heart all around her. We have yet to hear of one who disliked her, or of one who, knowing, failed to love her. Health of body, elasticity of spirits, clearness and readiness of intellect, all draperied and adorned with unusual sweetness of disposition and innocency of life, made her "a thing of beauty—a joy forever."

The earlier years of her life were as the cloudless morning, which succeeds a beautiful dawn. Life spread out before her as, indeed, a scene of labor, responsibility and usefulness, but also, as a scene in which much of happiness is mingled. Poor child! she knew not then, what months of suffering were before her; how the sun of her life, after struggling long with cloud and tempest, should go down ere it was noon.

She did not seek happiness amid the gay and festal throng, where God is forgotten and the best feelings of our nature crushed. She sought it from such sources of intellectual, moral and social gratification, as were ennobling and purifying. Consequently, when grace began its more special work in the soul, she had no stubborn habits to subdue, no spirit of worldliness to smother, no evil pride to overcome. In all its warm, youthful affections, in its comparatively unsullied purity, her heart gently and unresistingly yielded itself to God.

About four years since, the disease appeared which finally carried her to her grave. Then began a scene of almost unparalleled suffering. Chiefly confined to her chamber, her thoughts were turned more directly to religion. She sought and obtained peace with God. About eighteen months since, at the suggestion of the writer, she sent her name up to be enrolled among those of the visible Church of God. From that time, though her sufferings steadily and alarmingly increased, her grace and peace increased proportionately. Her chamber was not a place of gloom, from which one would shrink, and which it was painful to enter. She sought, by her cheerfulness and freedom from complaint, to make it attractive and agreeable. With a delicacy and benevolence unusual, she hesitated to reveal to her friends and family the severity of her sufferings.

Many months before her decease, she relinquished all hope of recovery, and turned her thoughts to that silent land which she expected soon to enter. The minutest details respecting her change passed in review before her mind, and were communicated to her friends. Calmly and unshrinkingly she contemplated the progress of her disease and the approach of death. She was visited with frequent spasms, during which she retained her consciousness, and consequently suffered most excruciating pain.

One Sabbath day, her dinner was brought: she ate it, she said, not because she wanted it, but that she might be strengthened to perform her last duty on earth. She then desired to partake of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. After this, she called each one of the family and servants to her bedside, and gave them her last words of exhortation and affection. It was strange to witness the clearness and strength of her intellectual powers. She addressed each one in a manner strikingly appropriate to the condition and peculiarities of each. There was a discrimination, an insight into individual character, such as is rarely found in one so young. The disease which emaciated and prostrated her body, seems to have brightened and invigorated her intellect, and developed the tenderest feelings of her heart. She told us all she would soon die, and that death would be welcome and sweet. Not a cloud darkened the future. Though suffering such pain as mortals seldom suffer, not a murmur escaped her lips. Though longing to be at rest, she was willing to suffer all the will of God. When her mother spoke of her, as her poor, afflicted child, she would say, "Oh, no, mother, call me your blessed child—I am happy, so happy!" A youth—a dear friend, but skeptical—visited her. She expostulated with him with much tenderness, and, we trust, with some effect. She was sorely grieved at his expressions of unbelief. "Oh," she would say, "how can you speak thus of the religion of your mother!" Most affectionately and earnestly did she entreat several unconverted friends to become religious. To one, a relative, she said, "You are growing old—your hair is gray—live no longer as you are. Oh, prepare for death and eternity!" She comforted those who came to comfort her. It was a privilege to be near, and hear the words of comfort and peace which fell from her lips. She requested her mother to take her Bible and go, every Sabbath evening, into the room in which she died, and read to her brother and sister.

While her strength was not yet all gone, she traced, with weak and trembling fingers, a few lines of parting, to two young ladies, dear friends, who were absent. She wrote that it was blessed to die young, when you feel that Jesus will take you to himself. "Let me beg of you," she writes, "as one on the brink of the grave, to seek him while young, before the world and all its vanities enter your heart." Oh, may they heed the warning, and meet their dear angel friend in Heaven!

And now, having discharged her last duties, she calmly awaited her change, as a bride awaits the coming bridegroom. Death was no King of Terrors to her, but a beautiful, smiling angel, sent to waft her to her Eden home. A few days before her death, her spasms became so frequent and violent, her friends were compelled to give her chloroform. During this time she was so completely under its influence, she spoke but little.

At length, her release came. On the 7th of April, at fifteen minutes past eight o'clock, she laid her head on the bosom of Jesus, and breathed her life out sweetly there. Her spirit passed from its home of suffering to its home of joy.

Her funeral was attended by a large and weeping concourse; for she was universally beloved, and her death was universally regretted. It was a solemn and affecting scene. An appropriate and profitable discourse was delivered by her pastor, Rev. J. D. Fisher. The pall-bearers were six young men, with flowers in their hands, which they spread upon the coffin at the church, and scattered in the grave. She had desired that this should be done, for she delighted in flowers. We are reminded of the beautiful lines—

"Bring flowers, pale flowers, o'er the her to shed,
A crown for the brow of the early dead!
Though they smile in vain, for what once was ours,
They are love's last gift—bring flowers, bring flowers!

"They speak of hope to the inlisting heart,
With a voice of promise, they come and part.
They sleep in the dust through the wintry hours.
They break forth in glory—bring flowers, bring flowers!"

How touching such a rite! There she lay, the sweetest flower of them all, to wither and perish with them. Thank God! when the eternal spring shall dawn, she shall break forth with a beauty and fragrance unknown to earth, and that lifeless dust shall bloom in eternal verdure, in the gardens of God.

The hearts of her parents are sadly bruised. However, their consolation aboundeth. They bless God for having given, and for having taken, a child so sweet and holy. She earnestly desired not to be forgotten. No, Mary! thy dear and sorrowing parents, to whom thou wast always a comfort and a joy; thy sweet sister and brothers, whom thou didst love so tenderly; thy relatives, who clung to thee with ardent affection; thy friend, who pens this with dropping tears—will never, never forgot thee! We will strew thy grave with flowers; we will strive to imitate thy virtues; we will seek after a faith sublime as thine; and when we draw near to death, we will remember thy triumphant smile, and we will not fear. And when, through the blood of the Lamb, we stand on the everlasting hills, we shall see thee again, and rejoice with thee forever.

"Oh, though oft depressed and lonely
All our fears are laid aside
If we but remember only
Such as these have lived and died."

UNIFORMITY NOT UNITY.

Mere denominational uniformity is not Christian unity. It is a favorite project with many in the present day to single out some sect, usually their own, and then say to themselves: "If we could get all the world to join us, there would be unity." And so possessed are they with the notion that the unity of the Church consists in conformity to them, that many of them have determined to know nothing among men, save their Church (meaning their own community) and conformity thereto. Their union is separation from non-canonical Christians; and could they but make one font, one surplice, and one service-book for all, they are persuaded the Church would be one. In place of unity of spirit, they labor for unity of costume. They cannot understand a united family which does not wear a regimental uniform. We, on the other hand, have seen a uniformity in which there was nothing but the form. The Church of the Middle Ages was united just as the sleepers in a vault are united in the tranquility of death. It was like listening at the door of sepulchre—hush! for all is peace within. Enter, and all is uniform—uniformly dead—black frieze and rottenness. A sepulchre of souls. The Church of the early centuries was united as scorpions are united when one glass-receiver holds them and leaves room to fret about, and strike their stings into one another. There was uniformity, but not unity; for the world did not believe. The world saw it, and was hardened; the world saw it, and blasphemed. To preserve the unity of the Church, they excommunicated or burned alive those who thought or believed for themselves, till faith had well nigh perished from the earth. The Church became so Catholic that there was no place found for the Gospel. The union of coercion, or the union which, as the first term of communion takes away your right of private judgment, is not the union contemplated by Him, the first law of whose kingdom is love, and the first gift of whose spirit is life.

Again: For the sake of unity it is not needful to surrender an iota of the truth, or yield one conscientious conviction, so long as it remains conscientious. It is very common with those who misunderstand the matter to say: "Come, now, you and I do not think exactly alike; perhaps we are both right—and it is likely we are both wrong. But it is a point of no moment; what would you say to throw it overboard altogether, and give ourselves no more concern about it?" which, in many cases, it might be a very just expression: "You may intend this for liberality, but to me it sounds like latitudinarianism. I believe that I found this truth in the Bible, and if so, it is one of the truths of God. I dare not cast it overboard; and I shall be very sorry if having it on board deprives me of your company. If it be so offensive to you that you must needs sail in a separate ship, I hope we shall not hoist hostile flags. Be as neither of us holds it vital, might we not agree to differ regarding it; and, as we grow in knowledge and in grace, may we not find that the Lord will reveal even this unto us. Wherever souls are joined to the Lord Jesus and his image is visible upon them, there is actual unity of the most important kind. Were this actual unity more frequently the foundation of a practical unity, the world would soon be more doctrinal unity and Christiane. But it is an unhallowed mode of procuring practical unity to purchase it at the price of truth. As a compromise of truth cannot lead to unity, so "truth in love" has bred no schism. ["Dew of Hermon," Hamilton.

RELIGION IN BUSINESS.

If you wish to test the quality of a man's religion, do not follow him to church, who he must put on the garment of pious ostentance; but visit him at his store, shop, or counting-room, and mark the spirit by which he is influenced in his dealings. If he regard merely his own interests, and, in securing his own, invades the rights of his neighbor, you need not fear the imputation of unprofitableness, if you pronounce that man no true follower of Him, who said, "All things whatsoever you would that men would do unto you, do ye even so to them." There is a sad want of Christianity in business. Professors seem to think their religion too pure a thing to be brought down into the sphere of business, lest it soil its garments, or be assailed by ridicule. But a man's religion is not worth the name, if it be not able to stand the ordeal of his business life; if it do not accompany him in his daily avocations, and lead him to sacrifice his wordly loves and lusts to gain whenever they would prompt him to forget the good of his follow-man while in the ardent pursuit of his own interests.

The author of the following we do not know; but it embodies views on this subject by which men in business, who profess to be governed by Christian principles, would do well to compare themselves:

"Each one is bound to look not only to the things of himself but also on those of another. God is love—the law is unalterable. In your neighbor you are bound to see your brother, whose feelings, whose reputation, whose property, whose family, are all as sacred as your own. 'Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth,' is a precept weightier than all the dicta of the exchange. It is highly convenient to evade this precept by assuring yourself that every man will look to his own interests, and therefore you may just gripe all that you will let you gripe. But in doing so, you sink yourself down to the level of a 'scramble.' Even amongst men who meet on equal terms in commerce on your principle is not a system of mutual services, but a system of mutual supplanting. But among men who meet on unequal terms, that principle will bear out in cruel oppression. A clothmaker sells to a cloth merchant a parcel of cloth. In some manner, or something else, tells the merchant that he is under necessity of finding money. He asks a fair price. According to the judgment of the merchant, that price will afford the maker a fair remuneration, or would afford him a fair profit; but he knows or guesses that money happens to be, at the moment, of exorbitant value to his neighbor. On this occasion he refuses the fair price and offers one that would double his own profit. The other hesitates, reasons, entreats—but at last reluctantly yields. The merchant exults in a good bargain!—is that what you call it? Why, the thing you have done is neither more or less than taking advantage of your neighbor's necessity to deprive him of the just reward of his labor, and to put it in your own pocket.

"'But I am not bound to look after another man's interest.' Yes, you are; God has bound you to it. He has bound all other men to do the same to you. Had you done your duty, two hearts would have been the better, but now two hearts are worse. Yours is contracting around its ill-gotten profits; his is soured and distrustful." LICENSE, OR NO LICENSE.—In several towns and parishes in the upper part of the State, says the East Feliciana Whig, a vote has been taken upon this question, which has uniformly resulted in favor of the "No License" ticket. A similar movement is proposed here, and it will be a deep source of gratification to obroniele a like result, whenever the question is tested. All good citizens should take an active part in procuring so salutary a reform, the benefits to arise from which are incalculable.

SEEING GOETHE.—Celebrated men are often much annoyed by the visits of strangers. A student once called at Goethe's house, and requested to see him. Goethe, contrary to his usual custom, consented to be seen; and after the student had waited a short time in the ante-chamber, he appeared, and, without speaking, took a chair, and seated himself in the middle of the room. The student, far from being embarrassed by this unexpected proceeding, took a lighted wax candle in his hand, and, walking round the poet, deliberately viewed him on all sides; then, setting down the candle, drew out his purse, and, taking from it a small piece of silver, put it on the table, and went away without speaking a word.

A torchlight procession paraded many of the principal streets in Buffalo on the 7th inst., in commemoration of the veto of the prohibitory liquor law. The Courier says: "Not the least of the peculiarities of the procession was the spectacle of 'a very large, fat woman,' holding a long torch over her shoulder, and leading a little boy with each hand."

A COSTLY BUSINESS.—A man named Strong made use of seven profane oaths in a magistrates office at Wilmington, Del., a few days ago, for each of which he was fined fifty cents. This so enraged him that he gave his tongue such loose reign it could not be stopped, when the Justice put on another fine of $10, and ordered him to be committed. Finding it to be a rather costly business, he "knocked under," paid the fines, and was released.

DIED—On the 11th Nov., 1853, TABITHA MASENGIL, wife of Solomon Masengil, at the residence of her son, John Masengil, in Autauga county, Ala., where she had lived for many years. She was born in Virginia, on the 20th of May, 1768; thence moved to Washington County, Tenn., where she married. In the year 1808 she joined the M. E. Church. She moved to Madison county, and thence, after the death of her husband, in 1830, to Autaugn county, where she spent the closing of her life in great peace. During her sickness some clouds gathered over her mind; but she still trusted in God. We might say a great deal of this pious mother; for, indeed, she a prencher's friend indeed. She was loved most by those who knew most of her.

Let her surviving friends take fresh courage and try to meet her in Heaven.

BOARD OF ASSISTANT ALDERMEN.—This Board held its regular meeting last evening, Col. Bell in the chair and 19 members present. The minutes of the preceding meeting were read and approved, and a message from the Mayor was read, informing the Board that the ordinances in relation to the subscription by the city to the stock of the Jackson and Opelousas Railroad had been accepted by the directors of the respective companies; also transmitting the annual report of the Warden of the Workhouse, making the following exhibit: Disbursements of the year ending April 12, 1854, $25,—; receipts, $22,985; balance, $728 3. A printed circular, in regard to the American Fire Alarm Telegraph, was also enclosed, and the Mayor recommended it to the notice of the Board; a letter from the Mayor of Cincinnati, in relation to the Steam Fire Engine of that city, was accompanied the message. These documents were referred to their appropriate Committees.

A communication from the Comptroller, announcing the adjudication of several contracts, was read and disposed of.

A lengthly communication from the City Surveyor, in regard to grading and drainage in the various parts of the city, was read and referred to the Committee on Streets and Landings.

A communication from the Street Commissioner, in relation to certain paving contracts having, repairing wooden bridges, lighting lamps, etc., was read and referred to the Committee on Streets and Landings.

Numerous petitions were then read and referred to their appropriate committees. Among the petitions, was one from a number of citizens residing in rear part of the Fourth District, asking the Council to take some measures to protect their portion of the city from the contemplated overflowe to which it is subject. Referred to the Committee on Streets and Landings.

A remonstrance against the Bread ordinance was passed by the Council was read and referred to the Committee on Claims. The document was signed by a large number of bakers, and protested strongly against some of the provisions of said ordinance.

The Committee on Streets and Landings submitted a report in regard to sundry matters of improvement in different portions of the city. Report accepted.

The Committee on Police reported that the police force of the city could be with safety reduced so far as to effect a reduction of seventy thousand dollars per month in the expense of the police department, provided the right number of men be employed therein.

The Committee also submitted an ordinance providing that the police of the city shall hereafter consist of four captains, four lieutenants, seven sergeants and two hundred and eighty-four privates, to be divided as follows: One captain and one lieutenant in each District; in the five sergeants and one hundred and twenty men in the Second, four sergeants and ninety-two men; in the Third, three sergeants and seventy-two men; in the Fourth, two sergeants and twenty-seven men. The ordinance provides that all other offices in the police department shall be abolished. After some discussion and amendment the ordinance was adopted.

The Committee on Fire reported in favor of granting an extension of time to the contractor building an engine house for Fire Company No. 1.

The following resolution was then presented and adopted:

Resolved, That the Board of Aldermen do meet in the Place

[illegible]

Hard to Trouble.

A diminutive specimen of the genus homo, rejoicing in the compound appellation of Patrick Terrance McSwitcher, was placed in the dock of the Belfast police-office, on Wednesday week, charged by No. 54, with annoying the public by his disorderly conduct, and singing songs in an [illegible] manner in Hercules place on the [illegible] from the outward [illegible] row," in which he had [illegible] second best, for besides [illegible] on his face, his right [illegible] totally encircled [illegible] and purple tints, [illegible] the colors of the rainbow, [illegible] war," such a barba[illegible] comb, that must be ranked [illegible] Why, in all sober se[illegible] anything like justice, it [illegible] with cases of the third vari[illegible] the rules of Dr. Hutton. It [illegible], nor your Grecian, nor [illegible] leg, nor your sharp, [illegible] your peg, nor your sock, nor [illegible] own original style, just as if, [illegible] Prometheus had tried [illegible] second time when moulding this [illegible] man of clay." It was of a bright fiery [illegible], having small blue spots adorning [illegible] extremity, and puffed up a la pincushion [illegible] astonishing dimensions, as if proud that its own[illegible] was one of the "cauld stock." Moreover, it [illegible] seemed to revolting from the dictates of prudence [illegible] it had quietly stepped aside from its natural [illegible] position to avoid collision with post or wall, [illegible] and had taken up its residence on the "larboard" side of his cheek, and was determined [illegible] to remain there, at least till the danger of its [illegible] being broken had passed away. This, undoubtedly, was a very prudent course. Then the dress of the prisoner was unique, as his toute ensemble was attractive. He was encased in about three-tenths of an old black coat entirely minus the collar, a red waistcoat, not [illegible] bered with buttons, but tightly laced with twine, and a pair of trousers that had once been black, but now variegated with iron colored spots. In one of the legs there was a deep rent, which, as he walked, allowed the unrestrained garment to flap at pleasure, giving one half of him the appearance of a sort of winged Mercury; whilst the other presented a calm and dignified rigidity. Altogether the prisoner was a rara avis in terris, and indeed he seemed to know it.

The constable having stated his charge, the prisoner was asked what he had to say, and with the utmost coolness, and amidst the irrepressible merriment of the court, he replied in the following pompous style, which was sadly out of keeping with what his external appearance seemed to indicate:

Your Worship' (bowing)—Not having had the pleasure of a previous acquaintance, you no doubt evince a little curiosity, as a gentleman naturally would, on being thus so abruptly and informally brought in contact with another—(laughter)—to know who and what I am; but before I enter into particulars, allow me to apologise for reluctantly appearing before you this morning with such an apparent disregard to the duties of the toilet (surveying himself.) Ha, ha, ha! (Great laughter.)

Bench—Apologies, sir, from "gentlemen" of your station, are quite superfluous; and as to the question of curiosity, I assure you I evince not the least. (Laughter.)

Bench—But who are you, then?

Prisoner—Patrick Terrance M'Switcher, the cosmopolitan bard, or non-pensioned laureate, sir, at your service (bowing,) whose reputation is more extensive than his resources—(laughter)—and whose living inspirations, if I err not, will attain a higher seat in immortality than the poor clay which poured them forth. (Continued laughter.)

Bench—May I ask, what works have you published?

Prisoner—My published effusions, sir, are chiefly confined to ballads of the Alexandrian order, the most popular of which are, "Whew! your bowls to glory," and "Molly but you're long coming"—(bursts of laughter)—both of which I have been informed have been translated into the Scandinavian, Double Dutch, and vernacular. (Laughter.) I have a variety of manuscript poems, ballads, etc., but they are intended to be brought out posthumously. (Loud laughter.) I may therefore well exclaim with the satirist of old—or with the more amorous country man—

"Exegi monumentum perennius ære"

"Jamque opus perfici—
[illegible] picturesque erit indelibile nostrum."

Bench—Oh, you know something about Latin, I perceive?

Prisoner—(striking his beard)—Rather. (Laughter.)

Bench—But you cannot be permitted to annoy the public by bawling in the streets.

Prisoner—I was singing, not bawling, and only doing that in the high way which many of my contemporaries—particularly Moore and Wordsworth—still do in their garrets. (Loud Laughter.) May I be permitted to interrogate the constable?

Bench—Certainly.

The constable was then called upon the table, and the prisoner, in the most indicrous manner imaginable, drew himself up to his full height (about five feet four inches) to question him.

Prisoner (with a view to a kimbo)—Turn round, sir, and behold the man whom the resiliency of your conscience is endeavoring to immolate! (Laughter.) Is that so?

Constable (astonished)—I don't know what you mean.

Prisoner—Precisely: in that case, then, you must be grossly ignorant, ha, ha, ha! eh?

Constable (laughing)—May be not so much as you think.

Prisoner—Well, then, let us see. May I ask have you ever studied human nature, if so, whether practically or metaphysically! (Laughter.)

Constable (hesitatingly)—Metterfiscally! (Loud laughter.)

Prisoner—What?—eh?—Metterfiscally, you said? O learned functionary! your knowledge, I perceive, of human nature is co-extensive with the profundity of your sequirements in Metterfisics. (Great laughter.)

Constable—You are humboggin' me now. With all your larnin' may be I'm as cute as you. You are askin' unfair questions. They have no thing to do with the case.

Prisoner—Come, answer me again? you say I was singing in the streets; what were the peculiar sensations you first experienced when the forthcoming passages spirated upon the tympanum of your auricular organ? (Loud bursts of laughter.)

Constable (successfully)—All I know about you is, that you're a common ballad singer, and the most troublesome about Smithfield. (Continued laughter.)

Prisoner—Go down, sir! (Laughter.)

Bench (to prisoner)—You must be imprisoned forty-eight hours in the House of Correction.

Prisoner—Would your Worship favor me with the sentence of transportation, and I'll carry a letter to that constable's father and brother? (Great laughter.)

Bench—I assure him. [Belfast Chronicle.

THOMAS CAMPBELL THE POET.—There is a truculent irony, and irony well deserved, in the following passage from "Sam Slick," the nom-de-plume of Judge Haliburton. It sets forth, with wonderful force, the indifference of the English Government to the merits of one of her greatest poets during his life-time—the author of "The Pleasures of Hope," "Gertrude of Wyoming," "The Battle of the Baltic," "Hohenlinden," and that sublimest of Christian poems, "The Last Man," in perusing which, the most indifferent reader can not choose but feel that his immortality is reassured to him:

"I guess when Campbell writ 'The Mariners of England,' that will live till the British sailors get whipped by us so they will be ashamed to sing it, he thought himself great shakes: heavens and airth! he warn't half so big as Tom Thumb; he was just nothin'. But let some foreign hussey, whose skin ain't clear, and whose character ain't clear an' who ain't nothin' clear about her but her voice, let her come and sing that splendid song that puts more ginger into sailors than grog or prize-money on anythin', and lord! all the old Admirals, and flag-officers and yacht-men and others that do understand, and all the lords, and ladies, and princes that don't understand where the springs are in that song that touch the chords of the heart, all on 'em will come and worship a'most; and some young duke or another will fancy he is a young Jupiter, and come down in a shower of gold a'most for her, while the poet has 'The Pleasures of Hope' to feed on. Oh! I envy him, glorious man, I envy him his great reward; it was worth seventy years of 'hope' that funoral. Ah! poor Campbell! he was a poet, a beautiful poet! He know'd about the world of imagination, and the realms of fancy; but he didn't know nothin' at all about this world of our'n, or of the realm of England, or he never would have talked about the 'Pleasures of Hope,' for an author. Lord bless you! let a dancin' gal come to the opera, jump six foot high, 'light on one toe, hold up the other so high you can see her stays a'most, and then spin round like a daddy-longlegs that's got one foot caught in a taller candle, and go spinnin' round arter that fashion for ten minits, it will touch Peel's heart in a jiffy. Let some old General or Admiral do something or another that only requires the courage of a bull, and no sense, and they give him a pension and right off the reel, make him a peer. Lee sons old field-officer's wife go follerin' the army away back in Indgy further than is safe or right for a woman to go, git taken pris'ner, give a herrid sight of trouble to the army to git her back; and for this great service to the nation she gits a pension of fifo hundred pounds a year. But let some misfortunate devil of an author do—what only one man in a century can, to save his soul alive, write a book that will live—a thing that does show the perfection of human kind, and what do they do hers? Let his body live on the 'Pleasures of Hope,' all the days of his life, and his name live afterward on a cold white marble in Westminster Abbey. They be hanged—the whole hilin' of 'em—them paltry and their trumpery procession too, and their paltry patronage of standing by a grave and saying, 'Poor Campbell!' who the devil cares for a monument, that actilly deserves one? He has built one that will live when that are old abbey crumbles down, and when them that thought they was honorin' him are dead and forgotten; his monument was built by his own brains and his own hands, and the inscription, ain't written in Latin nor Greek, nor any other dead language, nother, but in a livin' language; and one too that will never die out now, seein' our great nation uses it; and here it is:

'THE PLEASURES OF HOPE, BY THOMAS CAMPBELL.'

That such a man as Campbell should have been suffered to live in poverty and fade away like a shadow, and only crowned at last with an unsubstantial abbey show-funeral, is a reflection upon the English Government which it will take many years to obliterate. In fact, it never can be obliterated while his sublime national lyrics, on sea and on shore, shall stir the heart of the nation as with the "clear silver tone of a trumpet-call to action."

AUTHORS AND BOOKS.—We have sometimes amused ourselves by conjecturing, had the history of human genius run differently—had all men of that class been as wise and prudent and good as too many of them have been improvident, foolish and deprared—had we a virtuous Burns, a pure Byron, a Goldsmith with common sense, a Coleridge with self-control, and a Poe with sobriety—what a different world it had been; what each of these surpassing spirits might have done to advance, refine and purify society; what a host of "minor prophets" had been found among the array of the poets of our own country! For more than the influence of kings, or rulers, or statesmen, or clergymen—though it were multiplied tenfold—is that of the "Makers" whose winged words pass through all lands, tingle in all ears, touch all hearts, and in all circumstances are remembered and come humming around us—in the hours of labor, in the intervals of business, in trouble, and sorrow, and sickness, and on the bed of death itself; who enjoy, in fact, a kind of omelpresence—whose thoughts have over us the threefold grasp of beauty, language, and music—and to whom at times "all power is given" in the "dreamlit trance" of their genius, to move our beings to their foundations, and to make us better or worse, lower or higher men, according to their pleasure. Yet true it is, and pitiful as true, that these "makers"—themselves made of the finest clay—have often been "marred," and that the history of poets is one of the saddest and most humbling in the records of the world—sad and humbling especially because the poet is ever seen side-by-side with his own ideal, that graven image of himself he has set up with his own hands, and his failure or fall are judged accordingly. There is considerable truth in the remark made by poor Cowper. He says in his correspondence: "I have lately finished eight volumes of Johnson's Lives of the Poets; in all that number I observe but one man whose mind seems to have the slightest tincture of religion, and he was hardly in his senses. His name was Collins. But from the lives of all the rest there is but one inference to be drawn; that poets were a very worthless, wicked set of people." This is certainly too harsh, since these lives include the names of Addison, Watts, Young, and Milton; but it contains a portion of truth. Poets, as a tribe, have been rather a worthless, wicked set of people. [London Literary Journal.

GERMAN LOVERS.—"The universal prudery," says Mr. Bruce in his Home Life in Germany, "which so hampers a man in America, and which makes him ignore half the facts of life, for fear of treading on some unknown delicate sensibility, is never seen in European circles. It is boldly assumed, what every one knows to be a fact, that both sexes are equally aware of a great variety of things; and where the allusion is natural, no one troubles himself about it. There were in our company this evening two who were invited as betrothed, and I was very much struck with their manner towards one another. I think in an Anglo-Saxon company the fact would have been dropped out of view as much as possible, and certainly the slightest expression of their feelings would have been dreaded by the parties. But here, there was the whole evening an unconscious, beautiful expression of affection and confidence, which really, I think, gladdened the whole company. Love seemed to speak out as naturally from their tones, and glance, and manner, as friendly feeling does with us. Nothing else would have seemed in place. It was above criticism, above surprise even, though if any other of the young men were bachelors like myself, they retired with a sufficiently vivid appreciation of the ways of bachelordom. I have often observed this unnaturalness of expression among the Germans. It is more apparent in the families, of course. There are not in all my memories, pictures more warm and glowing as of those families in North Germany; families where the look and language were not blurred by that everlasting formalism, and coldness, and selfishness, which hange over our households; where love was without dissimulation, neither worn for duty nor worn for effect; where mutual kindness and self-sacrifice and affection had so long been, that the very air and aspect seemed to welcome and woo the stranger."

The frosts have been so severe in Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi and some parts of Louisiana, as to materially damage the fruit crops and cut down the cotton so that it will have to be again planted. The damage to most kinds of vegetables is severe.

In an Irish provincial paper is the following singular notice: "Whereas Patrick O'Connor lately left my lodgings, this is to give notice that if he does not return immediately and pay for the same, he will be advertised!"

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.—I went one night to see a comedy. The chief actor was a favorite one, and the theatre, a small provincial one, was very crowded. The curtain drew up, and amid a burst of applause the hero of the piece made his appearance. He had hardly said twenty words when it struck me that something strange was the matter with him. The play was a boisterous comedy of the old school, and required considerable spirit and vivacity on the part of the actors to sustain it properly; but in this man there was none, he walked and talked like a person in a dream; his best points he passed over without appearing to perceive them; and altogether appeared unfit for the part. His smile was ghastly and his laugh hollow and unnatural; and frequently he would stop suddenly in his speech, and let his eyes wander vacantly over the audience. Even when in his character of a silly husband, he had to allow himself to be kicked around the stage by the young rake of the comedy, and afterwards to behold that careless individual making love to his wife and eating his supper while he was shut up in a closet from which he could not emerge, his contortions of ludicrous wrath, which had never before failed to call down plenty of applause were now such dismal attempts to portray the passion, that hisses were audible in various parts of the house.

The audience were fairly out of temper, and several inquisitive individuals were particular in their inquiries as to the extent of the potations he had indulged in that evening. A storm of sibilation and abuse now fell around the ears of the devoted actor; and not content with verbal insult, orange peel and apple flew upon the stage. He stopped and turned round to the shouting crowd. I never saw such misery in human countenances. His face was worn and haggard, and large tears rolled down his painted cheeks. I saw his lips quiver with inward agony—I saw his bosom heave with convulsions and suppressed emotion, and his whole mien betokened such depth of anguish and distress that the most ruthless heart must have throbbed with pity. The audience was moved, and by degrees the clamor of invective subsided into solemn silence, while he stood near the footlights, a picture of dejection.

When all was calm, he spoke, and in a voice broken with sobs that seemed to rend his bosom, proceeded to offer this little explanation:

"Ladies and gentlemen," said he, "though in my acting to-night, I am conscious of meriting your displeasure, in one thing you do me wrong. I am not intoxicated. Emotion alone and that of the most painful kind, has caused me to fulfill my part so badly—my wife died but a few short hours ago, and I left her side to fill my unavoidable engagement here. I have not pleased you; forgive me. I lored her, grieved for her, and if misery and anguish can excuse a fault, I bear my apology—here!"

He placed his hand upon his heart, and stopped, and a burst of tears relieved his momentary paroxysm and grief. The audience were thoroughly affected, and an honest burst of sympathy made the wall tremble. Women wept loudly, and strong men wept silently; and during the remainder of the evening his performance was scarcely audible through the storm of applause by which the crowd sought to soothe the poor fellow's wounded feelings. There was something very melancholly in the thought of that wretched man's coming from the bed of death to don gay attire and utter studied witticism for the amusement of a crowd, not one of whom dreamed of the anguish that lay festering upon the painted cheek and stage smile.

And in the great theatre of life, how many are there around us like that poor actor, smiling gaily at the multitude, while at home lies some mystery of sorrow whose shadow is ever present with them in busy places, and in solitude revels upon hearts like a ghoul among the tombs.

WHAT IS THE HARDEST MODE TO DIE?—To be shot dead is one of the easiest modes of terminating life; yet rapid as it is, the body has leisure to feel and reflect. On the first attempt by one of the frantic adherents of Spain to assassinate William, Prince of Orange, who took the lead in the revolt of the Netherlands, the ball passed through the bones of the face and brought him to the ground. In the instant that preceded stupefaction, he was able to frame the notion that the ceiling of the room had fallen and crushed him.

The cannon shot which plunged into the brain of Charles XII. did not prevent him from seizing his sword by the hilt. The idea of an attack, the necessity for defense, was impressed on him by a blow which we should have supposed too tremendous to leave an interval for thought. But it by no means follows that the infliction of fatal violence is accomplished by a pang. From what is known of the first effects of gunshot wounds, it is probable that the impression is rather stunning than acute. Unless death be immediate, the pain is as varied as the nature of the injuries, and these are past counting up.

But there is nothing singular in the dying sensation, though Lord Byron remarked the physiological peculiarity, that the expression is invariably that of laughter, while in death from a stab, the countenance reflects the traits of natural character, of geetleness or ferocity, to the last breath.

Some of these cases are of interest, to show with what slight disturbance live may go under a mortal wound, till it finally comes to a sudden stop. A foot soldier at Waterloo, pierced by a musket ball in the hip, begged water of a trooper who chanced to possess a canteen of beer. The wounded man drank, returned his heartiest thanks, mentioned that his regiment was nearly exterminated, and having proceeded a dozen yards on his way to the rear, fell to the earth, and with one convulsive movement of his limbs concluded his career. "Yet his voice," says the trooper, who himself tells the story, "gargled correctly the smallest sign of weakness."

Captain Basil Hall, who in his early youth was present at the battle of Corunna, has signaled out, from the confusion which consigns to oblivion the woes and gallantry of war, another instance, extremely similar, which occurred on that occasion. An old officer, who was shot in the head, arrived pale and faint at the temporary hospital, and begged the surgeon to look at his wound, which was pronounced mortal. "Indeed, I feared so," he responded with interpeded utterance," and yet I should like very much to live a little longer, if it were possible." He laid his sword upon a stone at his side. "as gently," says Hall, "as if his steel had been turned to glass," and almost immediately sank dead upon the turf. [Quarterly Review.

HOW TO WASH LACE.—The following mode of washing laces we find in an exchange, and republish for the benefit of our fair readers:

The difficulty of getting lace washed right, especially out of a great city, is very great. Every lady, therefore, should know how to wash her own thread laces. If any fair reader is ignorant of this art we can teach her in a very few words. Let her first rip off the lace, carefully pick out the lose bits of thread, and roll the lace very smoothly and securely round a clean black bottle previously covered with old white linen, sewed tightly on. Tack each end of the lace with a needle and thread to keep it smooth; and be careful in wrapping not to crumple or fold in any of the scallops or pearlings.

After it is on the bottle take some of the best sweet oil, and with a clean sponge wet the lace thoroughly to the inmost folds. Have ready in a wash-kettle, a strong cold lather of clear water and white Castile soap. Fill the bottle with cold water to prevent its bursting, cork it well and stand it upright in the suds, with a string round the neck secured to the ears or handle of the kettle, to prevent its knocking about and breaking while over the fire. Let it boil in the suds for an hour or more, till the lace is clean and white all through. Drain off the suds, and dry it on the bottle in the sun. When dry, remove the lace from the bottle and roll it round a wide ribbon block; or lay it in long folds, place it within a sheet of smooth white paper, and press in a large book for a few days.

GREAT CROW HUNT IN TENNESSEE.—The citizens of Bedford county, Tenn., finding themselves grievously afflicted with crows, held a meeting and fixed upon a great "crow huet." The plan adopted was, that any person wishing to enter the huet could do so by paying one dollar or more. The time for the hunt was to be from the first Monday in December to the last Saturday in March. And the fund raised as above was to be apportioned, to the person producing the greatest number of scalps—upper bill for scalp—one-fifth of the whole fund paid in; to the person producing the next highest number, one-sixth of the remainder; to the next highest, one-seventh, etc. 12,691 scalps were taken, and $283 awarded. The largest number taken by one man was, G. J. Shrivel, who killed 4321, and received $96 in prize money.

THE GREAT FIRE AT JACKSONVILLE, FLA.—The fire at Jacksonville on the 2d inst., which we have before noticed, originated in the hay shed of S. N. Williams, and before it ceased seventy buildings were entirely destroyed, including the two printing offices—those of the News and the Republican. Of the houses burned twenty-three were stores, rated as follows: F Waver & Co., provisions; C D Oak and William Grothe, jewelers; S N Williams, grocer; J P Sanderson, dry goods and provision; Bloodgood & Howse, do; H Timanus, do; T Hartridge, do; J Moodo, dry goods; J Hanham, grocer; Mr Hernandez, tobacconist; C DeWall, auctioneer; L Capella, fruit store; J Santo, do; A M Reed, dry goods and provisions; M Keil, do; A H Hossey, grocer, Mr Moore, fruit store; J L Hogarth, tinner; Ambleer & Hoeg, dry goods and provisions; J L Ripley, clothing; J C Brown, fruit store; L B Ameriaon, dry goods; T McMillan, druggist; T G Myers, grocer; A C Acosta, fruit store; J D Howell, grocer; J Hernandez, tailor; C DeWaal, bakery; G Flagg, jeweler; H H Darby, tailor; C Poelting, boot and shoemaker; J Finnegan's office and L M Folsom's furniture store were also consumed; the law office of G W Call and G W Hawkles, and the office of F C Harrett, Notary Public, etc., in the Hyrns Block, were also destroyed, a portion only of their legal and official documents being saved; McRory's Insurance Agency office in the Semmis Block, also went by the board, together with a portion of his papers; the Custom-house, Mr McIntosh's law office, Capt Wiley's residence, J Hanham's store and dwelling, J Mode's clothing store, the elegant residence as also the law office of P Fraser, Esq., we note among other buildings destroyed. The loss by this calamity, it is thought, is not less than $200,000.

TREASURY CIRCULAR.—The Secretary of the Treasury has issued a circular of instructions intended to carry into effect the provisions of the warehousing act. The circular is in the spirit of the act, and enlarges the field for the transportation of goods in bond from one place to another, and will, therefore, much facilitate the distribution and diffusion of important goods through the interior portions of the country. In regulating the transportation of merchandise in bond from one port of entry to another port of entry or delivery, the circular provides that whatever mode of transportation may be adopted, if the port to which the merchandise is to be transported in bond be not more than three hundred miles distant, by the route proposed, from the port at which it is entered for transportation, thirty days will be allowed, but if the distance be more than three hundred miles, sixty days will be allowed for the transportation and delivery of the merchandise at its port of destination. But six months will be allowed for the transportation of merchandise in bond between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States around Cape Horn, and three months by other routes between those points. The period thus prescribed will be carefully inserted in each case in the transportation bond, should there be no delivery within the time thus prescribed and limited, the collector at the port to which the merchandise was entered for transportation will notify the collector at the port of withdrawal of the non-delivery, who will at once demand payment, or upon failure thereof, pass over the transportation bond to the United States District Attorney for suit, and the proper proceedings will be taken to enforce the forfeitures prescribed.

Some of the correspondence dates as far back as 1835, and comes down to the present time.

OPENING OF THE OHIO AND MISSISSIPPI RAILROAD.—The first section of the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad, to connect Cincinnati with St. Louis, was opened on the 4th inst., to Aurore, Ind., twenty-eight miles from Cincinnati. About one thousand invited guests were present on the occasion, which was celebrated by an excursion to Aurora, a dinner, speeches, etc. The length of the road, when completed, will be 326 miles, this being within twenty-six miles of an air line. The work on the road is progressing rapidly, and a great part of the road will be opened by the first of March next.

Thirty Thousand Sold in Thirty Days of the "OLD BREWERY," and the Five Hundred Thousand Fine Prints—By Ladies of the Mission. With Six Elegant Illustrations. Neatly Bound in Muslin, 75 cents; gilt, $1; Extra Gilt, $1 50.

A SECOND EDITION OF TEN THOUSAND IS PRINTING!

The extraordinary favor with which this all-absorbing work has been received by the united press and the public, has exhausted the enormous number first published in the space of thirty days. The splendid new type prepared with a second edition of 10,000 copies. The prevalence of fact becoming verified that 100,000 copies of this charming book will have been disposed of in less time than was consumed in selling the same number of Mrs. Stowe's famous fiction. Volumes could be filled with the commendations it has received from all sections and classes. We submit a few extracts to exhibit the unmistakable heartiness of this reception:

[From the Boston Daily Journal.]

"This great Missionary work portrays many living incidents, illustrating the remark that 'truth is stranger than fiction.' It is a work of deep interest. The profits arising therefrom are to be devoted to the support of the 'Ladies' Mission.'"

[From the New York Observer.]

"We have read this book with deep interest. It reminds the reader of a noble charity. Some of the narratives have a touching and thrilling interest. The volume is in contrast with the coarse and vile productions 'Hot Corn,' we were compelled recently to notice."

[From the Cleveland (Ohio) Herald.]

"The Old Brewery' bids fair to reach a circulation equal to that of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' It contains many a vivid and truthful picture of the misery, degradation, squalor, sin, and almost horrible wretchedness that exists in this plague spot."

[From the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.]

"They possess interest far surpassing that of any work of fiction that has been written on semi-fanciful sin. Whatever profits may arise from the sale of this book, will be applied to the support of the Ladies' Mission."

[From the Evangelist, N. Y. City.]

"These deeply interesting sketches are written with a singularly good pathos which will greatly adorn the subject. It is illustrated with effective engravings, and in style and appearance has everything to commend it."

[From the Reading (Pa.) Gazette.]

"The most intensely interesting narratives ever issued from the press. The real charm, the true value of the book, consists in the living truthfulness of every story it contains. The touching details will be found on its pages. It is a volume of rare merit for all to read."

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notoriety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded this has gained friends by every trial, confirmed benefit on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the Cherry Pectoral does not only as a general thing, but almost invariably cure the maladies for which it is employed.

As time makes these facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually became the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log-cabin of the American peasant to the palaces of European kings. Throughout this entire country, Cherry Pectoral is known as the best remedy extant for diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, Cherry Pectoral is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms-houses, Public Institutions and in domestic practice, as the surest remedy their attending physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases and for children it is safe, pleasant and effectual to cure. In fact, some of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from parents who have found it efficacious in cases particularly incidental to childhood.

The Cherry Pectoral is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it under his own eye, with invariable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.

We have endeavored here to furnish the community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should command itself to their confidence—a remedy at once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and countless trials proved itself to be; and trust by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of uniform strength to afford physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy, that will do for them all that medicine can do. ENGLISH CORRESPONDENCE.

[Correspondence of the N. O Christian Advocate.]

There can be little doubt that the Emperor of Russia is, in many respects, a great man. Physically, he is one of the largest specimens of humanity in Europe: politically, he is one of the mightiest sovereigns of two continents: and, morally, he is, as the secret correspondence between the Courts of St. Petersburg and London proves, one of the most consummate hypocrites in the world. It is impossible to read the documents which are just escaped from the strong boxes of the Foreign Office, and which are now airing themselves all over the globe, without being convinced that Nicholas has long indulged the ambitious visions of the infamous Empress Catherine, and that he imagined, a short time ago, that the period for their realization, in reference to Turkey, had almost arrived. The vineyard of the poor Turkish Naboth seemed fair and fertile in his eyes—it lay hard by the Southern gardens of the Czar—it was watered by a splendid stream, and adorned with a magnificent lake, which bore on its bosom many a rich argosy: and it was, therefore, perfectly natural that it should appear to Nicholas a very desirable acquisition. It would complete his estate in that direction, and it would form for him a garden of spices, a mine of wealth and a source of power. It certainly was encumbered with an owner who, like the Naboth of Bible history, had inherited it from a long line of ancestors, and who showed no disposition to part with it, even to the blandest persuader who coveted it. But, then, this owner was unfortunately ill, and labored under sundry internal and constitutional diseases, which had rendered him somewhat feeble and tottering. There was, nevertheless, a good deal of life in him: but, as "the wish is" sometimes "father to the thought," his friend Nicholas began to be fearful of his speedy death. He hinted at apoplexy, or some such sudden exit, and, as the old gentleman was supposed not to have made a will, or to have made it in such a manner as was hardly likely to hold good, he thought it kind to endeavor to supply this omission, and to secure some satisfactory distribution of property.

The old man happened to have an old friend of the name of Bull, who possessed a number of estates in different parts of the country; and one in particular, where he grew rice and other things, the highroad to which ran across one part of old Naboth's vineyard: and so Nicholas naturally thought that Mr. Bull would like that part of the property for his share; and in the hope of obtaining Bull's consent to his own appropriation of the part that best suited his taste, he began to be exceedingly kind and caressing, with a sort of steward by the name of Seymour, who had been sent to St Petersburg to transact some business with Nicholas relating to the estates of his master. He took him by the hand, and had him several times in his private office to talk with him. In these conversations he often mourned over the condition of Naboth; and, at length, proposed the scheme of appropriation before indicated. It is, however, much to be suspected that had he obtained the adhesion of Mr. Bull to his proposition, the life of Naboth would not have been very long, as probably one dose would have been administered secretly that would have raised such a commotion in his system as to have sent him—if not to the "tomb of the Capulets"—at least, to that of the Caliphs. This under-steward, however, was an honest man, and a shrewd one, and he communicated with the head stewards at home—and they were honorable men, too—and they replied that they hardly thought it right to arrange anything in anticipation of the death of their old friend; for, though his health was doubtless not so robust as it once had been; yet, that "crazy doors hung long," and, as he came of a patriarchal family, he might yet live at least a hundred years: and that should he exhibit desperate sympathies—and compel them to think of the future lot of his children—they would not make any arrangements without calling in at least two other friends, who had a great interest in Naboth, and discussing the question fairly and above board. So, they expressed their respect for Nicholas, and dropped the matter.

The last named gentleman was sorely vexed at his disappointment; but, as the vineyard of Naboth was just as desirable as ever, and he was just as determined to have it, he sent at once a number of armed bailiffs to occupy a corner of it, on which he held a sort of mortgage. Now, as it had been agreed that this mortgage should never be foreclosed, old Naboth fired up at this indignity and breach of faith; and he broke his pipe (for he was a great smoker) and took down his pistols and stuck them in his belt, and sharpened his sword, and declared he would allow no trespassers on his estate. John Bull and another fine fellow, of the name of Frog, patted him on the back and promised to send a number of men to see fair play, and, if necessary, to give a helping-hand; for, they considered the conduct of Nicholas as an infringement on the rights of property, and worthy of nobody save a robber. And they have fulfilled their promises; for, besides a multitude of men sent to the neighborhood of the coveted territory, Mr. Bull has dispatched many ships, under an old servant of the name of Charlie, to make Nicholas hear reason. It is supposed Charlie will succeed. His mode of reasoning is very powerful; his voice being loud, and his arguments so striking that even stone-walls have been unable to resist them, and so the matter stands at present.

Now, to descend from this allegorical style, we must express our conviction that the conduct of the British Government, in this affair, has been highly laudable. The penetration which Sir H. Seymour exhibited in detecting the designs of the Czar: the tact with which he conducted his share of a delicate and difficult conversation: the clearness with which he now-and-then threw in a telling shot, and the ability which pervades his communications to the Foreign Secretary; all entitle him to a foremost place in diplomacy, and point him out as a man able to do the State good service in his own profession. The dispatches of Lord John Russell and Lord Clarendon are calculated to ensure for them the confidence of the country, while some of the truths uttered by them could not fail to be distasteful to the Czar, as containing reflections on his honor. Above all, this correspondence must redound to the honor of Britain in the eyes of all impartial observers, while its effect must be unfavorable to the Czar, as revealing, viewed in the light afforded by his subsequent conduct, his craft, hypocrisy, and ambition.

We are not surprised at the sensation this publication has produced in Paris. It will serve to assure the French that they go to war joining hands, not only with a powerful, but honorable ally—an ally as incapable of mean concealment and selfish ambition as of military cowardice. For our part, the perusal of these documents has served to confirm us in the conviction, that we go into this struggle arrayed in the treble armor for just quarrel, and that we are offering the prayers of patriotism, as well as piety, when we invoke Heaven to "defend the right."

March 30, 1854.

PLAINS OF MAMRE, ABRAHAM, AND TOMB OF RACHEL.

Professor Upham, in the Congregationalist, gives the following interesting particulars of the Plains of Mamre, Abraham, and the Tomb of Rachel:

The plain of Mamre, at its north-western extremity, is, by the nearest path, two miles and a half or three miles from the village of Hebron. In reaching it we passed over a portion of the vine-bearing valley of Eshkol: and then, going up a gradually-ascending hight of land which was partitioned into small fields by terraces and walls of stone, and everywhere carefully cultivated, we came, as we passed its summit, into the elevated and beautiful plain where Abraham is said to have dwelt. It appeared to be a plain on a mountain, a beautiful place on earth, and yet expanding itself on such an elevated position that it seemed very near to Heaven. The plain, sinking in its centre into a narrow valley where the waters collect in the rainy season, runs in an easterly direction: and then, turning southwardly, appeared to me gradually to descend and to terminate in a level open space, which we had previously noticed to the south of, and in sight of Hebron. The tradition in relation to it is, that Abraham dwelt in the highest part of the plain: and we were conducted into a large square building, supposed to be of great antiquity, made of hewn stones of great size, which is shown as indicating the precise spot of his dwelling-place. But however this may have been, we could not doubt that we were in the region where he spent no small portion of his life. His hand had cultivated this soil; he had been seated beneath these oaks; he looked upon these heavens filled at night with the stars which he could not number—the bright emblems of his spiritual children in all ages and climes. It was here that he held that memorable conversation with God, when he pleaded so earnestly and eloquently for the wicked cities of the plain. Ten righteous men would have saved them, because Abraham, the friend of God, had asked it, but the ten were not there. The place of the "cities of the plain" is in full sight of the elevated plain of Mamre. In a direct line it is probably not more than twenty miles distant. With a mind filled with these great memories, I looked in that direction. My eye reached over the rocky hills of Judea, and over the dark sunken abyss which bounds them, and rested upon the mountains of Moab beyond. It was from the low level plain, overlooked by these hills and mountains, that the smoke ascended. It was in the sunlight of the morning, when we stood on this memorable place; and it was in the morning—early in the morning—that Abraham arose, and looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain, and beheld, and lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace.

In that deeply interesting hour of my life, amid such localities, and where the earth itself is the correspondence and the changeless mirror of Scriptural history, it was easy with that eye of the mind which makes past things present, to see that cloud still ascending dark, heavy, terrible; kindled and raised in a mighty pillar from the smoking abyss, by that great Being, whose name and nature are Love; and who, because he is love, was compelled, not more by his sense of justice than by the very necessities of his benevolent and loving nature, to terminate the terrible crimes, by terminating the existence of his own rebellious children.

And here I feel inclined to delay a moment in a remark or two upon the great patriarch. There are some men, whose thoughts and achievements, aided sometimes by the peculiarities of their position, have been such, that they may be said to fill the eye of nations; and not more when they are living, than when they are dead. They reappear and exist without cessation in the world's thought, which becomes so vivid and clear in its apprehension of them, that it illuminates the ancient night of ages, and restores the dead to life. And it makes but little difference, whether they are men of great ideas or men of great actions; though the life which they thus live in the locality, if I may so express it, of the human mind, is more distinct and impressive, if their ideas have found an expression and a confirmation in their own personal history. The patriarch Abraham was such a man: a man who knew the truth—a man who illustrated the truth by his deeds.

We find him in early life on the plains of Chaldea. It was there that he first tended his flocks. Whether it was by means of religious traditions communicated through his father Terah, or that God himself by a direct inspiration was the source of his great wisdom, it was at this early period that he became acquainted with some of those great religious truths, such as the unity of God and the relations of faith and love which ought to exist between God and man, which have always perplexed the best and most persevering efforts of mere human philosophy. In his journeyings from place to place, and from nation to nation, he went from Chaldea to Egypt, and from Egypt to Palestine—but always in accordance with the openings of Providence, and always guided and sustained by the great religious truth, that God exists, and that he is the friend and rewarder of all those who are willing to believe on him. He was emphatically the man of faith. It was faith which gave strength to his purpose; which imparted purity to his inward nature. His great mind saw intuitively, that the very idea of God imposes the obligation to believe. He had stood beneath the Chaldean stars: he had looked upon the broad Euphrates and the mighty Nile: he had crossed vast deserts and wildernesses: he had trod the majestic mountains of Palestine: and as he cast his illuminated eye around and above him, and perceived things in their greatness and in their relations, he felt deeply in his soul, that there is no middle ground between the true and the false: that the negation of God is the affirmation of chance: and that the affirmation of chance is the inauguration of insanity.

To accept God was a necessity. In accepting him, he accepted the faith which honors him. And on Mount Moriah, when he lifted the knife to plunge it into the beloved image of his own heart, he showed not only the truth of his own soul, but the truth and mighty power of a principle, which elevates and saves humanity, by bringing God and man into harmony. History is right, therefore, and honors the God who is the living and controlling power in the series of its own varied events, in taking such a man out of the common ranks of men, and in establishing him among the guides and teachers of the human race.

Leaving the plains of Mamre—a place so closely associated with this great and remarkable man—we regained in a short time the main road to Bethlehem and Jerusalem, passing at the distance of a mile and a half, the place called "Ain Simin," or the fountain of Simeon.

There is a large stone building here, erected apparently for military purposes: and in its neighborhood are said to be some very ancient tombs excavated in the rocks: but we had not time to stop and examine them. The fountain gushes out from the side of a small hill on the right of the road; and directly opposite is the plain, rendered memorable by a battle fought in 1192, between Richard of England and the Sultan Saladin, in which Richard was defeated and driven back to Askelon. Going on about two miles further, over rugged and rocky hills or along the edge of cultivated valleys, we came to the stupendous water reservoirs, called the pools of Solomon. We had passed them in our journey to Hebron, but stopped to examine them more particularly on our return. There are other great "pools" or water-reservoirs in other places, the erection of which is ascribed to Solomon. There are three in this place, rising one above another on the side of a hill, and supplied by water from heights still more elevated; the largest of which is nearly six hundred feet in length, by an average breadth of more than a hundred and fifty feet, and is fifty feet in depth. All of them are of solid masonry, and are coated with cement. They are entered by steps cut in the sides. The water, collected in the highest from the rocky eminences around, gushes from one to the other: and is then conducted by conduits under ground to the city of Jerusalem. I recollect in early life to have heard a person, whose faith in the Scriptures had been shaken, objecting to the statements made in the Bible of the great wealth and power of Solomon: but he had not been in Palestine; and had not seen the works and the remains of works, which furnish overwhelming evidence, not only of the riches and power, but of the science of that period.

Going a few miles further, we came to the city of Bethlehem, the birth-place of the Saviour. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us."

At two miles beyond Bethlehem we came to the tomb of Rachel, the wife of Jacob, who is said in the book of Genesis to have been "buried in the way to Ephruth, which is Bethlehem." A pillar was erected over her grave by Jacob. He was journeying with her from Bethel to Bethlehem at the time of her death. The pillow of Jacob has disappeared. The present tomb is a Saracenic work; but there is no difference of opinion as to the place where she was buried. The burial place of Rachel where the traveler naturally stops to indulge in the recollections connected with her touching story, is on the side and near the summit of a hill, furnishing a wide and beautiful prospect. And he naturally thinks of the village, with which her name is associated, in one of the sad and bloody passages of history. It is to the north-westward of her grave some three or four miles distant, that we find the village of Rama, to which reference is made in the second chapter of Matthew: "In Rama there was a voice heard, lamentation and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not."

Half-way between Bethlehem and Jerusalem we passed on our right the large Greek convent of Elias. It is on a hill. We did not stop to visit it. At a little distance from this convent, as we descended the hill toward Jerusalem, we came in sight of the Plain of Rephaim or Plain of the Giants. It was on this beautiful plain, which was waving as we passed it with fields of wheat, that David fought twice with the Philistines, who seem to have become alarmed on account of his increasing power, and who had come up here to attack him, after he had established himself in Jerusalem. The same night, crossing the deep rocky ravine called the valley of Hinnom, and then ascending the steep sides of the hill of Zion, we reached the city of Jerusalem after an absence of four days. We entered it at the tower of David, by the Bethlehem gate, which is also called the Jaffa gate.

THE LATE COL WM R. STUART

The following tribute to the memory of a valued citizen and exemplary Christian is copied from the Baltimore Patriot.

The life of a good man is a living lesson to his companions, and a heritage to be prized by those who come after him. Such was the life of Col. William R. Stuart. The author of this tribute to departed merit had the good fortune to know him from his childhood to his grave, and, during most of the time, intimately. He was born in Kent county, Maryland, on the 20th of April, 1780, and died at the residence of his son, in New Orleans, on the 21st of August, 1853. His father, Dr. Alexander Stuart, was an ardent, active and useful officer in the Revolutionary Army of '76, and took with him, into his domestic circle, something of the soldier's habits of discipline. After completing his education at Washington College, Chestertown, the subject of this notice entered a counting-house in Baltimore, and industriously and faithfully performed the duties of his place. At an early age he married a most excellent and amiable lady, the daughter of the then late Capt. Charles Frazier, and grand-daughter of the late estimable Major John Dames, with whom she resided at the time of her marriage. The Major, in a short time, induced him to become an inmate of his house, and soon after surrendered to him the entire control of his valuable estate. His peculiar fitness for political life did not escape the notice of his fellow-citizens, and popular favor was the sure reward of his kind deportment and unblemished reputation. He was accordingly, on many occasions, elected to the Legislature from Kent, and also from Queen Ann's county; to the last of which he removed, and in which he passed the largest part of his days. During a Septennial term of five years, he was the President of that body with complete satisfaction to its members, amongst whom were gentlemen who have adorned some of the highest posts in the American Government. He subsequently held most responsible Executive appointments, and, it is believed, was never, in a single instance, the object of the slightest imputation as to malversion in office.

His faithfulness was the result of a higher and nobler principle than the fear or the favor of man. In early life he made profession of religion. His amiable wife, with a living exemplification of the beauty of holiness" continually present to her observation, also "chose that good part which could not be taken from her." Religion, with him, was not a profession which was satisfied by certain conventional compliances, as the proofs, not as all the proofs, of its existence. It was an inward, vital, active spring, whence issued incessantly living, perennial streams, that watered and cherished all the thoughts and intents of his heart, animated his soul with unbounded gratitude to his God, and with benevolence and charity to his fellow-men. In advanced life he was called to experience a reverse of fortune, not unusual to men who have more distinguished themselves by their generous and liberal kindness, than by a disposition to accumulate wealth. But, unlike many—alas, how large a proportion!—the loss of his property occasioned no diminution in the esteem of his personal friends, nor in the universal estimate of his honor and purity of character. His strict adherence and conformity to his religious professions during all his intercourse with the world, and amidst his exciting political occupations, had kept him prominent in the Methodist Church, to which he had attached himself; and on the occasion of its separation he was called to preside over the first session of the seceding portion of it. His beloved wife died in 1825, after living many years in the enjoyment and reciprocation of as large a share of conjugal affection as mortals may expect, unmixed with the little dissensions or bickerings which are too often allowed to disturb the smooth current of domestic harmony, or the more serious feuds which sometimes convert the nearest, and what should be the dearest relations of life into a condition of unceasing disquiet and wretchedness.

The writer of this has frequently been a visitor at his hospitable dwelling, when it was a most delightful privilege to unite in the morning and evening oblation of prayer and praise, and listen to the earnest and animated outpourings of joy and peace, in the sweet, swelling tones of a favorite hymn, appropriate to the opening or closing day, in which wife, children and servants united, with notes so cheerful, that life's woes or cares seemed strangers in that happy circle. Few men have more effectually made a pious state of mind habitually control and direct every action of life. He never appeared to forget that all things were ordered by unerring wisdom and mercy, and ever maintained a firm faith in the benevolent care of a God full of love to his creatures, even in his chastisements, and never doubted or feared the ultimate effect of his Master's dealings with him. The love of God was the especial attribute of the Deity on which he delighted to dwell—love to all—to every perishing sinner. The last letter he wrote, on the day previous to his sudden attack, concluded thus: "To our Heavenly Father I commend all my wants; may He bless you, and all relations and friends, and all and every soul on earth with peace, and joy, and hope, and faith above all, with love; for God is Love. It was an answer to an urgent appeal from his son to leave New Orleans, where the fatal fever was raging fearfully. But he said no, duty required him to remain, and his trust was in Him whom he served. To such a soul death could present no terror. It came as a messenger from his Father in Heaven to invite him to a perpetual feast of joy and love with saints and angels gone before. He asked no delay. He was robed in the wedding-garment, his loins girded and his feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel. His willing spirit enters the dark valley, but the rod and the staff are there to support and cheer him on his way, and the ministering angels to conduct him to that land of everlasting rest and peace where sorrow never comes, and where faith and hope are exchanged for blissful fruition.

ADMINISTERING DISCIPLINE.

According to this, St. Paul witnessed Church troubles and Church trials, neither more dignified nor less serious than some of this our day. Bishop Morris, whose biographical sketch of Rev. James Axley has already been drawn upon for our columns, furnishes to the Ladies's Repository the following also:

I never heard Brother Axley preach; but, according to popular fame, his pulpit performances were practical, forcible, and left a deep and abiding impression on the multitudes that thronged together to hear him. To this day we occasionally hear allusions made to a sermon he preached in the city of Baltimore, during the General Conference of 1820, of which he was a member. It must have been a potent sermon to be remembered so distinctly for a third of a century. I have heard, also, very frequent allusions to his pulpit performances in different parts of the Western country, where he had operated to good purpose as a traveling preacher, more particularly in Kentucky and Tennessee. But, perhaps, the effort which occasioned the most talk, and obtained the greatest notoriety, was the one said to have been made in his own section of country, and was commonly known as "Axley's Temperance Sermon," though not so designated by any pre-announcement. It should be known that East Tennessee in those days was regarded as a great country for producing peach-brandy, and for a free use of it; also, that the "New Lights" abounded there, familiarly called "Schismatics," and that Church-members who rendered themselves liable to a disciplinary process would occasionally go over to them, as a "city of refuge," where they felt safe from its restraints. With this preliminary, I proceed to recite a passage from the sermon, reminding the reader that my authority is not personal knowledge, but the verbal statement of a highly respectable Methodist minister, Rev. Dr. G., of Tennessee. I write it substantially as I heard it:

Text: "Alexander, the coppersmith, did me much evil: the Lord reward him according to his works." 2 Tim., iv, 14.

Paul was a traveling preacher, and a Bishop, I presume, or a Presiding Elder at least; for he traveled extensively, and had much to do, not only in regulating the societies, but also in sending the preachers here, there, and yonder. He was zealous, laborious, would not build on another man's foundation, but formed new circuits where Christ was not named: "so that, from Jerusalem and round about to Illyricum, he had fully preached the Gospel of Christ." One new place that he visited was very wicked—Sabbath-breaking, dancing, drinking, quarreling, fighting, swearing, etc., abounded; but the Word of the Lord took effect; there was a powerful stir among the people, and many precious souls were converted. Among the subjects of that work there was a certain noted character, Alexander by name, and a still-maker by trade; also, one Hymeneus, who was his partner in the business. Paul formed a new society, and appointed Brother Alexander class-leader. There was a great change in the place; the people left off their drinking, swearing, fighting, horse-racing, dancing, and all their wicked practices. The stills were worked up into bells and stew-kettles, and, thus applied to useful purposes. The settlement was orderly, the meetings were prosperous, and things went well among them for some time. But, one year they had a pleasant Spring; there was no late frost, and the peach-crop hit exactly. I do suppose, my brethren, that such a crop of peaches was never known before. The old folks ate all they could eat, the children ate all they could eat, the pigs ate all they could eat, and the sisters preserved all they could preserve, and still the limbs of the trees were bending and breaking. One Sunday, when the brethren met for worship, they gathered round outside the meeting-house, and got to talking about their worldly business—as you know people sometimes do, and it is a mighty bad practice—and one said to another: "Brother, how is the peach-crop with you this year?" "Oh," said he, "you never saw the like; they are rotting on the ground under the trees: I don't know what to do with them." "How would it do," said one, "to still them?" The peaches will go to waste, but the brandy will keep; and it is very good in certain cases, if not used to excess." "I should like to know," said a cute brother, "how you could make brandy without stills?" "That's nothing," replied one, for our class-leader, Brother Alexander, is as good a still-maker as need be, and Brother Hymeneus is another; and, rather than see the fruit wasted they would make us a few." The next camp-meeting heard on the subject was a hammering in the class-leader's shop; and soon the stills in every brother's orchard were smoking. When one called on another the bottle was brought out, with the remark: "I want you to taste my new brandy. I think it is pretty good." The guest, after tasting once, was urged to repeat, when, smacking his lips, he would reply: "Well, it is tolerable; but I wish you would come over and taste mine; I think mine is a little better." So they tasted and tasted, till many of them got about half drunk—or I don't know but three-quarters. In the very devil was raised among them—the society was all in an uproar, and Paul was sent for to come and settle the difficulty. At first it was difficult to find sober, disinterested ones enough to try the guilty, but finally he got his committee formed, and the first one he brought to account was Alexander, who pleaded "not guilty." He declared that he had not tasted, bought, sold, or distilled a drop of brandy. "But," said Paul, "you made the stills, otherwise there could have been no liquor made: and if no liquor, no one could have been intoxicated." So, they expelled him first, then Hymeneus next, and went on for a compliment, till the society was relieved of all still-makers, distillers, dram-sellers, and dram-drinkers, and peace was once more restored. Paul said: "Holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away, concerning faith have made shipwreck: of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander: whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme." Of course, they flew off the handle, and joined the Schismatics!

The "Home Mother"—"We must draw a line, say, a broad line between her and the frivolous butterfly at fashion, who flits from ball to opera and party, decked in rich robes, and followed by a train as hollow and heartless as herself—she who, forgetful of the holy tasks assigned her, neglects those who have been given in her charge, and leaves them to the care of hirelings, while she pursues her giddy round of amusements.

"Not so our home mother! blessings be on her head. The heart warms to see her in her daily routine of pleasant duties. How patiently she sits, day after day, shaping and sewing some article for use or adornment for her little flock! And how proud and pleased is each little recipient of her kindness! How the little face dimples with pleasure, and the bright eyes grow still brighter, as mamma decks them with her own hands in the new dress she has made! How much warmer and more comfortable they feel, if mamma wraps them up before they go to school! No one can her can warm the mits and overshoes, or tie the comforters around the necks.

"There is a peculiar charm about all she does—the precious mother. They could not sleep, nay, for that matter, she could not, if she failed to visit their chamber, and with her own soft hands arrange them comfortably before she slept. Her heart thrills with gratitude to her Creator, as she looks on those sweet blooming faces; and when their prayers are done, she imprints a good night kiss on each rosy little mouth. It may be, too, that a tear will start for one little nestling, laid in its chill narrow bed, for whom paternal care is no longer needed. It sleeps, though the sleet and snow descends, and the wild winter winds howl around its head. It needs no longer her tender care! A mightier arm enfolds it! It is at rest! She feels and knows that it is right, and bends meekly to the Hand that sped the shaft, and turns with a warmer love, if it be possible, to those little ones who are left her to love. How tenderly she guards them from every danger, and with what a strong, untiring love she watches by their bedside when they are ill! Blessing be on the gentle, loving home mother. Angels must look with love upon her acts. Her children shall rise up and call her blessed, and the memory of her kindly deeds will enfold her as a garment."

Anecdote of Washington.—One Reuben Rouzy, of Virginia, owed the General one thousand pounds. While President of the United States, one of his agents brought an action for the money, judgment was obtained, and execution issued against the body of the defendant, who was taken to jail. He had considerable landed estate, but this kind of property cannot be sold in Virginia, unless at the discretion of the owner. He had a large family, and for the sake of the children preferred lying in jail to selling his land. A friend hinted to him that probably Washington knew nothing of the proceeding, and that it will be well to send him a petition, with a statement of the circumstances. He did so, and the very next post from Philadelphia, after the arrival of his petition in that city, brought him an order for his immediate release, together with a full discharge, and a severe reprimand to the agent for having acted in such a manner. Poor Rouzy was consequently restored to his family, who had never laid down their heads at night without first presenting prayers to Heaven "for their beloved Washington." Providence smiled upon the labors of the grateful family, and in a few years Rouzy enjoyed the exquisite pleasure of being able to pay the money with interest to the truly great man. Washington reminded him that the debt was discharged, and the General, to avoid the pleasing importunity of the grateful Virginian, who could not be denied, accepted the money—only, however, to divide it among Rouzy's children, which he immediately did. [Old Colony Memorial.

Hanged While Drunk.—We read in the Gazette des Tribunaux: A young man about twenty-nine years of age arrived at Paris about a month ago, to seek a place, but as he was provided with a large sum of money, he resolved to indulge in debauchery until it should be spent. On Thursday evening he went to dine with some acquaintances, and remained drinking until four o'clock in the morning. He then returned to his hotel, to the Rue St. Honore, but was so drunk that he could hardly walk up stairs. Yesterday morning, a person called to see him, and was directed to his room, which was situated at the bottom of an isolated corridor. To his astonishment he found him hanging by the neck by his cravat, to the handle of the door. He, it appeared, in trying to open the door, had slipped, and his cravat, which he wore very loose, caught by the handle. The efforts he made to release himself, in his state of intoxication, were fruitless, and he remained hanging until he was completely strangled.

How to "Finish" a Daughter. For the refinement of this end, Punch gives the following directions:

1. Be always telling her how pretty she is.
2. Instil into her mind a proper love of dress.
3. Accustom her to so much pleasure, that she is never happy at home.
4. Allow her to read nothing but novels.
5. Teach her all the accomplishments but one of the utilities of life.
6. Keep her in the darkest ignorance of the mysteries of housekeeping.
7. By no means let her have the principle that it is vulgar to do anything for herself.
8. Let her alone the latter part of her life, and let her have her own mind.
9. And, lastly, having given her such an education as may fit her to be a clerk in the Treasury, upon £65 a year, or to an ensign that is going out to India;

Havana and its Defences.

There is no doubt, as has been asserted by a recent visitor, that the harbor of Havana is one of the best in the world, being deep enough for vessels of the largest class, and sufficiently capacious to accommodate a thousand ships. The entrance is by a channel three-quarters of a mile long, but so narrow that only a single vessel can enter at once, and fortified through the whole distance with platforms, works and artillery. The mouth of this channel is secured by two strong castles. That on the eastern side—called the Moro Castle—is built in the form of a triangle, fortified with bastions, and mounted with forty pieces of cannon, almost level with the water. On the opposite side of the channel is another strong fort, called the Punta, connected with the town, to the north. The city is situated on the western side of the harbor, and is surrounded by ramparts, bastions and ditches. Besides these fortifications, it is surmounted by works, all of them furnished with artillery, even to profusion. A square citadel—El Fuerte—stands in the northeast corner of the town. This work, also, has heavy cannon, and here the treasures of the Government are deposited. It was at the foot of the hill upon which this fort stands, that poor Crittenden and his party were shot and mutilated.

The Cabanas is a fortress situated on the south of the Moro, and directly opposite the city. It is, perhaps, the largest, as it certainly is one of the strongest fortifications in the world. It was rebuilt, enlarged and strengthened after its restoration by the British, at an expense so enormous, that when the cost of its construction was made known to the King of Spain, he honestly asked whether the walls were made of silver. This fort commands the whole harbor and city, and is hardly a musket shot distance from the Moro, with which it is connected by a subterraneous passage. Yet, notwithstanding the number and strength of these defences, the city of Havana has been besieged and taken, though not by "a single frigate" or any other mode of storming Gibraltar with a pocket pistol.

In 1762, during the war with Spain, the English under Lord Albemarle laid seige to Havana, and took it after a desperate assault. On the 6th of June of that year the British squadron, counting 250 vessels of all sizes, appeared off the coast. The Spaniards had mounted their fortresses with heavy guns, and made all necessary warlike preparations. They had in the forts of the city, of regular troops and militia, 27,316 men under arms. The priests and women were sent out of the city, and vast preparations were made to stand a siege by laying in ample supplies of provisions. They sunk three ships in the harbor's mouth to prevent the entrance of the British flag, and their fortresses were defended with great courage and valor.

The British land forces numbered 11,041 men of all arms; their loss was very considerable both by the climate and the desperate defence of the enemy. The Cabanas soon fell into the hands of the English, who approached from the land side, having landed the troops to the east of Havana. But it was not until 11 days of unwearied exertion, with a loss to the Spaniards of upwards of one thousand men, that the Moro was taken. With the Moro, 303 pieces of cannon, 11 mortars, and a large supply of small arms and ammunitions, fell into the hands of the English. Still, however, the Spaniards bravely defended the city; but the English, who could now turn their own cannon against them, demolished all their fortifications, and after some slight delay in negotiation, the city of Havana was taken possession of.

It was just two months and eight days from the date of the arrival of the expedition to the day the British took possession of the city. With the capital there was given up the whole territory annexed to it, extending 180 miles westward; so that this conquest was the most decisive of all that had taken place throughout the course of the war. It had besides all the effect of a naval victory. Nine ships of the line fell into the hands of the conquerors; three had been sunk in the harbor, and two, far advanced on the stocks, were destroyed. The loss to the Spaniards in ships of war, merchant ships, money, tobacco, and other articles of value, was estimated at £3,000,000 sterling. On the return of peace in 1763 Havana was restored to the Spaniards. The keys of the city were formally delivered up to the Conde de Ricla, on whom the government had been conferred on the 7th of July of that year, and the English garrison was embarked for Europe. Marriage by Proxy.—A correspondent of the National Intelligencer gives the following: "It is but recently that I became aware of the fact that marriages by proxy were allowable in the Old Dominion. A native son of Africa, called General, won the love of a colored lady, sporting the rural name of Milken Sally. A day was fixed for their wedding, the officiating clergyman being a colored gentleman, a slave on an adjoining plantation. Those who needed license had to go to his cabin. The eventful evening at length arrived—the guests were assembled, the groom has come, but the bride is missing. The venerable clergyman at length becomes impatient, and expresses his astonishment at Milken's absence, while the General, rising from his seat, thus delivers himself: 'Look here, brother Culliver, it is no use waiting for that darkey. I knows her like a book; she hang back after getting her de fire. I'se authorized to speak for her, so jes go ahead, jes the same as if she was here.' Old Culliver thought it a wise suggestion, and proceeded to unite them in the holy bonds of matrimony. When the General went over to Milken's cabin, sure enough, there she was fast asleep by the fire, and some of her wedding finery in her hand. She was terribly provoked to learn that her wedding had come off, and she was not there."

Extent of the Public Domain.—A report made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior shows that the public domain of the United States is of 1,391,180,826 acres, or 220,714,599 acres less than was estimated in a former report. This discrepancy occurs in consequence of the extent of the public lands in Oregon, Nebraska and the Indian territories being ascertained to be less than was supposed.

Voices of the Night; Voices of the Day; Benedictions of the Blessed Life. Jewett & Co.

These are the respective titles of three 12mo volumes, by the Rev. John Cummings, Minister of the Scottish National Church, Crown Court, Covent Garden, London.

"The Voices of the Night" and of "The Day" are companions; a third, "The Voices of the Dead" is to be added. The author remarks: "The Voices of the Night" relate more immediately to the Present; "The Voices of the Day" more directly to the Future.

The "Benedictions of the Blessed Life" is, as its title imports, a consideration of the blessings of experimental Christianity.

The materials of these books are evidently drawn, for the most part, from the pulpit studies and preparations of the author. Every chapter is occupied in the discussion of a text of Scripture. It is, indeed, a sermon, with such differences of adaptation as circumstances require.

A sermon proper, we would rather [illegible] preachment—in a good sense—is not publishable. The highest and best efforts of the pulpit cannot be put in type. That which would be excellent in a book, would be inferior and out of place in the pulpit, and vice versa. Perhaps our author was influenced by these considerations when, instead of giving three volumes of sermons, he took the materials of sermonizing, and moulded them after a model more suitable for the press.

We heartily wish others would do likewise. In the pulpit we want no prose, or book-sermons; we want preaching, rather. Out of the pulpit, we want no dead skeletons—the lifeless exuviæ of fervid and living efforts. Let the province of each be well defined, and not trespassed upon by the other.

The renown of the author will secure a ready sale for these works. To be had at Morgan's.

LOVE THE BEAUTIFUL.

BY E. K. HARRIS.

Love thou the Beautiful,
Oh child of dark unrest;
Its whispers from far regions come;
Receive them in your breast.

Love thou the Beautiful;
It is the tablet here
Whereon our Heavenly Father writes
His precepts fair and clear.

Love thou the Beautiful,
And beautiful shall be
Thy life—but, oh! more lovely far,
Thine immortality.

Love thou the Beautiful;
To thee, oh, lowly born!
Its voice will speak in sweetest tones
Mid the world's hate and scorn.

Love thou the Beautiful;
While it is lovely here,
It calls us to a brighter world,
And reigns supremely there.

THE PREACHERS—WHERE ARE THEY?

Last week we inquired after the exhorters: We now take up our parable respecting another class of Gospel instrumentalities. Lest the subjects of our quest be mistaken, we will define: that we are not searching for the subjects of last week's solicitude, nor for men who are called to do good so far as it is convenient, but for those who are moved by the Holy Ghost to preach Jesus and the Resurrection, and who have said in their hearts, "wo is me, if I preach not the Gospel;" for preachers, in the New Testament sense, called of God, filled with the Spirit and purpose of the Apostles, ready to go anywhere, and at a sacrifice, where moral destitution shall invite and the authorities of the Church shall send: those whose lips have been touched with the "live coal," and who say send: those whose ardor stretches to the "regions beyond," and who, most of all, would preach Christ, where as yet he is not named.

It is safe to admit the supply of preachers has always fallen short of the demand. This seems to be the order of Providence; but not to the extent which numerous calls from various quarters indicate at the present time. The deficiency was necessarily greater at the first promulgation of the Gospel, than need

The number called to the work of the ministry, we must suppose, to approximate to the requirements of the world, as those requirements may be indicated by the providential openings, which appear in the events of our times.

As it is God's prerogative to call men, we cannot well conclude otherwise than that it is exercised to the extent of a wholesome and wise demand. If the calling of men depended, as to some extent it does, upon the prayers and invitations of the Church, the want of preachers cannot be altogether set down to its apathy upon the subject. This may be the cause in part—but it cannot be all.

The Church may be lax in its duties, but God cannot be so wanting in the exercise of his exclusive right, to call men to carry on his work, and preach the word of life, where doors great and effectual are opened.

We had as well take the case for granted. As it is in respect of the subjects of grace and salvation, "many are called, though but few are chosen," and for the same reason. The call to the ministry in all its length and breadth of consecration, is unheeded by hundreds; nay, by thousands, and the proportion of these is as the many to the few. It is not possible, if all who are truly called to the ministry were to devote themselves to it, that the want of laborers would press so sorely upon us.

Thus far we have arrived at the conclusion, not a foregone one, we trust, that the men we so much need are, somewhere, and this may lead us on to their whereabouts. A portion of these lost instrumentalities, can be found only in their own consciences. Neither by name nor profession can they be distinguished by the observer. Their call to the ministry and to salvation have been lost together. Others in the various pursuits of life are swallowed up in secular avocations, albeit they retain the name and profession of the office. Others are wedded by possibility to old and well cultivated fields. Itinerants, with a limit and a saving clause.

We have every degree of consecration—much of the lowest, some of a higher order, and but little of the highest. These oft repeated calls for more preachers, wide and extending fields within our very look whitening to the harvest, almost tempt the reflection that the true nature and thoroughness of a call to the ministry is losing ground in the convictions of very many who should be alive to its tremendous import.

This, in answer to our question, we would mark as the place where the preachers have been lost to the Church and the world. On these waters the ship and crew have gone down. The waves of secularization have rolled over them. When will the sea give up its dead?

METHODISM IN LARGE CITIES.

We give below some interesting reflections and statistics from the pen of Dr. Bangs What he says of the hindrances to Methodism in the city of New York will, perhaps, apply to other cities.

Somehow the notion has obtained in certain quarters that our Church economy is not suited to the social condition, and the intellectual and moral wants of cities. Radical changes are thought necessary by some; minor and indifferent ones by others, to accomodate our Church to these wants.

It is, perhaps, best to meet the question fairly. Is our system more defective in its workings and application in large cities than in the country?

Perhaps, in answering this, it would be apposite to consider whether the greatest triumphs of Methodism have not been achieved in these very places. It may be said that Methodism was born in a city, and in a city bred. It finds its peculiar adaptation where the largest miscellaneous masses congregate.

We do not admit that we are falling behind other denominations in our large cities. Possibly we are falling behind ourselves. History proves that cities are not unfriendly to success; and our short-comings must be owing to the fact that our economy is not well worked.

Nothing is more essential to success than a clear conception of the mission of Methodism. It has been well said that this mission is to the poor. Where are there more poor than in large cities? The mission was to preach the masses, whom other Churches failed to influence. To bring the Gospel, nolens volens, to the thousands who move below and around other communions. Where is this material more abundant than in large cities?

If we were to admit that Methodism is becoming inefficient in such localities, we should look for the cause chiefly in this: that we have too much lost sight of our true mission.

Too often, instead of looking after the poor and the degraded million, we have aimed at a corporate wealth and respectability. We have sought the popular standard of denominational respectability, and affected a conformity to them.

The mission of Methodism as a Church is very much the same that it was when only a Society. There can be very little objection to elegant houses of worship, possibly none to organs, and such like furniture, and none at all to the reception of rich and respectable people as members, if all of these be kept subordinate, and subservient to our chief and more excellent calling—the salvation of the poor and the multitudes whom other Churches care not for. When, however, we lose sight of this, and enter upon a rivalry of elegance and social elevation with other denominations, it is not strange that our system should prove itself ill adapted to such a bastard purpose.

Admitting that we are losing ground in the large cities—an admission by no means justified by facts—the cause, in part at least, might be traced to a departure from our true sphere of labor. In any case, it detracts greatly from our prosperity. Our economy was framed for the evangelization of the poor and the godless multitudes. To this it is specially and admirably adapted—nowhere more so than to our large and crowded cities. Let it be kept steadily to this great, paramount end, and Methodism will not be found wanting. But, to the extract:

If our calculations are founded in truth, as we believe they are, then we have made a steady advance for the last twenty years, in numbers, in church-building, and I trust, also, in our general financial operations; though, for the last ten years our increase of Church members has not been in proportion to former years, and in the city of New York it has rather diminished. This diminution in the city has been accounted for by the removals to neighboring places, in which the increase has been more apparent, and from other causes which have operated, and are still operating to produce the same result.

Other causes might be mentioned. The heavy debts which have been contracted for the building of churches have, in my opinion, contributed to retard our progress in this city. These debts have not only tended to depress the spirits of the brethren who have had to shoulder their responsibility, and to divert the attention of the preachers from their more appropriate work, but also have hindered others from coming among us from a fear that they would have to assume some share of the responsibility; and the continual removals from the city, these being generally men of the heaviest property, have tended to make this burden press the heavier upon those who remain among us.

It is not the system that is in fault. This is no reason why we have not prospered more. The system, under the blessing of God, has made us what we are. And what are we? We, that eighty-eight years since, in this country, "were no people," have, including the North and the South, risen to the number of about 1,3000,000; have been made, raised up, and so far matured, under the system now in operation, with such modifications from time to time as the progress of events and the exigencies of the times have seemed to dictate to be necessary and expedient. By the system, I mean particularly the "Itineracy," together with all those adxiliary means that have been necessary to keep it in successful operation.

Look at the results of this ministry, and the results of that of other Protestant denominations who were here before us, and most of them, from the very beginning of the country, and were incorporated with the civil institutions of the colonies:

Baptists	710,290
Presbyterians, Old and New School	351,066
Congregational	197,196
Protestant Episcopal	100,000
Lutheran	200,000
Total	1,567,552

Add to these all the other minor sects, numbering in the aggregate 779,150, and the grand total will be—

Other Denominations	2 346,682
Methodists	1,305,808

So that we have about one-half the entire number of all the Protestant denominations amounting in all to twenty-three, in the country. We have nearly double the number of Baptists; nearly quadruple the number of Presbyterians; more than seven times as many as the Congregationalists; thirteen times as many as the Protestant Episcopalians; sixty-four times as many as the Lutherans; and about double the number of all the other sects, about seventeen in number, in the entire country, with the exception of the Roman Catholics. These are estimated at 1,093,479, which is 216,329 less than our-but, as they include all, men, women and children, within their enclosure, as Church members, and as we may reckon three our ward-court worshippers to one member, this would give us 3,917,424; more than three times as many as the Roman Catholics.

I cannot but think, therefore, that the system begun and carried forward by men, in general "full of faith and the Holy Ghost," has worked well upon the population of the United States. This, indeed, has given it all its energies. Without such a ministry, "full of faith and the Holy Ghost," moved forward continually by the hand of God, preaching in "the power and demonstration of the Spirit," all systems will be powerless for effecting any permanent good. This has been the secret of our success from the beginning; and so long as the ministers continue to "forget the things which are behind, and press toward the mark of the prize of their high calling of God in Christ Jesus," aiming at holiness of heart and life in all their ministrations, as well as in their private devotions, so long and no longer, will the blessing of God, in the awakening and justification of penitent sinners, and the sanctification of believers accompany their labors.

But the above estimates, say you, are founded upon the State of the Church throughout the entire country, and not upon its relative strength in the city of New York and its vicinity. Very well. Let us then look at the state of things in these places in 1773, which is the oldest record we have there were 180 in New York, and none, unless they were included among those in the city, in other places in the vicinity. In 1853 there were 16,160, including New York Brooklyn, Williamsburg, Jersey City, Hoboken and Newark, for reasons before assigned. This would give an average yearly per cent of a fraction over eleven. We have already seen that the average per cent. of the annual increase of the entire Church, during the same period, was a little over nine, while here in the city and its vicinity it has been eleven. This, I think, tells well in behalf of the city, notwithstanding the difficulties with which we have had to contend, when compared with the country at large. Although in the cities are generally congregated all classes of men and women; although here are theatres and all sorts of attraction for the idle and vicious; yet, upon a comparison, I believe it will be found that there are as many churches, ministers and professors of Godliness; and such professors, too, as give evidence of the depth of their piety by the steadiness of their conduct, by their deeds of charity, by their personal sacrifices in the cause of God, and their contributions toward benevolent institutions, in the city, in proportion to their number, as are to be found in the country-places and villages.

METHODIST PRESS.

Kah-kl-wa-quon-a-by.—This being interpreted is simply "Peter Jones," an Indian preacher and chief, lately on a visit to Buffalo, New York. The Advocate says:

This excellent and devoted Indian missionary and chief spent the last Sabbath in this city. What added to the interest of the visit to us was the fact that he was accompanied by his wife, a spirited and accomplished lady, the daughter of a London merchant. The Indian caught the bird during a visit to England many years since. The union has ever been of the most pleasant and agreeable kind; and even now, as she said to me: "I love him more than ever." Happy estate, indeed, when love waxes with the wane of years. There are some pretty incidents connected with this marriage which would please the reader, if published. The chief and missionary possesses elements of character which are striking and noble. He has a grand exterior, a mind strong and well cultivated, and a heart as warm and kind as beats in any other bosom. His sermons are attractive; not because an Indian preaches them, but because they are simple and to the point, and rich in experience.

The Expulsion Penalty.—A correspondent of the Richmond Advocate writes upon that generally admitted fact—usefulness of class-meetings; and the generally lamented one—their neglect. What is the remedy? He takes the position, below given, against that proposed by the statute; that the class-meeting feature should be continued, but on the same basis as other means of grace; the people invited, reminded and exhorted to attend them; leaders qualified well to do their part; and pastors magnifying this means of grace by attending it often, in person. Thus, as many will attend as do now; and the bugbear that frightens away some who would join the Church and prove good members, and even class-going ones in the end, removed. Other sects have volunteered advice to the Methodists, but never advised them to change the expulsion penalty for non-attendance on class-meetings. Take away a cross-fence that turns thousands into their own fields.

We are understood to assume no responsibility for the excerpts given under this head. Our purpose is only a sort of "olla podrida," showing what is being thought and said in the Advocate family:

As to the remedy, some have very readily discovered it. Say they; it is because the rule which requires attendance on class-meetings in order to retaining Church membership is unexecuted is a dead-letter, that these meetings are so neglected. There is no penalty attached (in practice) to a violation of this duty, and hence it is violated with a readiness proportioned to the want of fear. Execute the rule, give notice to absentees, warn them, bear with them a little while; if they persist in neglect, cut them off from our spiritual body, and then we shall have a class-going Church. As this is a severe remedy, we must look at it closely. We must feel the edge of the knife, and consider the patient's constitution before we proceed to cutting. If either of two things can be established, we will give our assent to this remedy. 1. If it can be established that non-attendance on class-meetings is an offence which would "exclude a man from the kingdom of grace and glory," and so, of course, render him unfit to remain in the Church of God on earth; or, 2. If it can be proved that in every case threat of exclusion would lead to attendance. But, I apprehend that neither of these points can be made out. Non-attendance on class-meetings is not a sin in itself, else our brethren of other denominations are all sinners. It can then be a sin only under particular circumstances, if at all. Such circumstances cannot consist of a mere connection with our Church, since we can very well suppose a Methodist in all other respects to entertain opinions in regard to class-meetings similar to those entertained by an Episcopalian or Presbyterian, which opinions, it is admitted, justify these latter in their neglect to establish such an institution among themselves. Class-meetings, then, must be considered a non-essential of religion; an institution promotive of our growth in grace; but not absolutely needful to the continuance of that grace in our hearts. Neglect of them would be sinful in the members of our Church, if, on joining the Church, they promised to attend. But no such breach of promise can be charged against them; for there is no disciplinary regulation exacting such a promise as a condition of admission. And, unless a member could be expelled for non-attendance, we have no right to make any one promise to attend, before we grant him admission.

Rev. R. Abbey, of Mississippi, sometime since, in our Quarterly Review, undertook to prove that neglect of class-meetings is a relative evil, because it tends to the discontinuance of an institution which greatly benefits those who use it; and he argued that no Christian had a right to deprive his brother of that which helped his spiritual state. But it is greatly to be doubted whether every act which merely tends to, and does not necessarily cause, the ruin of good institutions, be sinful. Otherwise the erroneous, and to that extent injurious views of many of us in regard to religious matters, which we will entertain so long as we are "compassed with infirmities," would keep us in sin all our days. This is to confound error with sin. And even where the effect is necessarily injurious, the want of an evil motive would in most cases remove the taint of sin. And if neglect of class-meetings be a relative evil so great as to justify exclusion from the Church, what must failure to establish at all, and even opposition to them, be accounted! A much greater sin, of course. And yet our brethren of other Churches are guilty of it.

Some of the advocates of this remedy argue its adoption on the ground that Mr. Wesley thought it Scriptural, and that this opinion is to be regarded of great weight with us. Undoubtedly Mr. Wesley's views are (while infallible, like those of every other man) very weighty with the Methodists; but the rule made and executed by Mr. Wesley was intended to operate in the Methodist societies, associations originally formed within the Church of England. A man excluded from these societies was not necessarily expelled from the Church of God, nor did Mr. Wesley so regard his exclusions. Doubtless, had he conceived himself to be legislating for another Church, and not for a society within a Church, the rules of which had long been made, the rule would have been different.

As to the second point—threats of exclusion—so far from inducing attendance in some obstinate, self-willed persons, would confirm non-attendance, which softer means might have removed. There is a natural combativeness about some people which makes them resist force, even if their judgments be convinced, that they are about being forced to do right. They are the people who must be led, and cannot be driven. You may call it folly; but it is also fact, and we must deal with persons as they are, and not as they ought to be.

We grant, as may be gathered from the first part of this article, that a large number of neglecters of class-meetings are persons with the "form," but destitute of the "power of godliness." But some, we are obliged to believe, have not wholly failed of the grace of God. And we had better allow ninety-nine tares to remain in the field until the harvest, than "root up" with them one stalk (though a weak, unhealthy stalk) of genuine wheat. "Better that ninety and nine wicked men escape than that one righteous man perish." And I do not think we have quite yet arrived at such a state of things in our ecclesiastical affairs as to justify the reply to this old maxim, made by a judge in Georgia, to whom it was quoted in an application by a convicted criminal for a new trial. "Yes," said he, "but the ninety-nine wicked men have already escaped, and it is time for the one righteous man to die!" We think the rule ought to be repealed; it is, and ought to be unexecuted! why should it remain on the statute-book?

The Nashville Advocate, amongst several plans for the adjustment of the local preacher question, proposes this as one of many expedients:

One Other Plan is, first, that every local preacher, who has the health and the zeal requisite to the work, leave his secular employments, and enter fully into the work, and, like Paul, count all things but loss for Christ's sake, and reckon not even his life dear to himself, so that he win souls, and finish the work to which the Master has called him. Secondly that no traveling preacher, who is suited to the work, ever retire from his high vocation, but press on through all opposition, striking locate from his vocabulary. Thirdly, that those who cannot, and will not, themselves to the pastoral work, because of business pursuits, do the best they can by preaching whenever and wherever they have opportunity, dismissing all feelings from their hearts but kindness and sympathy towards those who devote themselves wholly to the work of the ministry. And, fourthly, that we all love each other, and provoke one another to good works, seeing who could bring the most souls to Christ.

This, in many respects, is the best plan submitted. We do not know whether our contemporary would make this plan a subject of General Conference action, or let every one be persuaded in his own mind, and do as he pleases in the premises.

As advice it is excellent; but it would be better as a law. Upon the first point, it would not be practicable to require our local brethren to pull up stakes and enter the regular work.

Upon the second point; something might be done to restrain the localizing spirit of traveling preachers.

Thirdly is altogether too loose and indefinite for legislative action. The class to which it refers should hardly exist at all.

The whole evil would be reached and cured prospectively and gradually, by ceasing to ordain Local Preachers, as such, and by refusing location to traveling preachers without good and valid reason; or, by making the tenure of the ministerial office dependent upon their Conference relation. Such a course would not un-make our present local ministers; but it would stop the supply, and prevent the making of any more.

OPELOUSAS DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Bro. McTyeire: Owing to the fact that the preachers were delayed by low water, sickness, etc., in getting to their appointments, my first round of Quarterly Meetings commenced late.

Opelousas and Chicot Circuit; Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, P. C.—The Quarterly Meeting for this Circuit was held at Opelousas, March 18th and 19th. The attendance at church was good, and the congregation seemed to listen with attention to the Word—five joined the Church. The prospect appears fair for a good work in the Circuit this year. There ought to be two preachers here. This preaching once in four weeks at a place, according to my notion, is rather an up-hill business. Every where in our bounds the cry is still for "more laborers." Have brethren, who, in some places, are standing in each others way, heard this cry? It may be that God would, by this means, call them to to places in His vineyard where their services are specially needed; and, if they obey not what shall they have to answer in the day of account?

Franklin and Pattersonville Circuit: Rev. N. A. Cravens, P. C.—Time of Quarterly Meeting March 25th, 26th; held at Franklin; no service 25th, owing to heavy raine. Meeting commenced on Sabbath, 26th. Attendance large—congregation serious—several joined. The signs seemed favorable for a revival; it was determined at once to protract; and, accordingly, the services were continued from day to day up to the time of my leaving, April 5th. Meeting was also appointed for that evening. Fifty-five had already joined the Church, and twenty-six had professed religion. The revival fire was kindled, too, amongst the colored people; of these, up to this date, sixty-two had joined, while from fifteen to twenty (could not ascertain the exact number) professed conversion. I learned by letter, a few day after my arrival at home, that the good work was still going on; but, of this I say no more, that Brother Cravens may give you the particulars himself.

New Iberia Circuit: Rev. S. Shaw, P. C. Rev. —. Jenkins (a L. P. from Arkansas, last Fall) is employed as A. P. Quarterly Meeting, 1st and 2d April, at New Iberia. At the meeting at Franklin was still progressing—the altar crowded with weeping penitents—and, as Brother Cravens would be alone, so far as ministerial help was concerned, if I should leave—I determined to remain. And a messenger was dispatched the Friday before the meeting at New Iberia, with a letter to Bros. Haws and Jenkins, instructing them to hold their Quarterly Meeting without me; which they did. Learned as I passed up that they had a pleasant meeting, though nothing of special interest occurred. They report a general improvement in the state of religious feeling and interest on the Circuit. They were to hold some two and three days' meetings at different points on their work, and I trust that, before long, we shall hear that these contemplated meetings have resulted in the conversion of many.

Alexandria and Haw Creek Circuit; Rev. S. W. Spear, who was appointed in charge, not having come to the work, Rev. S. W. Turnly, Sup., is alone. Quarterly Meeting was held in this place 15th and 16th inst. The weather being a little unfavorable, attendance at church was thin; and, though there is nothing of special interest to record, still, I trust that good was done.

We expect to commence building a parsonage at this place in the course of a week or two, to be completed during the present year. Whatever spare time I have from the District during week days, is occupied mainly in pushing forward this enterprise. While the Sabbaths are employed in supplying, as far as I may, the Rapides Mission. I have not succeeded as yet in regularly organizing the Mission; though, so far as I have gone, have found it to be a most interesting field of labor.

Tuskegee Circuit, Alabama Conference.

Ma. Editor: At our Second Quarterly Meeting, which was held at New Hope, on the 8th instant, we were appointed a Committee to devise a plan for the support of Missions. We herewith enclose you the result of our labors for publication. We have thought it most conducive to the interest, to assign each local preacher within the bounds of the Circuit, the field of labor, and appoint the times of holding two days meeting; and, instead of throwing the entire responsibility upon the Ministers, we have concluded to appoint one member at each church, whose business it shall be to see all the members of their respective churches, and such persons as are friendly to the cause of Missions, and ascertain from them what they are willing to contribute; and the brethren so appointed, shall make their reports at these meetings; at which time, to enable those who may not have had an opportunity of contributing, thus to do, at the close of the eleven o'clock services on the Sabbath, a public collection may be taken up. This arrangement, you will see, leaves it discretionary with the Ministers to preach upon the subject, otherwise to bring the cause and claims and Missions before their several congregations. The last named brother at each church is the collecting officer.

SECRET SINS.

GOD'S BOOK OF CHARACTER.

Secrecy is often essential to the commission of crime, and essential to the production of evidence in regard to man's character. How many a villany would have been stopped, how many a sin crushed in the bud, how many a fraud or murder arrested, if there had been a single eye known to be in the room, on the face, on the hand, on the paper. If the first concoction of evil plans were seen in their commencement, in their originating steps, there are comparatively few that would be finished. Some persons, indeed, in great power and holdness, sweep on in their career of evil, regardless with what transparency the world may see their motives. But in general, men cannot accomplish their schemes of selfishness, without concealment. And in this world many a crime goes unpunished for want of evidence. There will be evidence enough in the eternal world. Every murderer, who thinks he has removed every witness of his crime, has only sent the witnesses out of this world into the next, out of the porch or ante-room into the judgment hall itself. He has only sent forward the evidence, by which he is to be tried. Every man who has secretly injured or defrauded another has had the fraud or the injury inscribed or catalogued for eternity. Every man who neglected prayer, neglected the word of God, neglected his own soul, has had the neglect of every instance of it, not only written down in the book of his own conscience and memory, but checked as it were, in the record of things to be manifested in eternity. Every man, every day, is filling up his character. God keeps a book of character. Every thought, every act, goes into it; every attitude of the moral being. The book is filling up, in order that its great leaves may be unfolded and read for the knowledge of the universe; that all may see what man is, what God is; that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world plead guilty before God, that man may be seen in the greatness of sinfulness and inexcusableness of his departure from God in the holiness and justice of his punishment. The more secrecy, hypocrisy and successful wickedness there is here, the more clearly will the justice of the condemnation of the wicked appear hereafter.

THE CELEBRATED BEER TRIAL BETWEEN H. C. DELAVAN AND JOHN TAY ALBANY.

We clip the following from the Temperance Pioneer, an excellent Temperance paper published in New York. It throws light on the Beer trade:

One hundred thousand copies of the report of this trial were printed and circulated. We have constantly applications for this report, hardly a copy is to be found. Mr. D. was prosecuted because he said, "filthy beer was used in malting," and held to bail in $40,000. Damages were laid at $5,000. The trial, in the only case tried, resulted in 6d. damages to E. C. Delavan. We give a brief sketch of a small part of the evidence elicited on the trial. The public is now well satisfied as to the adulteration of beer and distilled liquors, why should it not be enlightened, especially the rising generation with regard to the history of beer making. In this trial the use of drugs was not brought up, but we have facts on that point which we may give in future numbers:

Hon. John Savage, late Chief Justice of this State, testified thus: The water was very dirty; never saw it otherwise. My family refused to drink it. I have seen dead animals there; and I believe I have seen dead cats and hogs. The filth from the slaughter house yard was then running and oozing into the creek; the show was going off; and I saw rate the slaughter-house was wet, and I could see filth and water mixed running into the stream.

Thomas Coulson, (class-leader in Methodist church) testifies: The water in the pond was always bad; in a putrid state in the fall of the year. What was in the water? anything to make it bad? Different kinds of animals floating in the water. In the winter of the weather the water was green. Saw dead cats and hogs, I've seen. Did you ever try to make glue of that water? It would not do for that. Why not? It was too full of call rotten water. Have you seen that water dipped up and carried anywhere? I have seen it taken in hogsheads into the malt-house—poured through at the end of the malt-house.

C. W. Harvey, who had dipped water from the pond for the malt-house, testifies: Is there any puddles in front of the gravy? Yes. Any that you get water from? Yes. Any offensive that drained into the puddle? Judson's slaughter-house? Part of the water of the slaughter-house drained into the pond from which water was taken, near the slaughter-house. You drew water from the big pond? Yes. How long? Four or five seasons. The pond in the vicinity of the malt-house? Yes. What was the color of the water in that pond? Very bad. Was it so? Bad, from the fact that it was receiving almost all the offal from the hill; dead hogs and dogs and cats; horses all drawn near the pond, and with sun on it, made them exceedingly foul, so that in drawing it frequently made me sick.

Israel Smith, (elder in Rev. Mr. Judson's church) testifies: Witness knew the pond called the big pond. Generally, when the business had seen it, the water looked foul. (Had frequently seen dead animals in it when he was riding by—dogs, hogs and cats. Had frequently seen carcasses of dead horses lying on the margin of it.)

Garrott Middleton, testifies: Saw the water go in through the gutter to the steep tub. It was very dirty water—stagnant—all green. Have seen dead dogs and cats in the pond.

Amos Fassett (elder in Rev. Dr. Campbell's church) testifies: Have seen the Poor-house creek frequently. Some parts of the year very unwholesome. Particularly while the slaughter-house was empty. The offal and blood, etc., were thrown in, and the creek being lower, it all descended of course, into the creek. Have seen also dead animals on the creek. Should think that the wash of some of the grave yards drained into the creek. Have seen water drawn from the pond to the malt-house previous to 1851. Have seen it deposited in the malt-house, at the north end. The water I should call very impure. It has always been bad. I have known it for a great number of years. It was the place of general deposit for all kinds of dead animals, at all seasons of the year.

Washington's Wife.—A guest at Mount Vernon happened to sleep in a room next to that occupied by the President and his lady. In the evening, when the people had retired to their various chambers, he heard the lady delivering a very animated lecture to her lord and master upon something which he had done which she thought ought to have been done differently. To all this he listened in the profoundest silence, and when she, too, was silent, he opened his mouth and spoke: "Now, good sleep to you, my dear." Portraits and descriptions of her show that she must have been a pretty, agreeable, kind, lively woman, from whom it would not have been very disagreeable to have a curtain lecture. [illegible] tle lecture.

Anecdote of Mr. Webster.—The Boston correspondent of the Journal of Commerce relates the following anecdote of Mr. Webster:

Soon after Mr. Webster removed to Marshfield, he made his masterly speech in the United States Senate in reply to Hayne. The gentleman of whom he bought his farm at Marshfield, Captain Thomas, a great admirer of Webster, both before and after he knew him personally, had read the great speech of Hayne in the Boston Centinel, a paper that he subscribed for not without asking Mr. Webster what paper had "better take." Capt. Thomas regarded the speech of Hayne as unanswerable. He was gloomy and quite sick at heart about it. He took to his room, and even went to bed.

In a day or two the mail brought also the other Boston semi-weekly Centinel. It contained a report of Webster's speech in reply to Hayne. It was carried to the chamber of Capt. Thomas, with the announcement of what it contained. Captain Thomas was scarcely arrested by it. He was not believing, but faithless. He said "Hayne cannot be answered; it is no use to think it."

The newspaper was left and the bearer took his leave. Soon a joyful noise was heard in the chamber of Captain Thomas. The sick man had read the speech of Webster, was cured, and cried at the top of his voice, "bring me my boots."

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—On the 24th April, 1854, by the Rev. J. A. Ivy, Mr. JOHN P. KOFFSKEY, Jr. to Miss MARY J. CROSSAN.

By the same, and at the same time, Mr. WM. H. WELLS to Mrs. MARIE ANTOINETTE CELINA McNEIL, all of New Orleans, La.

OBITUARY:

DEPARTED this life April 22, in this city, at the residence of her father, Mr. Thomas K. Price, Mrs. MARTHA JANE BABER, wife of Mr. W. L. Buber, of Sumner county, Tenn., in the 25th year of her age.

She was born and educated in Nashville, Tenn. She leaves a fond husband and three "little ones" to mourn their unspeakable and irreparable loss. A father, a mother, a sister and a brother, feel that one of the best beloved of their family-band has been removed, to return no more.

Martha Jane Baber was amiable and lovely in all the relations of life, generous and charitable almost to a fault. She was reared in the bosom of the Church—her father's house being the home of the ministers of Christ. Something like a year past she became formally connected with the Church in which she had been reared (the Methodist) and with whose doctrines and usages she had long been familiar. Being yet in the early bloom of life—a young wife and a young mother—her ties to earth were strong, and she naturally clung to life.

During her illness she was meditating plans of usefulness in relation to the Sabbath School and Church services in her neighborhood, in Tennessee; but God has deemed it best to call her home. When nearly gone, and too feeble to articulate distinctly, her father asked her if she trusted in Jesus, and if so, to raise her hand, which she did, and in a few moments more calmly fell asleep in death.

"Thou art gone to the grave—we no longer behold thee;
Nor tread the rough paths of the world by thy side:
But the wide arms of mercy are spread to enfold thee,
And Sinners may hope since the Sinless has died."

DIED—At her residence on Door Creek, Washington county, Miss., on the 7th April 1854, Mrs. ISABELLA HOGAN, in the 28th year of her age. The deceased was born in Hines county, Miss., and was married to Mr. Wm. Hogan April 21st, 1844. In the fall of '49 she joined the church and professed to experience the regenerating power of the Holy Ghost, and taste the joys of "sins forgiven." In 1851 she removed with her husband from Warren county to "Middle Deer Creek," where she terminated her earthly pilgrimage in the "full assurance of faith," after a painful illness of several months. During the last three years of her life, she was almost entirely excluded from all religious associations, arising from the sparsely settled section of country in which she resided. Until recently, the penetration of even that class of missionaries had not reached her quiet fireside, of whom it is said—

"That ere the adventurer's bat be reared,
One will have found his new abode."

Then asked, but a short time previous to her death, what were her feelings? she tesified "all is well."

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

She has left a husband and three children to mourn the loss of wife and mother; but they "sorrow not as those who are without hope," for from her dying testimony, the cheering thought is given, that she now dwells—

"Where sickness, sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and fear'd no more."

But where all the faculties shall bloom forever in the freshness of immortal youth.

J. A. B. J.

DIED—In this city, on the 24th April, Mrs. CHRISTIANA BARRETT, wife of Mr. William Barrett, in the 42d year of her age. Sister Barrett was born in the city of Baltimore, but for a number of years has been a resident of this city. She embraced the religion of the Lord Jesus in early life, and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which she has ever been a faithful and exemplary member; liberal in the support of its institutions, and charitable to the poor. She have been more loved in their circles while living, or will be more deeply deplored when dead. She lived by faith in the Son of God, and has died in hope of a glorious immortality. Her loved will deeply feel their irreparable loss, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope, for she has gone—

"Where sorrow never lives
And friendship never dies."

PASTOR.

The subject of this notice, Mrs. ELIZABETH McCALIP, late wife of A. K. McCalip, of Ouachita parish, Louisiana, was the daughter of William and Mary Chandler, formerly of Jefferson county, Mississippi. She departed this life on Friday morning, the 17th March, in the thirty-second year of her age, after a protracted and severe affliction, which she bore with Christian fortitude and resignation.

Only a short time before the spirit took its flight the author of this asked her if her way was still clear and her faith unshaken. She answered: "Yes; "there are no obscuring clouds."

She joined the M. E. Church previous to her marriage, and in the many changes of her relities, by moving from one to another society, would never fail to procure a letter of membership, rather than join again on probation. From the time of attaching herself to the Church she led a pious life, and we have to be a Christian, and has gone to her reward.

Much could be said of her character, as a wife, mother, sister, friend and neighbor. To the subject and love her was but to know her.

DIED—On the 13th April, 1854, at his father's residence, in Cass county, Texas, Esquire JAMES CHAPPELL, the only son of Collier A. H. Cappell, late of Macon county Georgia. About the first of February he visited New Orleans to purchase a stock of goods, and while there was taken sick. He received the attention of two physicians for a few days, and finding his health somewhat improved, ventured on a return to his father's house. On arriving there, he found himself much fatigued and exhausted, and it was soon discovered that he was the victim of one of the most fearful of diseases—the typhoid fever. He had embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when very young, and knew from experience much of its comforts and consolations. But during the last twelve months, he professed to have lost ground in these respects, and hence the evidences of his acceptance were not clear. This distressed him much. But by penitence and prayer, and faith in Christ, and a renewed consecration of himself to God, the joys of salvation were restored unto him. From that time forward he was reconciled to death. He had something of a desire to live, that he might serve the Lord more faithfully, but as he was assured of heaven, he preferred to die. Long will his memory be cherished by his friends and relatives and afflicted father. May the Lord sanctify the bereavement to the good of all who are afflicted by it.

THE RUSSIAN EMPIRE.

The prominence of this Empire in the present political movements of the world, awakens an unwonted desire for an acquaintance with its history, its geographical features and its resources. Already a competitor for the supremacy among nations, at the beginning of this century—rising up a colossus of despotism in the Eastern hemisphere, and stretching forth its hands, with proud self-reliance, to the youngest of freedom in the West; our knowledge of its distinguishing peculiarities is even yet limited, as compared with that which we possess of other European powers. Not content with the largest share of the most civilized grand division of the globe, it has advanced along the foreign plains of Northern Asia, and the ice bound extremities of America, until it comprises nearly one-half of Europe and Asia; reaches half way round the globe, and embraces one seventh part of the habitable world. Nearly as extensive as the Ancient Roman Empire, and ten times as large as any other European State its circumfluent Seas and Oceans bent against a territory of six millions of square miles, inhabited by seventy millions of souls. Listening to the loud blasts of the Euxine, on the South or watching the huge icebergs of the Polar waters, catching the busy hum of the Baltic pursuing the seals of Kamschatka, or winding through the solitudes and smiling plains of the interior, its native hordes give utterance to their thoughts in the one-third of human languages Of twelve distinct stocks, and of sixty tribes the symbol of their glories is the Grecian Cross and the bond of their union, the decree of onmind. Their birthland, the hive of nations poured out its swarms upon the world's great mistress, until the Eagle of Rome had closed his wings majestically in death, and an ocean of gloom had rolled its waters over the face of civilization. Still no germs of nationality was planted around the sources of the Volga Nor until the Warrior Prophet of Arabia had hurled the thunderbolts of a new revelation from shore to shore, and the frantic cross had burst upon the sacrilegious Crescent, did the first faint beams of a new star appear in the East.

In the ninth century, men lifted up their eyes, and lo! the beginnings of good. But the turmoils and rude conflicts of fickle barbarians as wild and senseless as the swoops of embattled kites, alike unchronicled and uninteresting, consumed yet six hundred years, before John Basilowitz collected together the heterogeneous elements of a kingdom and sat down upon the throne, the first monarch, properly so called, of Russia. Twenty-two royal successors, like him, have trod the paths of glory and the grave Infanticide, fratricide, regicide, adultery, have stalked triumphant through the palaces of the Czars. Ever ambitious, these have known no talisman but the sword, and cast with unflinching hand the die of destiny. Borrowing military science from their neighbors, they perfected their practice upon the heads of their instructors. Finland, Poland, Circassia and Wallachia have re-echoed the shout of the thundering Cossack. Reversing the paths of Genghis Khan and Tamerlane, those "thunderbolts of war," the Muscovite legions have forced their long lances toward the heart of Asia, till Persia watches the nod of the Autocrat, and Tartary regards, with reverence the steppes she once devastated. The mandate of the German Prince, that no subject should touch arms to the rude men of the North, unheeded, the heir of Romanoff aspire to universal dominion, and the Ukase of St. Petersburg commands the car of the world. But this brief introduction must suffice for the present. In future we will resume our view of the Muscovite Empire.

THE RAILROAD ELECTION.—As we had supposed it would be, the vote on the 21st was overwhelmingly in favor of the proposed railroad tax reform; no less—we gather from the returns received—than six to one. We congratulate the friends of improvement and of the interests of the city upon this result, and upon the fact which it exhibits that the citizens of New Orleans are not to be deceived or misled in a matter so deeply touching their welfare.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, April 18, 1854.

Before this letter reaches you, the telegraph will anticipate the fact of the rejection by the Senate of the Gadsden treaty, so called, with Mexico. The injunction of secrecy has not been removed from the proceedings, but probably will be, and the people will then have an opportunity of judging for themselves in the premises, and I have no shadow of doubt will most heartily applaud the course of the Senators who opposed the ratification. The advocates of the treaty have been untiring in their efforts for its passage, and I have good right to believe that large contingent fees were to have been paid to numerous parties if this result had been secured; some of these "disinterested patriots" have held out the idea that a war with Mexico would be no improbable consequence, and this immediately, of the rejection of this treaty. There are some important questions between this country and Mexico, but they are not pressing for settlement to that degree which will at all endanger the intercourse between us—meanwhile a new arrangement can be entered into with a full knowledge of what the Senate will be likely to concede. It is to be hoped that in all its movements our Government will steadily refuse to be mixed up with the schemes and enterprises of individuals however magnificent these may be made to appear; if the enterprise be too much for the individuals or corporation, and promises to be of advantage to the whole country, let the Government undertake it for the country; but not for the Corporation.

The House has finally, after two days labor, passed the bill for increasing the salaries of clerks employed here by the government. This was right. There are not a few worthless fellows, brought here by members of Congress, and foisted upon the Department, who ought not to be employed by government, but of those who serve it faithfully, I never heard of one who had made a fortune, or even a competency, in the business; and I know several gentlemen, of economical habits, who have been more than twenty years in the post of clerk, and are almost as poor now as when they first went into office. It is a thankless drudgery, yielding neither wealth nor fame, and it is a marvel to me that any intelligent man should ever accept it, much less eagerly seek it.

My attention has been called by Col. Hunt to an article in the Boston Atlas, editorial, endorsing the attacks from the west upon the sugar interest in Louisiana. What is the meaning of this? Are the whigs about to renounce their creed of protection to American interests. I have given it as my belief that this do-nothing Congress would not be likely to get up the Tariff, but there is no saying what they will or will not do with such certainty as to justify inaction by others. I would advise the planters to be prepared with remonstrances, for, if the subject is taken in hand, they may rely upon it there will be a systematic effort made to put sugar on the free list.

CHRONICLER.

WASHINGTON, April 10, 1854.

A document of nearly four hundred pages has just been printed embracing all the correspondence which has passed between our Government and that of Spain, for several years past, upon the various maritime difficulties which have occurred at Cuba. It is with some pride that I observe that the whig Secretary, Clayton, appears most advantageously in this collection of State letter-writers. Filibusters will not probably ironhle themselves with these records, being already satisfied that Spain is always wrong; but others will find that there are two sides to almost all the questions, and that the Spanish diplomatist sometimes makes a very fair case for his side.

In this connection I may mention that considerable curiosity is manifested here to know what the bark Grapeshot is doing in your region with her shipment of Law's muskets.

What was left of the Gadsden Treaty was rejected day before yesterday, and this rejection was reconsidered yesterday, and I think it not unlikely that the basis of a new treaty may finally be agreed upon by the Senate.

A bill was reported some time since from the Committee on Commerce in the Senate, which was this morning called up by Mr. Seward, of New York, and passed, which is to prevent delay in the unloading of cargoes from foreign ports; the bill applies only to steamers and enacts that, when it appears from the bill of lading that the goods are to be delivered immediately on arrival, they shall be taken at once to the bonded warehouse, and where this does not appear they shall be so taken up in three days at once. There is no provision for a lien on the goods for freight, this being left to the operation of existing laws.

A bill was also passed to give $100,000 to the true discoverer of chloroform as an agent for dental and surgical operations; Drs. Morton, Jackson, Wells, Guthrie and Dickinson are named in the bill, and the question of which shall take the prize is to be decided in Court.

The Homestead bill was then taken up and a very humorous and sarcastic argument against its passage was made by Mr. Thompson, of Kentucky. I commend Mr. T's speech to the particular attention of the "Know nothings." The vote upon this bill will be likely to be a close one in the Senate.

The House spent the morning hour in wrangling about the mail contract between Montgomery and Mobile, but did not dispose of the subject. The rest of the sitting was devoted to the bill, which I have heretofore informed you the Senate passed, for donating ten millions acres of land to the several States of the Union for the benefit of the indigent insane. The minority contested the passage of this bill by an obstinate series of calls for the yeas and nays on all intervening questions, but the bill was finally passed by a vote of eighty-one to fifty-three, and needs only the President's signature to be a fixed fact. This, in my humble judgment, is the most glorious act of this Congress—its especial opponents were the President's especial adherents.

CHRONICLER.

REFUSAL TO EXCHANGE NATIONAL COURTESIES.—The report that Commodore Newton, on leaving Havana harbor, refused to exchange salutes with the Spanish forts, is well founded. The reliable Havana correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce, says that the refusal was on account of discourteous and insulting language used towards the President and authorities of the United States by the Diario de la Marina, under the authority of the Captain-General of Cuba, which Commodore Newton has required should be retracted or explained before he could consent to interchange of the usual international courtesies.

A NOBLE SCAVENGER.—Senor Mota, formerly Lieutenant-Colonel of the National Guards at Chuhuhuco, having expressed his contempt for the Dictator, Santa Anna, has been, by order of the would-be Emperor, arrested and imprisoned among the vilest bandits and cut-throats, among whom he is now chained and compelled to sweep the streets of the city of Mexico.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

The steamship United States, Captain Lucas, arrived at this port Sunday afternoon, bringing San Francisco dates of the 1st inst., and one hundred and twenty passengers. The United States left Aspinwall on the evening of the 17th. The steamship Illinois left Aspinwall the same evening, for New York, with one hundred and fifty passengers and $1,000,000 in treasure.

LIEUT. STRAIN AND PARTY.—Lieut Strain's party had reached Boca Chica, on the Gulf of San Miguel. The party were shortly to be at Aspinwall, and the sloop-of-war Cyane would start for New York with them immediately upon their arrival. Lieut. Strain, it is reported, states that the canal cannot be built over the route he passed. Relative to the sufferings of Lieut. Strain and his party the Aspinwall Courier says: We now have the extreme satisfaction of saying that we grasped him by the hand yesterday, and heard from his own lips some of the incidents of his unprecedented trip.

We are informed that from the 30th January to the 26th March Lieut. Strain and his entire party lived exclusively on the nuts of the trupa, a species of the palm; that they suffered unceasingly, day and night, from innumerable and most poisonous insects; and that their feet, limbs, and indeed their whole bodies, were bruised and severely injured by the combined effects of the walking, the contact with the thicket and stones, and the bites of insects and reptiles. And we regret to add that six have perished in sight of the great ocean, to reach the shores of which they had suffered so long and so much. Two of them died at Chopigana, where Lieut. Strain had been compelled to leave them, when he went for the provisions, and the others at their camp we believe, near Yavisa.

California.

The following summary of the events of the fortnight is from the Alta California of April 1:

On the 18th the Assembly passed a bill to extend till April, 1855, the law about to expire, authorizing persons claiming slaves brought to this State previous to the admission (9th Sept., 1850,) to seize the slaves, take them before a magistrate or judge, who, upon receiving satisfactory evidence that the slaves were brought hither previous to the admission, shall give a certificate to that effect to the claimant, and the victim may be taken by force out of the State.

On the 16th, the Legislature passed an act requiring the Supreme Court to hold its sessions at the Seat of Government—by which Sacramento was meant. On the 27th, the Supreme Court held a session and decided that the seat of Government, legally established at San Jose, has never been legally removed; and accordingly they have ordered their clerk to take the records to San Jose. This decision will probably be followed by an effort to compel the Legislature and Government officials to remove thither likewise.

Chief Justice Murray dissents from the decision of his colleagues, and gives it as his opinion that Sacramento is the capital. He likewise says that the Legislature can do no valid act except when in session at the Seat of Government, and that consequently, if San Jose be the legally established capital, all the legislation since January, 1851, is void. If this view prevail, the great majority of our laws, the contracts made under them, the titles to property made under them, the city governments established under them, etc., are without any legal sanction. If this were any place but California, the very idea would be sufficient to fill the people with frenzy.

Lieut. Whipple, of the U. S. Pacific Surveying Expedition, arrived at Los Angeles on the 21st. His route was past Fort Smith, Albuquerque, and thence nearly due west by the Pueblo of Tuni, Bill Williams' Fork of the Colorado and the Tejon Pass. He brought wagons to the Colorado, where he was compelled to leave them for want of grass. The great portion of his route was over ground hitherto unexplored, and he reports that a railroad might be constructed there.

It is reported that one of Fremont's party has arrived in San Bernardino and states that he left Fremont in the snows of the Sierra Nevada, south of Walker's River Pass, and that the whole party was in imminent danger from cold and starvation.

Resolutions to approve of Douglas's Nebraska bill have been introduced into the Senate, but no action has been taken as yet.

There has been very little rain during the fortnight, but all portions of the diggings are still abundantly supplied with water.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The most important event of the fortnight has been the trial of H. P. Watkins, the filibuster associate of Walker in getting up the Sonora expedition. The trial began on the 20th and occupied four days. Four or five prominent merchants of the city were upon the jury. The United States District Attorney, Inge, was alone for the prosecution; the defense had four attorneys, among whom was Gov. Foote. Seventeen witnesses were sworn, of whom five were filibusters in the Caroline and three in the Anita. The evidence went to show that Watkins aided in placing arms on board the Caroline at night; that he promised to pay for damage done by the Caroline party; that he made a speech to the Anita party in the Columbia Engine House in this city the night the vessel sailed; that in this speech he spoke as their leader, told them they would go to aid Walker; that he had examined the vessel and found her seaworthy, and that he had ninety days provisions on board; that he sent arms and ammunition on board that night; that he was recognised as the leader on the Anita; that he with his men joined Walker immediately upon landing at Ensenada; that he was recognised as Vice President there; and that his declared intention in coming back to this city was to raise men and money to return again to Walker's aid. The arguments and charge to the jury occupied twelve hours. The jury were out twelve hours and brought in a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation to mercy.

Sentence had not been pronounced. Among the witnesses were two who had been robbed, and all the filibusters questioned on the point testified that private property was taken with no sparing hand.

The Challenge, the vessel chartered under the Mexican Consul to take eight hundred Frenchmen and Germans to Guaymas, was stopped on the 23d by the U. S. Marshal, for the reason that she was about to carry too many passengers for her measurement. She was stopped a second time on the 29th. The alleged reason for preventing her departure was a mere pretence, since it is well known that the law limiting the number of passengers on vessels is very frequently violated in this harbor, without any interference of the authorities. Whether it was feared that the immigrants would bother the filibusters, or build up a strong foreign influence, is not clear; but it is a fact well known to those who have been long in Sonora that the foreigners are unanimously in favor of American dominion.

The United States Land Commissioners have appointed two Commissioners to aid in taking testimony.

About 800 immigrants have arrived during the fortnight, of whom 2500 were from the United States, and 1173 from China.

Washington Territory.

We have news to the 12th March. The Territorial Legislature convened on the 6th. Mr. Conklin was elected Speaker of the Council, and Mr. Chenowith Speaker of the House.

The Snohowish Indians, near Cape Flattery, had killed an engineer by the name of Young, and Dr. Cherry, and had lost nine of their tribe in a fight. There was a good deal of approbension felt at Olympia. Governor Stevens was taking very energetic measures to prevent further difficulty.

Lower California.

We have news from San Vicente to the 13th March.

Walker's force was reduced to about 70 men, and he intended to leave San Vicente on the 18th and attempt to cross the Colorado to get into the northern part of Sonora. On the 6th, they sacked San Tomas; and many of the natives, robbed of all their property, are removing to San Diego.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM MEXICO.

Santa Anna has issued a decree prohibiting the introduction into the country of any foreign printed matter in which is attacked or censured the policy or principles of his Government.

At Vera Cruz they are setting about the important work of bringing to the city the waters of the river Jomapa. Don Santiago Mendez, the Government engineer, is engaged upon the survey of the work, which is to cost $700,000. The money is to be raised by a tax of ½ per cent. on the importations at Vera Cruz.

The Council of State, fearing for the the health of Santa Anna, as likely to suffer in the exposure of his present position, has entreated him to return to the city, and indeed the Dictator appears to have been, in one instance, compelled to suspend his late operations, by an attack of sickness; but he had recovered from it, and after the taking of the forts at Puerto del Coquille, had ridden up the hill on his war horse, so that it is to be presumed that he will not listen to these irregular medical advisers.

The successes in the war with the Insurrectionists have been welcomed in the city of Mexico and elsewhere with great public rejoicing.

There had been some cholera in the City of Mexico, but the few cases which had occurred were truced to the sale of a quantity of spoiled codfish. No less than fifty-six boxes of that favorite Spanish food had been sold at a very low price to the poorer classes, and many of these had suffered from what was taken to be Asiatic cholera. It had however ceased upon the seizure of the food which had caused it. It appears to have also broken out in Yucatan.

THE CZAR.

No pity moves him, and no laws affright
In the brute exercise of brutal might;
Cold as the snow-drift of his harb'rous lands,
His heart relents not when his pride commands.
O'er cringing slaves, who bear but to obey,
Lashes and knout proclaim his genial sway.
A free soul's curse is on him, and his name
Sinks to an immortality of shame.

CAL. FREMONT.—A letter from Col Frémont is published in the National Intelligencer, giving an account of his recent journey to California overland. He had reached Parawan iron country, Utah Territory, the party being in general good health, and reasonable success in the object of their expedition. The winter had been unusually severe, but no more than four inches of snow were encountered. The object of his journey was to explore the central route for the Pacific Railroad. He says:

"Nature has been bountiful in this region. In accumulating here, within a few miles of where I am writing, vast deposits of iron and coal and timber, all of the most excellent quality; and a great and powerful interior State will spring up immediately in the steps of the Congressional action which should decide to carry the road through this region. Until within about a hundred miles of this place we had daguerreotyped the country over which we passed, but were forced to abandon all our heavy baggage to save the men, and I shall not stop to send back for it. The Delewares all came in sound; but the whites of my party were all exhausted and broken up, and more or less frost-bitten. I lost one, Mr. Fuller, of St. Louis, Mo., who died on entering this valley. He died like a man, on horseback, in his saddle, and will be buried like a soldier, on the spot where he fell."

NAVIGATION OF THE AMAZON.—The New York Post publishes a very important correspondence in relation to the much vexed question whether Brazil has a right to control the navigation of the Amazon. This correspondence, the Post states, is from the fears of two prominent foreign functionaries at Para. The pretensions of Brazil to the right to obstruct the navigation of the Amazon by foreign bottoms, is scoffed at in a most bold and unqualified tone. An extract from the reply of the President of the Bolivian Republic, to an invitation from the Emperor of Brazil, to enter into a treaty for the exclusive navigation of the Amazon and its tributaries by their riparian proprietors, is also given in this correspondence.

President Belzou, of Bolivia, declined to entertain any proposals from the Brazilian Plenipotentiary, which recognized any right in Brazil to limit the commerce of the Amazon at all. He said that Bolivia's right to the commerce of nations beyond the Atlantic, through the Amazon, was guaranteed both by the laws of nature and of nations, and that the pretensions of Brazil deserve to be considered "the most eccentric folly."

ORIGIN OF THE PHRASE "BUNCOMBE."—The origin of the expression "Buncombe speeches" is said to have been as follows: Some years since, a member of Congress from the county of Buncombe, North Carolina, was indulging in a long and very uninteresting harangue in the House of Representatives. Some attempted to cough him down, others called him to order; but it was of no use—he was determined to have his say, let what would occur. At last the members began to leave, and there was soon scarcely any persons left except the reporters. At this stage of the proceeding, a member, who had listened with wonderful perseverance, suggested to him that he would soon be entirely destitute of auditors; whereupon he very coolly observed that it was of no consequence, as he was "speaking for Buncombe, not Washington," in other words, that his speech was intended for the perusal of his constituents, and not at all to influence the action of his fellow members.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—P. T. Barnum, the President of the Crystal Palace Association, is out in a lengthy card, stating that large fresh contributions of interesting products of manufactures and the arts are promised from Europe and this country, and that the Palace will be made a place of greater attraction and novelty than ever before. On the 4th of May, there is to be a grand, popular, re-opening, at which, artizans and laborers are to have places of honor. A prize of $100 each is offered for the best 60 lines ode, and 30 lines song to be spoken and sung on the re-opening. The Palace stock stands at 50, and Barnum is in the market as buyer for a large amount. This feeling is becoming confident that Barnum will bring the concern out of its dilemma and into paying shape.

IMPERIAL BOUQUET.—We find in a late London paper an account of a bouquet, presented by the Horticultural Society of Toulouse, to the Empress of the French. It is two and a half feet in diameter by three feet high, and contains no less than 10,000 violets and 300 camelias. It is composed of a dome of violets surrounded by a circle of camelias, garlands of these last running down the dome, on which is to be seen the initials of the Empress in orange flowers. A blue ribbon, also having the cipher of Eugenia, ties the stem of the bouquet.

FLAGS CAPTURED BY WASHINGTON.—George Washington Park Custis has written to the President, stating his wish to deposit, through his excellency, in the national archives, the flags captured by Washington in the Revolutionary war, which inestimable trophies were presented to Gen Washington by Congress. The ceremonies of presentation are expected to take place shortly.

JEWS IN THE UNITED STATES.—There are said to be some 17,000 of the Jewish faith in the United States. Their churches number 31. Probably 6,000 Jews are to be found in the city of New York. We seldom find one in one prisons or penitentiaries. They are not frequently found in our hospitals, and never in our poor-houses.

FANNY FERN.—N. P. Willis states in the Home Journal that his father had three children, viz: Richard Storrs Willis, Fanny Fern (although the spunky Fanny does not seem to be proud of the relation) and himself. This statement puts at rest the relationship of that redoubtable lady.

There have been about one thousand cases of cholera in Paris since its last return, of which one-half have died. Gendrin commends bleeding, even in the state of collapse.

If one a Georgetown lady that said she would make a poor sailor, and to which a nautical friend replied, but you would make an excellent mate though.

SPEECH OF SENATOR GWIN UPON THE PACIFIC RAILROAD BILL.—The speech of Senator Gwin, of California upon the Select Committee's Pacific Railroad bill is exciting considerable comment. He devotes much of his argument to an effort to prove that Congress has the power to make the necessary grants of land and the right of way proposed in the bill. It establishes no eastern terminus, and gives no preference to any State in the Mississippi Valley. Mr. Gwin says that by this bill the mail will be carried daily both ways, in less than a week, from our Atlantic and Pacific borders, for little more than it now costs for a semi-monthly mail, occupying nearly four weeks in the transit. With the construction of the road, he predicts that the alternate sections of lands now valueless, will bring millions into the treasury, while an enterprising population will cultivate and fill up both sides of the route from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He advocates the road also as a great military road, by which we can keep the Indians in check, and, in case of war, protect California. He speaks of the tremendous efforts of England to secure the Eastern trade. She has established no less than three overland routes to India. She is also contemplating a stupendous scheme for a railway by which London and Calcutta, the capitals of the Western and Eastern worlds, will be brought within a week's journey of each other. The proposed route, says Mr. Gwin, is from Calais to Ostend, thence to Cologne, through Augsburg, Lombardy, to Trieste on the Adriatic; thence along the valleys of European Turkey to Bussorah on the Persian Gulf, passing along the northern shores of that Gulf, through Persia and Beloochistan to the Indus, and thence to Calcutta, on the Eastern coast of Hindostan. This route from London to the capital of the Bengal Presidency, would be about five thousand six hundred miles in length, and, it is supposed, can be constructed in fourteen years.

The New York Herald, while acknowledging the interest of the facts which Mr. Gwin has collected, thinks there is no probability that this bill or any other bill will give us a railroad from the Mississippi to the Pacific, for the next fifty years. "Two thousand miles of railroad," says the Herald, "and fifteen hundred miles of this distance through a continuous desert of barren plains and volcanic mountains; without inhabitants, except Indians; without timber, except stunted thorns and desert sheparral; and, to a great extent, without even water! Suppose that over such a route the first five hundred miles of a railroad, single track, were constructed from the Mississippi river—what, from the said river, would be the cost for the transportation of the timber, iron and other materials, men and provisions, required for the next five hundred miles?"

ROBBED HIMSELF.—An Indiana paper says: A Mr. Hise, of Jackson township, who, as we are informed, had sold his farm a short time since, received his money, $1000 in gold, on Thursday evening last, and putting it into a carpet sack which he hung upon his bed post, went to sleep. In the morning the sack and money were gone—all he had in the world. To add to his misfortune, too, he had contracted for another farm, and was to pay for it the next day. During the day of Friday, the carpet sack was found in a hollow poplar stump, near his barn, with the pocket-book in it, but no money there—the thief had secured what he wanted. On Friday night, Mrs. Hise was awakened by her husband getting out of bed. She arose and watched him. He went to the barn; after searching a little while, came out with the money in his hand, and went to the stump where the carpet sack had been put. She now awakened him, when to his great joy he found that all was not lost. He had, doubtless, while in his sleep, become uneasy about his money on the first night, and got up and hid it; on the second, fearing it was not secure where it was, he was removing it to a more secret place. Fortunately for him, his wife detected him in his somnambulistic wanderings, and saved their all.

DISTRESSING CALAMITY.—The Macon (Miss.) Beacon states that a most distressing accident befell recently the family of Rev. Peter Crawford, living at Crawfordsville, Lowndes county. It appears that Miss Louisa Crawford, having occasion to go near a fire burning in the yard, her dress caught and she was instantly enveloped in flames. Her elder sister Ann went to her assistance, when her clothes also caught and she too was wrapped in flames. Louisa died about nine o'clock on Monday night, and Ann was so severely burned there was no hopes of her living. Their father and mother had left home the morning of the same day for Montgomery, Ala. The Beacon says they were most accomplished young ladies, and their awful and untimely death produces a deep and heartfelt sympathy in the neighborhood.

FRANCE AND HAYTI.—Admiral Duchesne, with a small French fleet, paid a visit to Port au Prince in the beginning of March, and at the cannon's mouth, demanded the payment of some $300,000 indemnity money due to France, which Emperor Soluque finally paid, although it is said he at first contemplated resistance, and sent orders to Cape Haytien and other places to have the various regiments ready to march upon the capital. On the 11th, at Washington, Mr. Cullom, of Tennessee, made a speech in opposition to the Nebraska bill, in which he denounced, very violently, both the Nebraska bill and its author. We find the speech reported in some of the Washington papers; it is a very clever production. At its conclusion a facetious administration member from New York observed that General Cullom violated the treaty with the Indians by "introducing a settler into Nebraska."

The magnetic telegraph lines in America extend over 41,000 miles, and cost nearly $7,000,000 to build. The Telegraph Companion sets down the various lines as follows: Morse line wires, 36,972 miles; House, 3850 miles; Bain, 570 miles. Total, 41,392 miles. The capital stock in the Morse lines is $5,345,800; House, $955,000; Bain, $171,000. Total capital stock, $6,671,800.

SLEEPING ACCOMMODATIONS ON RAILROADS.—The patent reclining seats introduced by the Baltimore and Philadelphia Railroad, into their night cars, are attracting the deserved encomiums of travelers. The patent seats have also been introduced upon the Wilmington and Raleigh, and the Wilmington and Manchester Railroads, and are all that is claimed for them. There can be no question of their general adoption in cars running at night.

The Interdom at the North seems to have been one of the fiercest and most protracted which has occurred this season. It extended from Halifax, in Nova Scotia, to Petersburg, in Virginia. The snow fell in New York to the depth of 18 inches, and in Baltimore and Richmond was nearly a foot in depth. Much injury has been done to young crops by this untimely weather.

FATHER LAND AND MOTHER TONGUE.....By Lotta.

Our Father land! and would you know
Why we should call it Father land?
It is that Adam here below
Was made of earth by Nature's hand;
And we, for memory of his birth,
Do call our country Father land.

At first in Adam's bower they say,
No sound of speech had Adam caught,
But whistled like a bird all day—
And why? twas for want of thought;
But Nature, with restrictive laws,
Made Adam soon surpass the birds.
She gave him lovely Eve—Heaven
Made a wife—they must have words
Around us, the native land I hold,
By male descent is proudly mine;
The language, as the tale hath told,
Was given in the female line:
And this, we see, on either hand,
We thank our blessings whence they're sprung
We call our country Father land,
We call our language Mother tongue.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

THE DECLARATION OF WAR AGAINST RUSSIA BY ENGLAND.—The political intelligence by the Persia is of the highest importance.

The Cabinet courier dispatched with the ultimatum of France and England to the Emperor of Russia had returned to London with an official announcement that no reply to the joint demand of the two Powers would be made. In consequence of this the Queen sent down to both Houses of Parliament, on the 27th, the following

DECLARATION.

It is with deep regret that Her Majesty announces the failure of her anxious and protracted endeavors to preserve for her people and for Europe the blessings of peace.

The unprovoked aggression of the Emperor of Russia against the Sublime Porte has been persisted in with such disregard to consequences, that after the rejection by the Emperor of Russia of terms which the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, and the Queen, as well as Her Majesty, considered honorable and equitable, Her Majesty is compelled by a sense of what is due to the honor of the Crown, to the interests of her people, and to the independence of the States of Europe, to cause forward in defence of an ally whose territory is invaded, and whose dignity and independence are assailed.

Her Majesty, in justification of the course she is about to pursue, refers to the transactions in which Her Majesty has been engaged.

The Emperor of Russia had some cause of complaint against the Sultan with reference to the settlement, which his Highness had sanctioned, of the conflicting claims of the Greek and Latin Churches, as to a portion of the Holy Places of Jerusalem and its neighborhood. To the complaint of the Emperor of Russia on this head justice was done; and Her Majesty's Embassador at Constantinople had the satisfaction of promoting an arrangement to which no exception was taken by the Russian Government.

But while the Russian Government repeatedly assured the Government of Her Majesty that the mission of Prince Menchikoff to Constantinople was exclusively directed to the settlement of the Holy Places at Jerusalem, Prince Menchikoff himself pressed upon the Porte other demands of a far more serious and important character, the nature of which he, in the first instance, endeavored, as far as possible, to conceal from Her Majesty's Embassador. And these demands, thus studiously concealed, affected not the privileges of the Greek Church at Jerusalem, but the position of many millions of Turkish subjects in their relations to their Sovereign, the Sultan.

These demands were rejected by the spontaneous decision of the Sublime Porte.

Two assurances have been given to Her Majesty: one, that the mission of Prince Menchikoff only regarded the Holy Places; the other, that his mission would be of a conciliatory character.

In both respects Her Majesty's just expectations were disappointed.

Demands were made, which, in the opinion of the Sultan, extended to the substitution of the Emperor of Russia's authority for his own over a large portion of his subjects; and those demands were enforced by a threat; and when Her Majesty learned that, on announcing this termination of his mission, Prince Menchikoff declared that the refusal of his demands would impose upon the Imperial Government the necessity of seeking a guarantee by its own power, Her Majesty thought proper that her fleet should leave Malta, and, in co-operation with that of His Majesty, the Emperor of the French, take up its station in the neighborhood of the Dardanelles.

So long as the negotiation bore an amicable character, Her Majesty refrained from any demonstration of force. But when, in addition to the assemblage of large military forces on the frontier of Turkey, the Embassador of Russia intimated that serious consequences would ensue from the refusal of the Sultan to comply with unwarrantable demands, Her Majesty deemed it right, in conjunction with the Emperor of the French, to give an unquestionable proof of her determination to support the sovereign rights of the Sultan.

The Russian Government has maintained that the determination of the Emperor to occupy the Principalities was taken in consequence of the advance of the fleets of England and France. But the menace of invasion of the Turkish territory was conveyed in Count Nesselrode's note to Rechid Pasha, on the 19th (31st) May, and restated in his dispatch to Baron Brunow, of the 20th May (1st June,) which announced the determination of the Emperor of Russia to order his troops to occupy the Principalities, if the Porte did not within a week comply with the demands of Russia.

The dispatch to her Majesty's Embassador at Constantinople authorizing him, in certain specified contingencies, to send for the British fleet, was dated the 31st May, and the order sent direct from England to her Majesty's Admiral to proceed to the neighborhood of the Dardanelles was dated the 2d of June.

The determination to occupy the Principalities was, therefore, taken before the orders for the advance of the combined squadron were given.

The Sultan's Minister was informed that we soon be signed within a week, and without the change of a word, the note proposed to the Porte by Prince Menchikoff, on the eve of his departure from Constantinople, the Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia would be occupied by Russian troops. The Sultan could not accede to so insulting a demand; but when the actual occupation of the Principalities took place, the Sultan did not, as he might have done in the exercise of his undoubted right, declare war, but addressed a protest to his allies.

Her Majesty, in conjunction with the sovereigns of Austria, France and Prussia, has made various attempts to meet the just demands of the Emperor of Russia without affecting the dignity and independence of the Sultan; and had it been the sole object of Russia to obtain security for the enjoyment of the Christian subjects of the Porte of the privilege and immunities, she would have found it in the offers that have been made by the Sultan. But as that security was not offered in the shape of special and separate stipulation with Russia it was rejected. Twice has this offer been made by the Sultan, and recommended by the Four Powers, once by a note originally prepared at Vienna, and subsequently modified by the Porte, once by the proposal of bases of negotiation agreed upon at Constantinople on the 31st of December, and proposed at Vienna on the 13th of January, as offering to the two parties the means of arriving at an understanding in a becoming and honorable manner.

It is thus manifest that a right for Russia to interfere in the ordinary relations of Turkish subjects to their sovereign, and not the happiness of Christian communities in Turkey, was the object sought for by the Russian Government; to such a demand the Sultan would not submit, and his Highness, in self-defence, declared war upon Russia; but her Majesty, nevertheless, in conjunction with her allies, has not ceased her endeavors to restore peace between the contending parties.

The time has, however, now arrived when the advice and remonstrances of the Four Powers having proved wholly ineffectual, and the military preparations for Russia becoming daily more extended, it is but too obvious that the Emperor of Russia has entered upon a course of policy which, if unchecked, must lead to the destruction of the Ottoman Empire.

In this conjecture Her Majesty feels called upon by regard for an ally, the integrity and independence of whose empire has been recognized essential to the peace of Europe, by the [illegible] of her people with right against [illegible] desire to avert from her dominions [illegible] consequences, and to save Europe from the [illegible] aggrandizement of a power which has violated the faith of treaties, and defies the opinion of the civilized world, to take up arms, in conjunction with the Emperor of the French, for the defence of the Sultan.

Her Majesty is persuaded that in so acting she will have the cordial support of her people; and that the present of zeal for the Christian religion will be used in vain to cover an aggression undertaken in disregard of holy precepts, and of its pure and benevolent spirit.

Her Majesty humbly trusts that her efforts may be successful, and that, by the blessing of Providence, peace may be re-established on safe and solid foundations.

Westminster, March 28, 1854

DECLARATION

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, having been compelled to take up arms in support of an ally, is desirous of rendering the war as little onerous as possible to the powers with whom she remains at peace.

To preserve the commerce of neutrals from all unnecessary obstruction Her Majesty is willing, for the present, to waive a part of the belligerent rights appertaining to her by the law of nations.

It is impossible for Her Majesty to forego the exercise of her right of seizing articles contraband of war, without preventing neutrals from bearing the enemy's dispatches; and she must maintain the right of a belligerent to prevent neutrals from breaking any effective blockade which may be established with an adequate force against the enemy's forts, harbors, or coasts.

But Her Majesty will waive the right of seizing enemy's property laden on board a neutral vessel, unless it be contraband of war.

It is not Her Majesty's intention to claim the confiscation of neutral property, not being contraband of war, found on enemy's ships; and Her Majesty further declares, that being anxious to lessen, as much as possible, the evils of war, and to restrict the operations to the regularly organized forces of the country, it is not her present intention to issue letters of marque for the commissioning of privateers.

Westminster, March 28, 1854.

THE DECLARATION OF WAR BY FRANCE.

The subjoined telegraphic dispatches from Paris thus announces that a simultaneous declaration of a similar purport to the above had also been made to the Legislative Assembly by the French Emperor:

PARIS, March 27, 1854.—The Minister of State read to-day to the Corps Legislatif, in the name of the Emperor, a message announcing that the final resolve of the Cabinet of St. Petersburg has placed Russia in a state of war as regards France. The Emperor also declares that the whole responsibility of the ruptured rests on the Russian Government.

The message was received with energetic expressions of adhesion by the whole legislative body.

M. Billault, the President, then went on to say that the Emperor relied on the support of the legislative body, as well as on that of all France, under the grave aspect of affairs.

This intimation was also received with loud cheers, and the Assembly broke up with shouts of "Vive l'Empereur!"

A similar communication was also made to the Senate, where it was received with the same enthusiasm.

The Minister of Commerce has just informed the various Chambers of Commerce throughout France that letters of marque will not be granted to American vessels; and that the Federal Government had declared to the French Minister that acts so contrary to the rights of nations would not be tolerated in the territory of the Union.

The Moniteur of March 28, contains the following

DECLARATION.

Article 1. Six weeks from the present date are granted to Russian ships of commerce to quit the ports of France. Those Russian ships which are not actually in our ports, or which may have left the ports of Russia previously to the declaration of war, may enter into the French ports, and remain there for the completion of their cargoes, until the 9th of May, inclusive.

Article 2. Those vessels which shall be captured by French cruisers after having left the Russian ports, shall be released if they can establish, by the ship's papers, that they were proceeding direct to the place of destination, and had not yet arrived there.

DROUYN DE L'HUYS

The Moniteur also declares that the subjects of Russia may continue their residence in France, under the protection which the law provides for foreigners, the only condition being that they respect those laws.

PARLIAMENTARY RESPONSE TO THE QUEEN'S PROCLAMATION OF WAR.—Parliament had moved an address to the Queen in answer to the declaration of war, assuring her of the nation's firm determination to co-operate in a vigorous resistance to the projects of Russia, whose further aggrandizement would be dangerous to the peace of Europe.

The Parliamentary debate on the address of the Queen occupied twenty-nine columns of the papers.

War was formally proclaimed at London, at the Royal Exchange, on Friday, in the presence of the civic authorities.

The London papers are full of proclamations, etc., regulating the details of the war.

THE RIGHT OF SEARCH.—In the House of Commons, the Attorney General gave his opinion that the sale of Russian ships to neutral parties, if bona fide, would be protected in law. The Attorney General further stated, that Great Britain cannot, and does not, forego the right of search of neutral vessels for articles contraband of war.

[From the London Times, March 29.]

War is declared. A peace which has lasted the unexampled period of thirty-nine years, which many fondly hoped was to last as many more, is at end; and the three most powerful States of Europe are once more engaged in a struggle, the duration, the end, and the results of which no man can tell; but which is too likely to produce disasters and sufferings, of which we are mercifully spared the foreknowledge. It is not for us to attempt to lift up the veil of a futurity which must be sad in many respects; nor is there any need. No alternative is left us; the decision has been taken out of our hands; and, unless we would submit with our allies, to crouch under the insolent dictation of a barbarlo Power, and see the liberties of Europe disappear under the tramp of the Cossack, we had no other course than to do what has now been done. In sad and solemn form. The sight of the document we publish to-day will call many to their senses who to the last have speculated on the chances of war as a mere remote contingency, or have looked at it only in its holiday aspects. If the mere sight of a manifesto to which we are happily so little used might sober the most thoughtless, the perusal of it will remove every scruple from those who do not think all war unjustifiable. The document does justice to the long and anxious efforts of France and England to heal the rupture which the Czar had all along determined never should be healed, except by the subjugation of a neighbor against whom he had no longer a quarrel. With a simple collation of dates it convicts the daring attempt of the Emperor to falsify the chronology of the negotiation, and throw on us the odium of provoking the war. It meets with a just rebuke the impudent hypocrisy with which Russia has claimed to be the friend of religion and truth, when it was spurning the pure precepts of the one and outraging the laws of the other. There is not an Englishman whose thoughts are still free, and whose hand is not tied by some fanatical theory, who will not respond heart and soul to this solemn appeal. The greater part of us will only be called on to endure sacrifice, and thankful we should be that our part in the noble struggle is not more severe. But those sacrifices all will make cheerfully and ungrudgingly, from the conviction that Heaven has put them upon us, and that the only way to save ourselves, and fulfill our part in the terrible [illegible] is to strike with all our might, and let the great culprit see at once the strong determination and the irresistible power he has presumed to set at nought. We have been slow to take the decisive step. The Russian has evidently concluded that we preferred negotiation to action; the very opposition of St. Petersburg has been taught that we are too commercial to be real warriors, and found of profit to be keenly sensitive to wrong. Now that we have thrown away the scabbard, and stand face to face with our insolent antagonist, it only remains to disabuse him thoroughly of this imaginary estimate of our temper and power. That we have no desire will be done, but it will be done all the more readily by our gallant fleet and army if it be known that all England follows her sons to battle, and will prosecute their cause and avenge their death, till soon or late the rights of nations and the liberties of Europe receive a fresh sanction in the signal punishment of the gigantic offender.

The Golden Age reached King George's Sound, Australia, in sixty-one days, including fourteen days detention at St. Vincent and the Cape. Her actual running time was therefore only forty-seven days

THE WAR.—On the 28th March, Hirsova was taken by the Russians, who also made themselves masters of the strong position of Batuschdagh, and are consequently in entire possession of the Upper Dobrudscha. The Cossacks patrol as far as Kostendje; and, according to the Tromden Blatt, the fort of Isaktchi was taken by the Russians on the 27th. Imperfect accounts that are at hand say Hirsova was taken after three days assault. It will be some days ere reliable statements can be received.

As soon as Gortschakoff had establish Chimself in the Dobrudscha, he issued a proclamation to the inhabitants almilar to that which was published in Moldavia and Wallachia. In connection with Gortschakoff's movements, it is mentioned that five steamers, towing barges containing 4000 men, had left Sebastopol for the we tern (Turkish) coast of the Black Sea. If this be trus, they run a chance of meeting with the ships of the allied fleet, now cruising along that shore. Prince Paskiewitch was to set out about the 25th inst. from Warsaw for the seat of war. The Emperor will not himself go to the Principalities.

There is no doubt that the Russians have lodged themselves in the force stated—namely, over 50,000 men—on the Turkish bank of the Danube. Opinions are, however, divided as to the importance of this movement. While some view it as a great triumph to the Russians, others profess themselves unable to see what advantage the invaders expect to gain by it. They (the Russians) are not yet in Bulgaria, nor on the route to Constantinople, but in the Dobrudscha, an immense marshy plain, without any point d'appui, and deprived of communications. Behind them is a Turkish force of 25,000 to 30,000, and before them a line of fortresses, such ne Sillstria, Kostendje, Varna and Shumla, between them and the Balkans. It is true that in 1828 the Russians entered the Dobrudscha by Hirsova, as they have done now, and proceeded on to Varna and Sillistrie; but then the sea was open. Omar Pasha, too, who is not given to vain boasting, has said in a dispatch, published at Constantinople, that if the enemy would but cross the Danube, it would render a great service to his plan of operations! That we are on the eve of some important event there can be little doubt, and the result of the movements on the Austrian frontier, and the next operation of the Russians on the right bank of the river, are awaited with much anxiety.

The British steam frigate Inflexible was employed in conveying Turkish troops from Constantinople to Varna. A portion of the British fleet was also near Varna, with the intention of watching the new and unexpected movements of the Russians.

The circumstances under which the passage of the Danube appear to have been effected were these: On or about the 16th of March, Prince Gortschakoff received orders from St. Petersburg to secure, within ten days, a position on the right bank of the Danube, opposite to Braillow, similar to that which the Turks maintain at the other extremity of the line of operations, (Kalafat.) Gortschakoff immediately left for Braillow, where he completed all the preparations, and, on the 23d, commenced to cross the river at three different points. The left wing of a corps of 35,000 men, under Gen. Ouschnkuff forced a passage at Tultschn, opposite Ismail; the centre, under Gen. Luders, crossed without meeting opposition from Galatz; while the right wing, under the immediate direction of Prince Gortschakoff, was forcing a passage from Braillow. By the Soldaten Freund, we have accounts of the way in which matters were managed.

Early on the morning of the 23d, the Russians, under cover of twenty-four 12 and six 18 pounders, began to form a pontoon bridge from a spot near Braillow, across the island, to Gedschild on the right bank of the Danube. As the Turks offered no serious opposition, the bridge was completed by 10 o'clock, and at that hour the Russian columns began their march, which continued without interruption until late at night, when the men lighted their watch fires and bivouacked between Gedschild and Matschin. At the same time Gen. Luders constructed a second bridge between Galatz and the opposite bank, which there is free from morasses, and in the course of the day two regiments of charsènre, and two of the line, with cavalry and artillery, crossed this river without loss. On the same day the left wing, under Gen. Ouschakoff, forced a passage above Tultschn, and, in spite of a vigorous resistance on the part of the Turks, got possession of the redoubts which had been constructed on the right bank. Eleven guns and 150 prisoners fell into the hands of the Russians.

Concerning the additional news that has since come by telegraph, to the effect that Hirsova and Metschin had been captured; no details are yet to hand. As soon as the intelligence of the passage of the Danube by the Russians reached Omar Pasha, he sent reinforcements to the troops posted at Trajen's Wall, between Chernavoda and Kostendje. When Muetapha Pasha, the Turkish commander, found the Russians were in too great force, he retreated at first upon Matschin, and subsequently upon Badadagh. His force in the field is not more than 20,000 men, exclusive of garrisons. Success in the present operations would give the Russians complete command of the months of the Danube. They have already drawn chains across the Sultan's channel.

THE FLEETS.—Admiral Napier's fleet came to anchor off the island of Moen, and having been considerably augmented since its departure from England, now numbers twenty-two ships, carrying 1252 guns and 12,500 men. This fleet will soon be further increased by the St. George, 120 guns; Jas. Watt, 91 guns; Cæsar, 91; Nile, 91; Majestic, 80; Boscawen, 72; Odin, 16; Miranda, 14; Rosamoud, and several other steam sloops.

The Miranda surveying steamer reports, under date March 28th, respecting the Russian fleet, that one division is at Revel frozen in, the ice being very thick, with no symptoms at present of early breaking up. The Russians expecting that the island of Oesel will be the first object of attack, have placed there a garrison of 80,000 strong.

THE ARMY OF THE EAST.—France is pushing forward its expeditionary force with the utmost energy. The Paris Moniteur, of 2d inst, contains the following announcement: "His Majesty having ordered a body of troops to be sent to the Levant, the first convoy of vessels, frigates and corvettes of the imperial marine assembled at Toulon has already sailed, the convoy being divided as follows: Ships Montebello, Alger, Villa de Marseilles, and Jean Bart, 5400 men; Asmodee, Ulloa, Labrador, Coligny, Mediore, and Gorgogne, 3450 men, 225 horses; Mouette, Eclaireur, Luplace, and Infernal, 1406 men, 40 horses; Caffarelli, Veloce, and Braudon, 1130 men, 20 horses; Napoleon, and Suffren, 3040 men; Mouteuma, Panama, Alhatross, Canada and Titan, 1868 men, 80 horses.

This total, to which is to be added the contingent of the Christophe Colombe, amounts to 20,078 men, and 395 horses. Every day a portion of the three hundred ships freighted at Marseilles, leave with cavalry, munitions, provisions and articles of encampment." The Moniteur further says, "Too much cannot be taken to guard the news which unbenevolence or speculation invents. Thus it was said that France was about to send a corps of observation to the Rhine; that the Russian army would be at Constantinople before the English and French troops could get into line; that the squadron of Brest had been forced by a tempest to return to Toulon; and that the English and French frigates had been sunk in the Black Sea by the Russians. All these rumors are quite devoid of foundation. The Government, which is perfectly aware of the anxiety of the public, cannot better respond to it than by publishing all the news, good or bad, which it shall receive."

Great enthusiasm was manifested at Malta between the English and French troops there assembled. Being the first time that the soldiers of the two nations have ever stood together in friendship, they vied with each other in tokens of cordiality. Even the musicians had fraternized, the bands of the English performing the air of "Partant pour la Syrie," and the French playing "God Save the Queen." The troops now leaving England will be expedited to Turkey direct, without stopping at Malta. On the 20th ult. ten Turkish steamers were at Alexandria to embark 13,000 Egyptians.

THE GREEK INSURRECTION.—A dispatch from Malta, of the 21st of March, says that the King and Queen of Greece have left Athens for the frontier. Correspondence of the 16th states that the French admiral, Barbier de Tinan, had sailed from Constantinople in the steam frigate Gomor, with energetic orders to King Otho to arrest the hostile movements against Turkey which were originated and supported from his territory.

A LETTER FROM THE CZAR.—The following important dispatch is telographed:

Berlin, Monday, April 3.—Prince George of Meckiesburg Strelitz arrived here yesterday, the bearer of a letter from the Emperor of Russia to the King of Prussia, in answer to the mission of Gen Lindhelm.

Its tenor is as follows: "When the Western Powers succeed in securing the emancipation of the Christians in Turkey by treaty, the Czar will be willing to evacuate the Principalities, simultaneously with the evacuation of the Black Sea by the combined fleets."

BRITAIN.

On Monday, April 3d, both Houses of Parliament assembled for the purpose of presenting to the Queen an address, in reply to her message notifying the state of war with Russia, and expressing her confidence in the co-operation of the people. Two processions were formed, one of the Lords and the other of the Commons, and both proceeded to Buckingham Palace, to assure the Crown of the cordial support of all departments of Government. The vote was unanimous in both Houses.

The following is the Queen's reply:

"My Lords and Gentlemen—I thank you for your loyal and dutiful address. It is highly gratifying to me to receive the assurance of your co-operation in giving effect to the measures which I consider necessary for the honor of the Crown and the welfare of my people."

The debate which preceded the voting of the address is fully reported in the London papers of Saturday, the 1st inst., and occupies no less than twenty-nine columns of the type of the London Times! Of this immense mass of oratory our space renders it impossible to give even a compendium. Its general tone is, of course, hostile to the Czar, and its bulk is occupied in examining his conduct by the documentary evidence that has already been made public.

In answer to Capt. Scobell, Sir James Graham stated that the report which asserted that the movements of the allied fleets in the Black Sea were crippled for want of coal was incorrect. Since the 1st of January, 10,000 tons had been sent to Constantinople, and 6000 tons are at Malta. It was expected that the whole fleet would, in a few days, again commence cruising in the Black Sea. Since morning, account had indeed been received that the fleet was near Varna. [Cheers.]

The following notice of motion stands on the order book:

"Mr. Hutchins—To ask Lord John Russell whether the Government has authorized Mr. Crampton, British Minister at Washington, to act in behalf of the Spanish Government in the affair of the seizure of the steamer Black Warrior by the Cuban authorities."

Prince Gartoryski has addressed to Lord Dudley Stuart an interesting letter on the re-establishment of the Kingdom of Poland, which letter is published in the London Daily News.

On the 31st ult., Sir John Franklin and his expedition were struck off the books of the British navy, and given up for dead.

Fifteen packet ships, amounting to 16,000 tons, are at the present moment fitting up at Liverpool, to convey troops to the East.

The influx of emigrants into Liverpool at present surpasses anything of the sort ever before known. The majority are from Ireland, and are bound either for the United States or Canada. The prices of steerage passages now ranges as high as £6 10s., owing to the scarcity of shipping and number of passengers offering.

At Liverpool breadstuffs had again slightly advanced, and cotton was rather better in tone, but without leading to much business.

A SECOND EDITION OF TEN THOUSAND PRINTED!
The extraordinary success with which this all-absorbing work has been received by the United press and the public, has exhausted the enormous number first published in the space of thirty days. The publishers are now prepared with a second edition of 10,000 copies. The prediction is fast becoming verified that 100,000 copies of this charming book will have been disposed of in less time than was required in selling the same number of Mrs. Stowe's famous fiction. Volumes could be filled with the commendations it has received from all sections and classes. We submit a few extracts to exhibit the unmistakable heartiness of this reception:
[From the Boston Daily Journal.]
"The great Mission work of New-York stops thrilling incidents, illustrating the remark that 'truth is stranger than fiction.' It is a work of deep interest. The profits arising therefrom are to be devoted to the support of the 'Ladies' Mission.'"
[From the New York Observer.]
"We have read this book with deep interest. It contains the annals of a rich chapter. Some of the narratives have a touching and thrilling interest. The volume is in contrast with the coarse and silly production 'Ten Cents,' we were compelled recently to notice."
[From the Christian Union (Ohio) Herald.]
"The Old Brewery' bids fair to reach a circulation equal to that of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' It contains many a vivid and truthful picture of the misery, degradation, squalor, sin, and almost incredible wretchedness that reigns in 'the plague spot.'"
[From the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.]
"The deepest interest for surpassing that of any work of fiction that has been written on similar subjects. Whatever profit emanates from the sale of this book, will be applied to the support of the Ladies' Mission."
[From the Evangelist, N. Y. City.]
"These deeply interesting sketches are written with exquisite pathos which will greatly affect the reader. It is illustrated with effective engravings, and in style and appearance has everything to recommend it."
[From the Reading (Pa.) Gazette.]
"The most elaborately interesting narratives ever issued from the press. The real charm, the true value of the book, consists in the moral truthfulness of every story it contains. No touching fictions will be found in its pages. It is a volume of rare merit for all to read."

CHERRY PECTORAL,
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS,
BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH,
CROUP, ASTHMA AND
CONSUMPTION.
Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notoriety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.
While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the Cherry Pectoral does not only as a general thing, but almost invariably cure the maladies for which it is employed.
As time makes these facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually become the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log-cabin of the American peasant to the palaces of European kings. Throughout this entire country, Cherry Pectoral is known as the best remedy extant for diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, Cherry Pectoral is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms-houses, Public Institutions and in domestic practice, as the surest remedy their attending physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases and for children it is safe, pleasant and effectual to cure. In fact, some of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from parents who have found it efficacious in cases particularly incidental to childhood.
This Cherry Pectoral is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it under his own eye, with invariable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.
We have endeavored here to furnish the community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should commend itself to their confidence—a remedy at once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and countless trials proved itself to be; and trust by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of uniform strength to afford physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy that will do far them all that medicine can do. HOLINESS THE TRUE FOUNDATION FOR REVIVALS.

I think there can be no gainsaying upon this ject. And yet it is to be feared that there much neglect; chiefly, because the Cross heavy, and the preacher is the man to bear first. An unsanctified heart in the minis- will feel much reluctance in pressing this ject upon his hearers, and when he does it will be in such style that, perhaps, no e will either fall in love with the doctrine, the pains to remember his advice. Here, en, is the starting point.

The heart of the preacher must have the ptism of the Holy Ghost, and then he will fail to preach in power and eloquence on this all-absorbing theme. Who knows w to describe the purity of heart which wards us with the revelation of God within, nless it is the man in whose heart the wit- ss constantly bears testimony that the lood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin? uch may be said, and has been said, about ioisterial qualifications; many sage opin- ns have been uttered about the necessities the times in respect to accomplished preach- s, and it is not difficult to perceive that ror is about as near the advocate of the stem which places too much, as those who mit too little, stress upon education; the i media is not hard to find.

For my own part, I am constrained to be- ve that the School of Christ is the best in- itution in existence, and that no man can a successful minister who is not an alum- us of this College. I am bound to believe at there is more important matter in the alms of David than in the Odes of Horace; ore wisdom in the Proverbs of Solomon an in the morals of Seneca; more beauty in e character of Job than in that of Socrates; re truth and benefit in the history of Sam- n than in the feats of Hercules; more val- able knowledge in the annals of Moses than those of Tacitus; and more essential in- rmation, in a word, in the aphorism "know yself," by an impartial view in the mirror God's Word than in all the subjects pre- ented by heathen mythology, or classical terature.

I can but think there is a greater field for he exercise of sublime emotions when con- mplating the truly pious firmness of man f Uz, when the wife of his bosom advised im to curse God and die, than may be dis- vered in the great hero of the Mantuan ard, flying from the questionable amour of ove-sick queen. I cannot fail to see more al heroism in the importunate widow before e unjust judge, pleading for justice, than the foolish creature of the poet's brain ho immolated herself upon the burning yre, because she was unsuccessful in the ase after a fugitive lover. The Athenian hilosophers, who were banished for their aithfulness, and recalled and murdered for heir devotion to their country, do not claim om us a tithe of the attention and respect hich belong to the humble Apostles of esus, who spilt their blood in testimony of he truth of God.

I say nothing against colleges; God bless hem, and make them more and more useful o the Church of Christ. I cannot find it in y heart to blame those worthy men who, hilst teaching the literature of Greece and oms, faithfully warn their pupils against e pernicious errors of even the best heathen riters; may the Holy Spirit ever keep them ere to guard the gates of knowledge, and aks them the oiceroes to guide the youth- l mind through the mazes of this fruitful arden.

But I do protest against that growing taste hich levels Mount Zion with Parnassus; alvary with Olympus; Joshua with Zeno- on, and Theology with Pantheism. If ere is any truth in the maxim that a poet born such, not made, is it possible by hu- an means to manufacture preachers? I ink not. God chooses his own ambassa- rs; all that we can do is to assist them ith such aids as He has loaned us. But do t let the mental outfit take the place of e commission. In a word, when the Holy ost calls a man to the ministry, he cer- ely calls him to purity of heart.

Now, brethren, what is our present expe- nce on this subject? Have we faith in d? Have we daily, hourly, constant com- union with a Saviour from all indwelling ? Or, do our consciences accuse us of glect? Are we aware of sinful emotions, mpers, words, casual security? Do we feel e uprising of the dread monster within, or ave we continual peace with God? Does at Wicked One ensnare us, and cause our arts to feel the absence of the blessed Sun Righteousness? Let us amend from this our. Let us seek that grace which shall lly enable us to preach—

"As if we ne'er should preach again,
As dying, unto dying men;"

hen shall we know how beautiful are the et of those who bring glad tidings and pub- sh peace. We shall no longer have listless earers, for the very obvious reason that we all not be listless speakers. We shall not ten miss the tearful eyes of the rejoicing pirits, and humble penitents; because those ll read in our own the evidence that we ow whereof we affirm, and that our em- ssy from God is not mere diplomacy, but a eat work, having for its object the salva- on of sinners. We shall not be regarded, we often are, as mere pulpit declaimers, ho use the sacred desk to reach the public r. Men will know that we are in earnest, hen they see our zeal for God, and find out at we practice what we preach.

Now, I say, this is the first step towards a evival. Not a sickly flame which burns r a moment, and then expires; but a flame at throws out heat as well as light; a flame aving the best and most durable material r fuel, and lit by the live-coal from the eat Altar above. It will burn first in the onsumption of sin in believers, and then it will attack the stronghold of Satan. Before this flame the flimsy breastworks of sinners will fall as the prairie-grass before the waves of flame. The stoutest hearts will be bowed, the most obdurate broken, and the bravest made to quake. Infidelity in practice and theory will hide its diminished head, and the Most High will extort praises from the mouths of those that ordinarily blaspheme. When we tell men that out of Christ God is a consuming fire, they will see that we believe it, and it will startle them from their awful slumber. If we tell them that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the Living God, they cannot resist the impression to seek His pardon now, whilst He offers to be at peace with them, if our own hearts bear us testimony that we feel the nature of the danger to which they are exposed.

Oh, Brethren! do we believe that there is a Hell? Do we believe that sinners are daily rushing into it? Can we laugh and jest with those quiet men of the world who are slumbering over the pit of perdition, and warn them not? Shall we, who hear the vessels of the Lord, spend our precious moments in useless inquiries after greater means, better means, more polished means of saving men? Shall we continue to finger the beautiful system of Church machinery—trying to improve its speed—whilst there is much danger, that if we take it down, we shall never be able to put it up again? Are we restless? It is because we are neglecting the great subject of Scriptural holiness; we do not stir up the gift that is in us, if indeed we have it, and if not, multiplying bishops will not give it to us. Lay delegation will not make laymen any holier or happier. Are we ambitious of distinction? Behold! the harvest is ready: why linger to dispute about improvements in the sickle? I see the one we have, and we shall do more work before the sun sets than if we spend half the day to make improvements. Are we zealous for Methodism, and do we fear that she will be overrun in the Hotspur-speed of the age? Let us do God's work, to which he has appointed us; he will take care of us. Make the wheels track; and if the machinery wants help, we shall be apt to know it. For my own part, I do not think there is anything the matter with the carriage; but, I am afraid the drivers may leave the turnpike, and break it into pieces, trying to find a higher way through the woods. No matter how you prepare a new road, the stumps will be left, and we may be dashed to pieces against these. Let us keep on the old road; new ones may do very well; but I have found it better to travel a way that I have known—a good road, proven such by others, even if speed is consulted—and I do think that if the Church is kept on the highway of holiness, that God will take care of her.

Do we love ease? Let us take care that men do not stumble over us into Hell. Do we love reputation? Behold the theme of our hopes: "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever!" Do we want employment? Let us look around us! Here is enough to do. Brethren, let us get about our great mission with renewed diligence.

I have known some troubles in a few quarters in our Church; dissatisfaction in some instances I have known, and I have never been able to trace these things to any cause but lukewarm state of religion. When men are troubled with indwelling sin, they will charge their delinquencies on the Church, somewhere—either in the system, or the authorities—the Church must bear it. Now, when ministers listen to this bill of complaints, and try to patch up the system to meet all wants, they err. Better preach religion—genuine, heart-felt, indwelling, sin-killing religion—and if this does not stop the complaint, charges will not.

Brethren of the General Conference, permit one of the least of Christ's disciples to speak a word in your ears. Those of you to whom I am personally united, as a member of the Alabama Conference, and, indeed, many others whom I know, either personally or by reputation, are unquestionably men both able and willing to do anything for the furtherance of the Gospel; but, before you touch one of the old landmarks of Methodism, remember that an error in judgment there may be fatal to millions yet unborn, and that a bare majority of your body upon such a matter is not a sufficient indication that Providence has pointed out that way.

OMICRON.

Alabama Conference, 1854.

WORTH HALF A MILLION?—Yes, worth half a million, or in figures $500,000; and paid how much to the missionary cause? Perhaps you will not believe it when it is answered, $10! But it is a fact, upon the testimony of the minister, who counted the money. Do you say, I should like to know the man who, making a profession of love to Jesus Christ, gave but $10? Well, we do not propose to tell you the name of that amount of wealth, nor the name of a society having over one hundred and eighty members, being worth in the aggregate $500,000, or an average of more than $2500 each, and the minister reports with pain that the entire amount of their contributions to the cause of missions was but ten dollars.

A NEW WELSH MISSION.—It is a source of great joy to the hearts of the godly that those who are "moved with compassion for the multitude" of strangers among us. We hail the establishment of every new mission for their benefit with unfeigned satisfaction. A new mission for the benefit of the Welsh has been opened in Carbondale, within the bounds of the Wyoming Conference, and we trust that our American brethren contiguous to it will see that it does not faint for lack of countenance from them.

THE PREACHING REQUIRED BY THE TIMES.

EXTEMPORANEOUS PREACHING.

We have been endeavoring to account for the comparatively slight moral power and popular interest of modern preaching. Few things, we believe, detract more from the pulpit, in these respects, than the almost general substitution of reading for preaching; for they are not identical, any more than the letters of the one word spell the other.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, some years ago, contended by a strong vote for extemporaneous preaching; the best writers on homilies have contended for it; even a Unitarian theological professor (the younger Ware, of Harvard) has written an entire book, and the best one we have, on the subject; the most successful ministry of our land has been almost exclusively made up of extemporizers; the arguments and authorities for it are, in fine, altogether preponderating, and yet how predominant is the clerical proclivity to manuscripts. Even our Methodist brethren, whose fathers filled the land with the thunders and triumphs of their powerful and natural eloquence, are beginning to ape the primness of academic readers; to turn their once resounding pulpit batteries into "desks" for manuscript prelections. Alas! who would have supposed it of them? It is like the reed of the shepherd-boy on the mountain-road, after the trumpet-blast of the careering herald, while yet the lingering echoes ring among the crags and hights. We cannot conceive of the old effective Methodist preaching as other than extemporaneous, and all sister Churches should cry out against the change as a common calamity. How those heroic men could have gone thundering through the land, shaking the multitude, or melting them to tears, by the reading of manuscripts, is a problem which certainly no experiment ever solved, and no logic can show. It is, in fact, quite clear, à priori, that they would have been an entirely different class of men, and Methodism a quite different affair, if they had been readers instead of what they preëminently were—preachers.

Not only is extemporaneous preaching adapted to the themes, the style, and the effectiveness which we have demanded for the pulpit; but we contend that it is consistent with the best style of public discourse—with just thought and sufficiently accurate verbal style. These latter excellencies, of course, depend largely upon previous training, and the preparation for the discourse; but it must be remembered, also, that this is the case in regard to the written sermons; a speaker, without previous education, and immediate study of the discourse in hand, would hardly succeed better in reciting it than in delivering it extempore.

He that would be a successful extemporizer should have a well-stored mind, and should thoroughly meditate his subjects; so thoroughly, indeed, that the whole perspective of the main ideas of his discourse, from the exordium to the peroration, shall be clearly clearly open before his mental vision when he rises in the pulpit. This is requisite, for two reasons: first, that he may have something to say; and secondly, that he may have the confidence which will enable him to say it with self-possession and force. Self-possession, based upon sufficient preparation, is the whole secret of success in extemporaneous speaking. A speaker thus sustained can hardly fail to have, spontaneously, the right language and due emotion; he has incomparably more facilities for them than the manuscript preacher. We say right language; and that is right which is appropriate to the occasion. It may not be as precise as the pen would afford; but ought it always to be so? Would it be desirable that the free, irregular, but idiomatic, facility of ordinary conversation should be superseded at our hearths by the finical precision and literary nicety of book-makers? There is a style for books, a style for conversation, and a style for the rostrum or the pulpit. He who rises in the latter, with his mind fraught with the ideas of his subject, and his heart inspired with its spirit, will, in most cases, spontaneously utter himself aright. If he is occasionally diffuse or repetitious, yet it may be legitimate to the occasion or the subject that he should be so. If his style may not be read as well as it was heard, yet even this may be because of its peculiar adaption to be heard rather than read.

We affirm further, that both the design and history of preaching are in favor of extempore delivery. The earnestness and directness for which we have contended may consist, as we have shown, with all varieties of talents and topics; but it is hardly compatible with pulpit reading. Very rarely indeed does a powerful reader, like Chalmers, appear in the pulpit. We know not another case like his in the history of the Christian ministry. Chalmers tried the experiment of extemporizing in his country parish, but prematurely abandoned it; yet, when in his full splendor at Glasgow, his biographer says, that his occasional extempore discourses, in the private houses of his poor parishioners teemed with more glorious eloquence than ever dazzled the crowded congregation of of the Tron Kirk.

The two greatest preachers of modern times, Whitfield and Robert Hall, were extemporizers—their written sermons were composed after delivery. Such a thing as a manuscript sermon is never seen in the pulpits of the continent of Europe, except when American or English clergymen happen to ascend them. If the European clergy, Catholic, or Protestant, write their discourses, they have, nevertheless, the good sense to deliver them memoriter, and thereby save them from the dullness of reading. In like manner did the old and unrivaled pulpit orators of France—Massillon, Bossuet, Bourdaloue, Fletcher, Saurin, in his "Dialogues on Eloquence," eschew the manuscript.

Roman Catholic, the Baptist, the Unitarian, is unknown on almost all other occasions where a practical end, and not a mere literary exhibition, is designed—the political assembly, the legislative hall, the court-room. If you would have the pulpit invested with its legitimate freedom and power, break down its factitious restraints, banish its technicalities, and cast away its scrolls. Nay, if the reader would not suppose us too radical, we would say, tear down the pulpit itself. "A lawyer," said Daniel Webster, "could never hope to gain his cause if he had to plead it boxed up in a pulpit." Jesus Christ and his Apostles never saw a pulpit, unless the reading-platform of the synagogue could be called one. They never took a text—tying their thoughts with a thread of bare verbalism. Christ read the Prophet, and seldom and talked to the people. They knew nothing about "firstly," "secondly," and thirdly;" they were too intent on their practical design to trifle with such dialectic nonsense. They expounded, to be sure, but not with these scholastic trammels; they talked, they exhorted, they thundered; and the awakened multitudes—consenting or scorning—were not concerned about how they preached, but what they preached. The manner could not but be right, and powerfully right, when spontaneous to the design.

We would have the people come to church, then, not expecting to hear, or rather sleep, under these intellectual prelections, but to hear, fervent, practical, home-directed addresses respecting their duties—expositions, arguments, warnings, exhortations, applied to their common wants, to current events—to the individual, to the community, to the times—addresses, thoughtful, but not technical; too direct and urgent for factitious mannerisms; delivered, if you please, sometimes from the pulpit, and sometimes, as with the Papal priests, from the altar, down before the people; sometimes from a text, sometimes from the whole lesson; sometimes without reference to either; now on an abstract subject, now on a personal one, and now on a public question—urging men to their personal salvation, and meanwhile, and for this purpose, refuting all sanctioned lies, assailing all the corruptions of the day, whether in high places or in low places, and pleading all genuine reforms.

Amazing radicalism this! Yes, good reader, just such, both in spirit and method, as that before which the priesthoods, the philosophical schools, the sentes, and the thrones of the old classic heathenism fell. Such a restoration of primitive preaching would again "turn the world upside down," till it turned it right side up.

We believe further, that the ministerial education, or rather miseducation of the times, with the professional habits it entails, is a reason of the comparative inefficiency of the pulpit. Our clerical education is too Procrustean; it turns out too many poor results; so many, that a shrewd observer cannot but refer them to the defectiveness of the system as such. Thoughtful men, in the best-educated sects, begin to hesitate about theological schools; and we know learned graduates of such schools, now leaders in the ministry, who feel almost disposed, at times, to wish our theological seminaries disbanded. This is not the place for a close discussion of the question of theological education; but we would refer with emphasis to the necessity of a revision of the whole subject. Our candidates are drawn through a scholastic process—prolonged elementary studies—one or two years of preparation for college, four years in college, and three years under the rigors of technical divinity in the theological school; a process, out of which they come intellectually attenuated and rigid beyond recovery. And then bear in mind what follows on the present plan of manuscript reading instead of preaching. On graduating at last, they must betake themselves to sermon writing—two sermons a week at least, on the plan of those monstrous text-books we have denounced—two weekly homiletic agonies in constructing "firstlies," "secondlies" and "thirdlies," out of what common sense remains within them, and out of the beautiful, simple sentences of Holy Scriptures!

How is it possible that men, subjected to such professional rigors, should not become professionally characterized and isolated? What time have they for those general studies; those "Humanities," as they were once called, which the best critic have pronounced necessary to the orator? Clergymen, perhaps, more than any other professional class, need such studies, both for their mental health and their popular usefulness; but we are inclined to think have least opportunity for them. The present topic is very intimately related to the preceding one; for, not only is sermon reading bad in itself, the greatest detraction from the popular effect of preaching; but the intolerable nuisance (allow the word) is doubly an evil, as it requires sermon writing, and thus consumes, in the mere task of verbal preparation, the time that should be spent in various reading and thinking. "The minister," says Ware, "must keep himself occupied, reading, thinking, investigating; thus having his mind always awake and active. This is far better preparation than the bare writing of sermons, for it exercises the powers more, and keeps them bright. The great master of Roman eloquence thought it essential to, the true orator, that he should be familiar with all the sciences, and have his mind filled with every variety of knowledge. He, therefore, much as he studied his favorite art, yet occupied more time in literature, philosophy, and politics, than in the composition of his speeches. His preparation was less particular than general. So it has been with other eminent speakers. When Sir Samuel Romilly was in full practice in the High Court of Chancery, and at the same time overwhelmed with the pressure of public political concerns, his custom was to enter the court, to receive there the history of the cause he was to plead, thus to acquaint himself with the circumstances for the first time, and proceed to argue it. His general preparation and long practice enabled him to do this without failing in justice to his cause. I do not know that in this he was singular. The same sort of preparation would insure success in the pulpit. He who is always thinking, may expend upon each individual effort less time, because he can think at once fast and well. But he who never thinks, except when attempting to manufacture a sermon (and it is to be feared there are such men) must devote a great deal of time to this labor exclusively; and, after all, he will not have that wide range of thought or copiousness of illustration, which his office demands, and which study only can give. In fact, what I have here insisted upon, is exemplified in the case of the extemporaneous writers, whom I have already named. I would only carry their practice a step further, and devote an hour to an discourse instead of a day. Not to all discourses; for some ought to be written for the sake of writing; and some demand a sort of investigation, to which the use of the pen is essential. But then a very large proportion of the topics on which a minister should preach have been subjects of his attention a thousand times. He is thoroughly familiar with them; and an hour to arrange his ideas and collect illustrations is abundantly sufficient. The late Thomas Scott is said for years to have prepared his discourses entirely by meditation on the Sunday, and thus to have gained leisure for his extensive studies, and great and various labors. This is an extreme on which few have a right to venture, and which should be recommended to none. It shows, however, the power of habit, and the ability of a mind to act promptly and effectually which is kept upon the alert by constant occupation. He who is always engaged in thinking and studying, will always have thoughts enough for a sermon, and good ones, too, which will come at an hour's warning." We differ from Ware in respect to the amount of preparation necessary, but we approve his general view of the subject.

"A clergyman," says the good and great Dr. Arnold, himself a noble example of what he taught, "requires, first, the general cultivation of his mind, by reading the works of the greatest writers, philosophers, orators and poets; and, next, an understanding of the actual state of society, and of our own and general history, as affecting and explaining the existing differences among us, both social and religious." "It is for this reason," adds one of his reviewers, "that so few eminent critics are eminent preachers; criticism, to be eminent, requires a mind to be exclusive and jealous in his devotion to it, and he cannot find time for wide and general reading. But miscellaneous knowledge is precisely what the preacher needs, not to criticise the Sacred Word; but to apply it to the circumstances of his age, and to the hearts and habits of the living men and women in the congregation before him. The preacher, as such, can commit no more fatal mistake than to confine himself exclusively, or chiefly, to the reading of books of divinity. Such exclusive reading will inevitably narrow his mind, and give it a sort of one-sidedness, that will show itself, not merely in his mode of thinking, but in his style of writing and speaking. A Rainy Day in London.

It was a rainy, an unmistakably rainy day. It was that sort of dull, dogged, determined downfall, that drowns Hope at once—most ignobly—in a gutter. Yes, drowned she lies, beyond hot bricks and bellows. You cannot warm her back to life—you cannot blow new breadth into her lungs, you feel gloomy, heavy, unspeakably stupid. If the soul is a spark, as some bards have denominated her, she is in danger of being extinguished altogether; for your spirits are most unquestionably damped. You envy the very roof of the house there, you know, there are spouts to carry off the superabounding fluid, but none to relieve your overcharged mind. No; there the rain seems accumulating still—one gray, leaden, dreary deluge.

In parts of the tropics, now, where it rains—though, sooth to say the rain is still heavier there, when it does fall—there is something rather animating, rather exciting and exhilirating in the scene. The water comes down with a spirited rush and a roar that startles you: it is a cataract from the very clouds! The noise is almost like the voice of the sea: it is grand and wonderful—a stirring, restless, stormy, uprousing, agitated scene! But here, the steady, sapping rain hath so dismal a slowness, so chilly a dullness—it is so respectable a rain! so safe-going and well-conducted! It would never wash you off your horse (it washed a poor lady off her mule, once, at Panama,) or out of your gig—not it—which a tropical rain would be very apt to do. It would content itself by giving you plenty of rheumatism, and your death of cold. Aye, it might wish you into your coffin! but all fair and smoothly—drop, drop, drop—pretty fast, too; but steadily, always very steadily—a John Bull sort of a rain—persevering, quiet, taking hold of the day, and keeping hold with a kind of bull-dog pertinacity. Will it ever give in, till it melts the world away, dragged through its own mire?

It is enough to put an end to teetotalism; even Father Matthew himself would, perhaps, feel slight symptoms of incipient hydrophobia! and the very Priessnitz himself, were he here to-day, merely from being over-watered, might go through a process of self-water-cure, in the way of being cured of all predilections for water, forever. Though it may heal some mortal ills, what sufferings hath it ever alleviated like these it inflicts, in the form of rain? It owes us some consolation and compensation, in sooth; and it cannot easily liquidate that debt, let me tell it, with all its liquid lavishment.

The country in I am inhabiting seems half becoming an ark, and floating on the bosom of the waters. The land we live in seems melting from us, to one entire sad! "Rule, Britannia, Britannia rules the waves;" perhaps so; but the rains rule Britannia, sometimes, and very tyrannically, too. The British welkin seems altogether transformed into one vast floating watering pot, and instead of brandishing her trident, the worthy dame aforesaid had better put up a thick cotton four-and-sixpenny umbrella, and wear a good dreadnought over her shoulders, and a washable beaver over her brows, instead of the Roman helmet that is usually represented as adorning them. She should get a macintosh, too, for her Lion. A native of hot, dry climes, that poor quadruped must be a martyr to rheumatism here, exposed too, as he often is, by the unthinking, in all weathers.

Sleigh ho! patter, patter, plash, splash! If there are any shower-bath-makers in this neighborhood, perhaps they are more to be pitied than I am. They must see utter ruin staring them in the face, for shower-sick must everybody be for twenty years to come, at least—so at any rate I should say, from my present feelings.

How abominably happy those unsympathizing canvasing ducks look! U-u-u-ugh! I should like to set every duck jack of you on the duck-leg-stool, only that would be no punishment! How can we use their names as a term of endearment? Dear little duck, indeed! Malevolent monsters! with what wicked enjoyment they waddle and splash, there, just before my eyes, as though to say: "You tyrants, who slaughter us so cruelfully, full often, see how all-compensating nature makes us happy when you are wretched!" Next thus you eat duck and green peas, remember this, and don't boast of your superiority too much!—a puddle can make as happier than a principality makes some of you. Quack, quack!"

I must move from the window; the sight of that ecstatic duck, yonder, is too much for me; my philosophy is in an inverse ratio to duck-felicity. Hideous, hateful, odious, abhorrent things! I would sooner call a pet-child, or a pet-dog my screech-owl, or my sweet little alligator, than my duck, in future. Stay! there seems a more sober and quiet one—for really, some of them appear to become intoxicated on water! Infidel, who knows but this fumes of thousands and thousands of public houses in our not over-sober country, may ascend faintly to the clouds, and thence faintly descend again, and slightly alcoholize this rain-water quite enough to puzzle and perturb the brains of duck-lings! He appears to compassionate the miserable, featherless biped, man, without webbed feet. He greatly pities the helpless, deformed wretch! though the world was made for ducks, (and perhaps this juicy part of it particularly,) yet he has a heart under his plumage, and can feel for those poor dumb animals who cannot quack, nor express their sufferings in any reasonable language.

While gazing on that happy party, I had felt how flattered they might have been, had they known ourselves for such a bathing as they were enjoying was a "ducking." I left the window, and carelessly took up a newspaper lying on the table. My eye is caught by the pathetic announcement that "bobbin net is dull." Poor bobbin net! Perhaps it rained at Nottingham. "Mule-twist is languid;" a Scotch-mist in the mule-twist locality, I guess. "Potatoes are looking up," (probably that species called the pink-eyes.) The clouds were breaking there, depend on't!." Jacconets are depressed!" I feel for them from the very bottom of my heart. There was a very dew, at least, at the time, doubtless. But what is this? "Flour is lively?" Ah! I groan inwardly, and envy flour, savagely. I read no more: I care not, in this melancholy mood, for the information that pigs has risen or mangel-wurtzel fallen; for no fall, were it awful as the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, or the fall of all China itself (in the china closet, I mean); no fall, in short, whether of mangel-wurtzel, or the funds of foreign stock, or Nottingham stockings, can affect me now; nothing but a fall in the barometer. Fate seems to have resigned her shears for that redoubtable instrument; in fact, empires, dynasties, governments, constitutions, and institutions might actually depend on this same barometer. Just imagine such a rain as this at Paris! Our volatile friends would not, probably, recover their spirits under half-a-dozen revolutions at least. The first two or three might flash in the pan, their powder would be so damp.

Once more I saunter to the window, resolved to ignore the ducks, and be deaf to the exulting voice of quackery. Behold, a fly or chaise from the neighboring station has stopped at the door. Even if it only walked, it must have gone a pelting pace. I gaze on dissolving views of two wonderful creatures, that were once horses, and that now look like the damp remains of prodigious rats. They are taken off, or rather they slowly ooze out of the harness. If ever they had any fiery spirit of their own, after all this watering, it is assuredly only half-and-half now, and very strong of the water it must be! They look as if they would drop, and do drop, too; not in the common sense of the term; but the rain is pouring off them—and on them—in showers. Flowing manes, indeed, and streaming tails! What weather! In our Anglo-Saxon tongue, weather seems almost in fact "wotter!" Only take out the h and a, and in the Germann you have pretty nearly that horrible word itself! Oh! if our climate could be regularly tapped! afterwards it might be endurable to live in it. Such discontented reflections arise in the mind, when everything is seen through a rainy, cloudy medium; and then, your vexation has not a natural vent in tears, in this case. No, indeed, there is too much water already! Might not another drop make the cup overflow, and set us all swimming? In this extra damp atmosphere, too, could we ever dry our tears again? The pearly-flowing current might unhappily become chronic. Alack! we might go weeping about forever, like a willow, or the crying philosopher.

BEAUTIES OF BIVALVE LIFE.—The happiness of a clam at high water has passed into a proverb, though until lately the pleasure of an oyster "in the deep bosom of the ocean buried" has been extremely problematical. In this age of new ideas, however, an imaginative naturalist has pictured the life of an oyster as one of the happiest destinies. He has described him as carefully lodged in a dwelling of pearl, fed with the rich produce of the swelling tides, growing delicately corpulent with luxuries which he receives by the mere trouble of opening his mouth, soothed to slumber by the gentle ripple of the waves that roll above and around him, and cheered amid the intervals of his almost continuous dreams by the consideration that his death even is to be glorious as that of the white bull sacrificed to Jove, or the tender virgin who saved her country by her passage down the throat of the Minotaur. Faint ideas of discomfort are suggested by such traditions as those of the "oyster dressed in love;" but, on the whole, the lot of the oyster is a glorious one. He swims in a sensuous paradise until the crash of the oyster knife comes thundering in to put an end to his life; and then he lies white, succulent and resigned, ready to be offered an unresisting sacrifice to the gastronomic sensibilities of some refined palate. What can be more delightful to a medicative mind "well salted oyster" than the contemplation of such a glorious end?

INCONSISTENCIES.—A person arguing "merely to elicit the truth," and losing his temper because he gets the worst of the argument!

Peace society men breathing universal brotherhood, and indulging in inflammatory language that is more than likely to lead to a breach of the peace!

High-titled ladies sympathizing deeply with the slaves of America, and keeping up a number of milliners working all night; because they must have their dresses sent home by a certain time!

Irish members always abusing the Government, and yet too happy to accept a situation under it!

Agriculturists paying enormous prices for Peruvian guano, and allowing all the sewerage to be wasted in the cities!

Tradesmen giving their daughters the education of fine young ladies, and expecting them to mind the shop!

Condemning a boy to prison for stealing a handkerchief, and yet allowing a wealthy shopkeeper who has been convicted several times of using false weights, to get off with a small fine!

Patriots declaiming loudly about the liberty of the subject, and putting their servants in livery!

Government seeing the charitable necessity of a ten hours' bill in the cotton-mill, not passing a similar measure for the benefit of milliners, needle-women, and other classes, with whom the hours are only limited by the will of them.

REVIVALS.

Rev. L. M. Boyd, Summerville, Ala., writes: "We have just closed a protracted meeting at Gunnsville—ten or twelve conversions."

Rev. D. B. Lyne says:

"The Lord is among us in power at Apalachicola. Some are being added to the Church at all of our meetings. The class and prayer meetings are seasons of refreshing, where we are gathering strength and mustering our forces for a general engagement, in which we look with strong faith for victory on the Lord's side. When the battle is over you shall hear from us."

REV. DR. JENKINS.—It will be interesting to the numerous friends of Dr. Jenkins to learn that he has made his engagements to sail for China with the mission families who are on their way to Shanghai. He was united in marriage on Sunday night, the 16th inst., at Mulberry street Church, New York, by Rev. Dr. Bangs, to Miss Jeannett Billsland, of that City. They sail about this time in the ship Ariel. We heartily wish them a pleasant and speedy voyage to their distant port of destination, and many years of usefulness in the important field of labor they are to occupy. [S. C. Advocate.

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.

One of the old divines said: "He that sleeps in the place of worship is no better for the time than a corpse, at whose funeral the minister is preaching." And another of that worthy fraternity remarks: "That sleepers in religious assemblies are public nuisances, and ought to be driven from the place they so much disgrace."

Several centuries ago, old Bishop Aylmer, seeing his congregation pretty generally asleep, took his Hebrew Bible from his pocket and read a chapter, which roused attention; when the old minister sharply rebuked them, for sleeping when they might have understood, and listening when they knew not a word he said.

A clergyman at Exeter, in England, named Nicoll, once saw several aldermen asleep, and sat down. The silence of the preacher, and the movement among the hearers, woke the worshipful magistrates, and they stood up. The clergyman then rose and said: "The sermon is not yet finished, and now you are awake, I hope you will hearken more diligently."

Of the witty Dr. Smith, it is said, that preaching before King Charles, he saw that potentate asleep; he stopped short, and in a loud and altered tone of voice, three times called out: "Lord Lauderdale!" His lordship stood up and looked at the preacher, who addressed him with great composure: "My Lord, I am sorry to interrupt your repose, but I must beg of you not to snore so loud, lest you wake the King."

NORTH LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

LOCATING A CONFERENCE HIGH SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR: Under the above caption I read with pleasure in the Advocate of March 25th, which has just came to hand, your pertinent remarks, and the action of friends who are in favor of the High School in Claiborne. The Parish of Jackson, although not mentioned, is by no means the least in her resources or behind others in refinement. She, no doubt, will be sprung to action as well as her sister parishes. Bienville, Claiborne and Morehouse. The four of themselves have capital and resources sufficient to locate and endow an institution, that would be a credit to North Louisiana, and a source of rejoicing to the Conference for having sprung the matter.

But, sir, we do not wish to be selfish in central North Louisiana, but call upon the friends of Caddo, DeSoto and all the Parishes running East to the Mississippi and lying between the Arkansas and Texas lines, to come up to the rescue and face the music and take stock in the noble enterprise and share some of the honors and blessings in the great work.

Monuments are built for the hero and statesman for deeds of valor. Let the friends of education build one for the rising generation, that they in after time may point to it as being their Alma Mater. What say you, friends? Two things necessary to be done, and the matter is consummated—will and action—this done and the hardest task is over. The Committee must have some data to predicate a report to the next Conference, hence the necessity of early action on the part of the friends of education. Something tangible on the part of friends to the enterprise must be done, not suppositions, but figures. The Committee, no doubt, would be pleased to hear from the different parts of North Louisiana and communicate with the friends upon the subject. The Committee consists of C. G. Young, Caddo; A. A. Abney, North Bossier; A. P. King, Bienville.

While I am expressing to you, Mr. Editor, my gratitude on account of the action by the people, let me state to you some of the facilities and advantages Bienville or Sparta have with and probably over others. As regards health and accessibility no other parish of town can excel it in central North Louisiana. Already a meeting has been called and a site offered, and a disposition on the part of the people to give liberally has been manifested. As it regards morality she can't be excelled in North Louisiana, for the best of reasons; we have no grog-shops in the parish, and no license has been issued since the past year, by a decided vote of the people.

METHODIST PRESS.

The following, touching the utility, the necessity of religious newspapers, is extracted from a letter addressed by Bishop Andrew to the South Carolina Advocate. Like most of the good Bishop's efforts, whether with the pen or in the pulpit, it is home and central:

This brings me exactly to the point which I have in view. I have long been satisfied in my own mind that a well-conducted religious paper is the very best tract which can be put into circulation. Every body in the house will read a religious newspaper. It is not the sitting down to a book of many pages; its articles are brief and spicy; and then there is so great a variety of subjects that the most thoughtless may be tempted to look into it, and that look may lead to important results. And besides, the paper comes every week, and there is an air of freshness about it; it is news. Now we can never succeed without enlightening the people; and to success in doing this we must employ whatever wisdom of communication will be most likely to reach the greatest number of minds and hearts; and if my views are correct the religious newspaper is that medium, and the General Conference should take proper measures to enable the Church to avail herself of this agency in its most extensive and efficient form. What those measures should be we confidently hope that great body of wise men will be able to discover. Not one tenth part of our people take any of the Church papers. The fathers and mothers are indifferent on the subject, and in hundreds of Methodist families in which you will find from one to half a dozen secular papers, so that "while parents and children are kept well posted up on the subject of prices and politics, yet you ask in vain for one of those messengers which give us tidings of the glorious march of God's kingdom in the world. Is it any wonder that it is so difficult to move the great masses of our people in any great enterprise? They know nothing of what the church is doing. They have no religious paper in the family, nor had their fathers before them. Of papers that drill them into political partisanship ar teach them how to raise cotton, corn or hogs, they have enough and to spare; but of those which report the progress of the war between light and darkness, sin and holiness, the fathers are in a great measure ignorant, and desire their children to be so also. No wonder that these people know but little of the character or worth of the Church, and have too little genuine attachment for her institutions. I think it is high time this state of things was changed.

LOCAL PREACHERS.—A correspondent of the Richmond Christian Advocate, presents such facts and reflections as these:

In the M. E. Church, South, since its organization, the average increase annually of local preachers has been about two hundred, and that of the traveling from seventy to one hundred.

This increase in the locality is not owing so much to withdrawals from the itinerancy, as to an indisposition to enter it. But why this indisposition? There are doubtless various causes which operate—the chief of which are:

1. The economy of the Church says they can be true and faithful ministers of Christ, and yet remain at home engaged in secular employments, preaching only occasionally and performing no pastoral work.

2. The inadequate means of support which the people contribute.

3. An unwillingness on the part of the preachers to allow the authorities of the Church to direct their labors.

From aught that appears to the contrary, there will be in time to come a greater relative increase in the local ranks. Because:

1. The genius of our economy has in it a strong tendency to locations.

2. When people and preachers see this sanction given to an act which their own conscientious convictions of duty do not fully approve, they will come to regard it as right. This will be especially the case with such preachers as may yield to the temptations to avarice or worldly ease; while there will be a stronger disinclination fostered on the part of the people to support those who are given wholly to the work.

3. Such a state of things will paralyze the energies of both preachers and people, will prevent scores from entering the itinerancy and withdraw others.

4. As a further consequence, there will be large numbers of preachers collected in some sections, and other places will be left nearly or entirely destitute. This will inevitably result in evil. With no head to direct their labors, the Church cannot make them available for good to such an extent as they ought to be employed. They are then both a hindrance to one another and the itinerancy. It is no difficult matter under such circumstances, to yield to evil-surmising. The history of defections in different parts of our Church, and especially the Mutual Rights agitation of 1828, should serve as monitors.

5. The temptations to congregationalism and a settled ministry will be greatly increased.

There are startling facts which have transpired within the last few years in different parts of the Southern Methodist Church, but more particularly in the Northern branch, which are well calculated to awaken apprehension.

Here is a society of Methodists who are anxious to have Sabbath preaching, but who cannot be supplied with it by the regular pastor; for the most that he can do is to visit them once a month, or once in two weeks, and perform his pastoral work by exercising discipline, visiting the sick, etc. There is no local preacher living near them. They therefore resolve to "call" a favorite or talented local preacher from a distance, by offering a certain sum for a certain amount of labor. What is there in our economy to arrest such a proceeding? It needs no uncommon discernment to see that such a movement may easily result in the virtual, if not formal, rejection of the regular pastor, and the repudiation of his claims upon them. Other instances could be easily named which, in their bearing, have the same tendency. Any one can easily see that they are in deadly hostility to the system of itinerant preaching.

Let the elements and influences adverted to continue to operate without any well directed and timely efforts to arrest them, and employ all the talents of the Church to the accomplishment of our high mission of spreading Scriptural holiness, and the day is not distant when our glorious, Heaven-honored itinerancy will be completely subverted, and "Ichabod" written on the doors of our closed and forsaken temple. Such a day would be direful indeed to the Methodist Church, and to all the Churches of this glorious country. The reaction of such a sad event would be felt at the heart of the American Republic, and especially the heart of every American Church.

ONE WAY TO BACKSLIDE.—The editor of the Memphis Advocate, among other things, says this—our scissors would be more liberal and probably just, if space permitted:

There is any quantity of these religious butterflies who flourish gayly in camp-meeting sunshine. What causes them? Why is there, comparatively, so little of steadfast principle and undaunted integrity, of hungering and thirsting after righteousness, of daily struggling against sin, and panting for constant spiritual communion, in these days of revivals and protracted meeting? Is not the Gospel preached with as much purity and power as ever? Are not conversions as deep and genuine? Why, then, should wide and general revival influence be accompanied and closely followed with so much spiritual sloth and miserable apostacy?

We think this sad spiritual reaction may be accounted for by the very frequency itself of revivals. God has of late so widely and so frequently poured out His Spirit in the revival of the Church, and conversion of souls, that many make idols of these precious seasons of grace, and rely only upon them for religious strength and comfort. The revival over, their efforts are relaxed in a measure; temptations pours in; difficulties arise; heaviness of spirit follows; and, instead of entering at once and vigorously into the moral conflict presented, they yield to sloth and despondency, and resolve to await for another revival to "get their spiritual strength renewed." Hence it is, that for daily holy living, are substituted spasmodic religious exercises.

MISSIONARY REPORT.

The Ninth Annual Report of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is before us. We have the following account of the Anniversary Meeting:

ANNIVERSARY MEETING.

The Ninth Annual Meeting of the Society was held in the Brook Street Church, on the evening of the third Monday of April, as the Constitution provides. Rev. Dr. Stevenson, one of the Vice Presidents of the Society, in the Chair. The exercises were introduced by reading the Scriptures, and a suitable hymn by Rev. Dr. Parsons, after which Rev. Geo. Strother, an aged and venerable minister of the Church in Kentucky, offered up to the throne of heavenly grace a fervent and appropriate prayer.

The Secretary then read the Annual Report, giving an account of the present condition of the Society and our operations, both in the foreign and domestic work.

The Rev. Dr. Durbin, the Missionary Secretary of the M. E. Church, was then introduced to the Society. He had been unanimously invited by the Board to be present and participate in the exercises of the Anniversary. On Sabbath he preached to a large and deeply attentive and interested congregation, in Sehon Chapel. The sermon was one of the best, admirably adapted to the occasion, and we trust, made the most powerful impression on the large audience who so silently and respectfully listened to the speaker. His subject was "The Signs of the Times," in reference to the prosperity and success of the Missionary enterprise. In the afternoon he delivered a most interesting address in the Eighth Street Church, to the Sabbath School of the charge. Brother Cox, the worthy Superintendent, had pledged the school for $200, for the outfit of the Colbert Institute. The sum was more than made up, the collection amounting to $214. At the Anniversary meeting his address was powerful and eloquent; his theme, "The Fruits of Missions."

A collection was taken up after the sermon of Sabbath, amounting to near $400, which was highly creditable to the congregation, and also one of $532 at the Anniversary meeting, which was large and liberal, and plainly declared the deep interest of the audience on the occasion. The total amount raised at these meetings, was over eleven hundred dollars.

These collections are to be continued in the different churches, at such times as the pastors and officers may designate.

Among the pleasing incidents of the evening we would notice the election of the Rev. Dr. Breckenridge, of the First Presbyterian Church in this city, and Rev. Dr. Dennison, of the Episcopal Church, and Pastor of St. Paul's Church in this city, (who were both present) as life members of the Parent Missionary Society.

After the collection, the Society proceeded to the election of Officers and Managers for the ensuing year.

In his report, the Secretary, Dr. Sehon, says: "In looking at our separate departments of Missionary labor, as a branch of the Church of Christ, we have abundant cause of rejoicing. At the end of the first year of our separate organization as a Church, the amount raised for Missions was $68,529; for the year ending May, 1847, $72,697; for the year ending May, 1848, $62,613; for the year ending May, 1849, $65,495; for the year ending May, 1850, $85,973; for the year ending May, 1851, $113,801; for the year ending May, 1852, $123,163; for the year ending May, 1853, $166,901; and for the year just closing, the amount will be considerably above that of last year. We have now more than 300 Missions in our foreign and domestic work, with some 270 missionaries, and about 70,000 church members in these different Missions; while we have 24,179 children receiving instruction in schools already established." The Missions of the M. E. Church, South, are as follows:

1. Those in destitute portions of our regular work; 2, among the people of color; 3, among the German population of our own country; 4, among the Indian tribes; 5, China and California. (Now returned as the Pacific Annual Conference.)

It will be seen that the grand total of our Missionary collections for eight years amounts to $761,172. This is what the Southern Church has done, since its organization, exclusive of the missionary year just expired. This shows that we have done something certainly, and that we are doing more and more. Her collections are, however, far below what they should be—an almost infinitesimal per cent. on the actual resources of the Church.

It would gratify a plausible curiosity could we sketch the individual history of these dimes and dollars, which make up the aggregate. The givers—here a widow with her mite—a child with a penny—a semi-millionaire with his larger sum absolutely, but relatively less. Then there is the sacrifice and tears it has cost some of the contributors, the warm heart-felt prayers that have gone with the money. The many, many sermons, preached to awaken an interest, and to persuade cold hearts and reluctant pockets, would fill a score of books each bigger than King James's Bible. What an array of talent, great and small, has been engaged in getting it all together? How many quills have been driven hard and long? How many tongues have been eloquent in pleading; how many platform anniversaries, reports endless and solemn and agents multitudinous, have contributed to this money-getting for the Lord's purposes? A tithe of the trouble, in any other course, would have secured us much. But as it is, religious enterprises move slow and hard; worldly undertakings go easier.

Thus gotten, it has been expended upon the objects above enumerated, wisely and well we trust. How many souls it has saved and is saving, we cannot tell now—never, it may be; but we hope and believe, and are willing to work more and get more. We would like to give more of this report, but have not space. Let all get it, read, mark and inwardly digest its contents.

THOUGHTS BY THE WAY.

THE SOUTHERN COMMERCIAL CONVENTION—THINGS IN CHARLESTON—HOUSES—GRAVEYARDS—CHURCHES—CHURCH-SITTING—SINGING—THE YOUNG—THE PREACHERS.

RICHMOND, April 18, 1854.

MR. EDITOR: I have a moment of leisure and pause to drop a thought or two to your paper. I have been down to Charleston, S. C., and happened to be there during the week of the meeting of the great South-western Commercial Convention. This was by far the largest body of the kind that has ever assembled in the South for similar purposes. And for its learning, ability and eloquence it has not and cannot be surpassed. The grand object had in view by the meeting of these conventions is the general development of the resources of the Slave States. Agricultural, mercantile, mineral and mental resources, available for the highest and most important purposes, within those States, have long been permitted to lie unappropriated or unemployed. Now, the people, weary with the delays of mere politicians, have taken the matter in hand, and they will never rest until something worthy of these States shall be done. By glancing over the proceedings, when you shall receive a copy of them, you will perceive that questions of the utmost moment were before the body, discussed and acted on. Among those deemed of first importance were the Pacific Railroad scheme, introduced and ably defended by A. G. Pike, Esq., of Arkansas, a lawyer and statesman of fine abilities. The scheme for encouraging home education, home book-making, home support of authors, introduced and supported by Rev. C. R. Marshall, well known in your region. Other plans, purely commercial, or belonging to the carrying interests were also acted on with great unanimity. But, after all, if we cannot school our children at home, and regulate, for our own advantage, the book and periodical interests—the Archimedean lever power—what is the great use of troubling ourselves about the other departments of business, except the mere tillage of the ground? The South should treat the North like a great family; willing to let them grow and prosper by all lawful and constitutional means, and then take the same course herself, and like two families, each provoke the other to a generous competition and a noble rivalry in humanizing and Christianizing mankind. Our conventions will throw light on the interests of the South and in so doing render a most lasting service to the country at large. But as you have already seen the newspaper reports on the assemblage, I will say nothing further at present.

Of the cordial reception of the Convention by the authorities of the city, too much can scarcely be said. Neither money, pains, time or care seemed stinted or measured. They were poured out with a bountifulness as characteristic as her chivalry is renowned; and the twelve hundred true-hearted Southerners left the heart of the old Palmetto State, feeling the utmost kindness, good will and respect for her citizens. The event will be a memorable one.

The style of building in Charleston is peculiar. As a general rule the gable of the house fronts the street and the side is adorned, or deformed with a piazza running the whole length of the building. But many of their public buildings and churches are very fine—superb, indeed, in a few instances. There is old St. Michael's, a church built by the old Colonists and planned by Sir Christopher Wren, that looks venerable and grand. Near this building a statue of the Earl of Chatham once stood, and when the British cannonaded the city a ball passed through the cupola, and falling, struck the statue and broke off one arm. It has been removed to the Orphan House and is one of the finest pieces of statuary I ever looked upon. It was intended by the Colonists as a compliment to Pitt for the eminent services rendered in their behalf in the British Parliament. I also visited St. Philips, and walked in the adjoining grave-yard among its ancient monuments and quaint old stones, on which many a sermon did I read. I was struck with the uniformity of the piety, when living, of all the dead, and looked all around in vain for the grave of one solitary sinner. Do sinners never die in Charleston? Nevertheless, I was thrilled with the loving tributes of husbands and wives and dear, bereaved children, and sad and weeping parents, inscribed on those tablets, and I left the holy spot a wiser and a better man.

But I must here notice the fact that this church possessed for me the peculiar charm of having once been the place of the ministry of the illustrious Wesley. Perhaps it was in the first house that stood on the ground. I must not fail to notice the singular politeness shown me at the door of the church by the negro sexton. He saw at a glance that I was a stranger, and in a moment proffered me a seat with the most obliging air and appropriate terms that any man could have employed. Ah! thought I, how much is lost everywhere among certain Christians for the want of polite attention to strangers at the door. Can any body take a hint? On one morning I visited the new Catholic Church, built throughout of red sand-stone, and the finest and noblest architectural structure in the city. Where a denomination of Protestants is told that her poor architectural deformities and mean caricatures of God's temples, are among the houses of her inefficiency, and the repulsion dress she wears weans the young from the altars of their fathers, the reply is often made that fine buildings direct the mind. If this were so the hordes of laboring poor, wood-sawyers, washerwomen and waggoners, who gathered there had never said their prayers. But instead of that, they were undisturbed by aught around them. Nothing could divert their attention; and they seemed not to see the splendor of the Gothic arches and costly ceilings that rose above them. It takes weaker minds than the poorest Roman Catholics to be affected by the objection to beautiful and magnificent churches. Yet on this point much sin is committed by the ruling powers. The tears and sweat and blood of millions of the poor are coined into gold to build many of these buildings. Hence the worshipers in them often display the last degree of disparity between themselves and their churches. They live in shanties, eat coarse food, dress as best they can, and with great economy of water wash up once a week and go into a temple, whose very walls have spread the blight of poverty and ignorance upon them for life, to pay their tribute of prayer to the Holy Virgin.

Still, there is a middle ground; anything may be pushed to excess; and I think our Church runs too much to the other extreme. I worshipped at Cumberland street. The outside of this church is enough to repel any ardent person who loves our Zion, and whose soul goes out in anthems of joyful praise within her courts, as her worshippers swell the strain:

"I love thy Church, Oh God!
Her walls before Thee stand."

But, though the Church is not the house, the house has much to do with all these things. The outside, however, is fine to my eye, compared to the dingy, uninviting interior. The style is nearly antediluvian, backs of the seats high, perpendicular and not a cushion for the aged and infirm. And worse than all, in this refined and elegant city, the family compact is stigmatized, and husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, thrust into different apartments, as Mr. Wesley was compelled to seat the colliers in New Castle, more than a century ago.

At night I worshipped at Dr. Cross's church; I think it is called Bethel. This church is fine enough inside. Night drew her veil over its exterior, so I saw it not. Families sat apart there. How can a mother tolerate the idea of seeing her sweet boys strown about—among she knows not whom? Or how can parents worship while their children are unattended to? Apply it to family prayer and see how it would look.

The hymn was read and the singing man started "Old Hundred!" Christians of Charleston! is that what you call singing? Why, one almost expects the ghost of Martin Luther to rise and rebuke us for putting upon the torturing rack that famous old heaven-born tune.

But the closing hymns were pretty well gone through with, and the "inhabitants of the rock" really sang. Heaven prosper them. But no church can ever take her just position and exert her her legitimate influence in a city or growing community, entrammeled and crumped and kept in the back-ground, and deprived of her own children who leave her bosom to find a place of becoming services. Charleston has a population of nearly 50,000, and there never comes a Sabbath when 15,000 of them go to church. There is not room for that number.

Then, at a low estimate there are 30,000 left unfolded and without a shepherd. What a field is here! The poor boys and girls of the city to-day in twenty years will be among its powerful citizens. Convert them. If old sinners will court the doom of the unconverted, let them go; but save the young! save the young! But all will be done that can be done. Dr. W. Smith, Dr. Somers, Dr. Wightman, Dr. Cross and other noble self-sacrificing, earnest ministers are there, and the continent can furnish none superior in their forte. The day must come for our Zion to take her position and expand her great heart over the beautiful city of Charleston. God bless the people of that city.

SALATHIEL.

THE COAST RAILROAD—ITS ADVANTAGES, SOCIAL AND MORAL—BAY ST. LOUIS—JUDGE BEVERLY—MR. RUSS—FRUIT AND MARSH LANDS—SEA ISLAND COTTON—BOARDING-HOUSES—REV. MR. CROSBY—DOCTORS AND LAWYERS.

Correspondence of the N. O. Christian Advocate.]

BAY ST. LOUIS, April 26, 1854.

A very lively interest is felt here in the the result of the vote your city is about to give in relation to the railroad connection with Mobile. The Legislatures of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama have done their duty; the President of the United States has suspended the sale or entry of the lands along the route, it being presumed that Congress will make a grant for the benefit of the enterprise; and all that is needed now is for New Orleans to put her shoulder to the wheel. Vote the tax; issue the bonds; enable us to realize funds for a commencement; the community will do the rest, and the road will speedily pay its liabilities, and leave a large margin for profit besides. The most practical and experienced men are agreed that this road will pay. It will carry the great Eastern mail, a profitable contract, as Messrs. Geddes & Co., and their predecessors, well know. It will carry all the freight required by the sea-coast, which, of course, will increase in a ratio with the increase of population; an increase that may be calculated at ten per cent. per annum, after the completion of the road. It will transport nine-tenths of the passengers, who are now conveyed by the mail boats; and, if it avoids the error of those boats, and substitute for exorbitant charges, a low tariff of charges, the travel will be greatly increased. This sea-coast will not only become a suburb of New Orleans, and a lodging-place of many of its citizens; but it will be resorted to by thousands of the laboring classes, with their families, on days of recreation. It will, in fact, be your bath-house. Here, too, will spring up seminaries of learning; more spacious churches may be built; here—for this is missionary ground—the Methodist Church should station some of her greatest orators every Summer; men whose reputation would attract the multitude, and whose fervor and eloquence would shake down the citadels of pride and sin. Go to the polls, then, I say; vote the tax; issue your bonds; build this road; your citizens will come hither by thousands; every Sabbath they will come; and let them come with what motive they may; be they proud and dissolute, indifferent or sceptical; we will find some Whitfield to convince and awaken them; some Summerfield to captivate and persuade; some Bascom to bind them with the power of oratory; some Winans to overwhelm them with the force of his logic, and the terror of his invective. The Church has such men in her ranks, and here, where you concentrate population, is the place to station them; here, where the silent forest stills the tumultuous mind, and the ever-surging billows teach the lesson of eternity.

I find the Bay St. Louis a very pleasant place, indeed; it seems to be extending itself westward quite rapidly. Some four miles west of the wharf Judge Beverly, formerly of your city, has a charming residence, and is exerting his horticultural science in the culture of the olive, the grape, and the pear, besides other fruits. He rejects not only what is inferior, but even what most people consider superior, and retains only the very best of every variety. He has a grape that I have never seen anywhere else; and pears that readily command fifty cents each.

Next to the Judge, Mr. Asa Russ, a gentleman of means, and of great energy and intelligence, is experimenting on a large scale with the marsh lands; a very important experiment for this part of the country. He is ditching and draining; erecting flood-gates and wind-mills; and on that portion which has been reclaimed every species of vegetable, but especially potatoes, cabbage, asparagus, artichoke, okra and melon, have been found to flourish; and the best cotton of the sea-island, or black-seed, variety that I have ever met with. This cotton was first introduced into this county by the late Gen. Joor, of Wilkinson. It is now cultivated by Mr. Weems, of Grande Coquille Island, near the Rigolets, and by Judge Daniell and Col. Claiborne of this county, near the east mouth of Pearl river. The latter gentlemen has procured his seed from Gov. Seabrook, of Edisto Island, South Carolina, the most scientific and extensive planter of that State; and a portion from another planter a (Mr. Burden, I think) who sold his cotton some years since at from seventy-five cents to a dollar per pound.

I see not why the culture of this valuable staple should not be extended in the Southern districts of Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi. Mr. O'Brien, an enterprising citizen of your city, who owns at this place a beautiful property (formerly Gen. Ripley's) is about to embark in it. Mr. Russ informs me that Col. Claiborne will be able to supply any quantity of seed by the first day of January, next. His address is "Pearlington, Mississippi."

There is no hotel at Bay St. Louis, unless I may so style the spacious and excellent boarding-house of Mme. Nixon, and a very quiet and comfortable place kept by Mme. Bellouard, a creole lady, celebrated for her coffee and fish. There is a house, likewise, at the head of the wharf, kept by a Frenchman, where a traveler may get a good bed and a refreshing meal. And, I believe, Mrs. Arnold, the accommodating post-mistress here, occasionally takes boarders. I find at Bay St. Louis no established seminary of learning. The ever active Jesuits projected one, which broke up in confusion, and under scandalous circumstances. There is a fine opening, which, I hear, is to be filled by the Rev. M. Crosby, of Pearlington, a minister of your Church, and a man of decided talents, energy and good works. Such a man might build up a High-School or College.

I find here three respectable physicians—Drs. Oliver, Eager and Beverly; and two lawyers, Messrs. Pierce and Monet; the former a young, but excellent attorney, and the latter one of the shrewdest, and altogether one of the best lawyers, especially in land cases, that I know of.

In my next you shall hear something of Pass Christian and Mississippi City.

Very truly, yours, JOHN BUNYAN.

INQUIRERS IN FOREIGN LANDS.—Brother Jacoby writes that young Americans who have a temporary residence in Germany, write to him for religious advice, and he promises us extracts from their letters at an early day. This augurs well for the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ in that land.

Free Colored Population of Louisiana.

When we last met, my young friends, our conversation turned upon the social condition of the native free colored population of Louisiana. I have since then often thought of this subject, and the more I reflect upon it the more I am convinced that we are sadly remiss towards these people. Even in matters wherein we should be guided by the most common principles of justice, we seem to falter the moment they are concerned. We see that while the Public School Fund tax is living upon their property and is paid by them without hesitation, they, with the exception of a paltry sum of two thousand dollars payable yearly and to be paid only for four years, have to provide, from their own private purses, for the expenses of their Public Schools. But let that pass.

Here are men born and reared among us, in all the walks of life, planters, merchants, and mechanics of unquestionable respectability, some of them of no mean attainments in artistic as well as scientific pursuits, whose devotion to the country has long since been tested and established, whose education and acquirements leave no room for doubting that they fully understand and appreciate the advantages of self-government, in the true American acceptation of the term. Men, in fine, who by birth, education, and feelings, are fully identified with our country and our institutions, and who are yet suffered to remain among us on a worse footing than aliens, for even they, be their qualifications for such whom what they may, are, by a simple residence of two years and without any other probation, entitled to the privileges of American citizens if they choose—I am almost tempted to say, condescend—to require the investiture of these precious rights; while these men, who are above being suborned by political jugglers and have all the desirable qualifications of true Americans, are, by our social organization, for ever debarred from the exercise of the smallest political privilege in consequence of a blemish for which they, least of all, are to be blamed, and which they, at any rate, have nobly retrieved. Is this right? Is it even sound policy to keep these men eternally within the pale of political incapacity, especially now that we are outflanked by universal suffrage unshackled by such restraint as might yet make it supportable; for, to the eternal shame of those who were accessory to the act, our last Legislature has, for the time being, left us no other alternative than physical force for obtaining for our ballot-box even that protection—a registry law—which our last constitution, as defective as it is, intended for it.

Now, in all conscience, would not the requirements of our interior polity be sufficiently met by excluding these people from eligibility to office, without depriving them also of what I, for one, think them, in strict justice, entitled to: the right of participating in the election of those who are to administer politically upon their lives and fortunes. But while I should be disposed to use every honorable means to obtain this boon for them, I should as strenuously object to this privilege being extended to any other but the native born of Louisiana, because I am convinced that the same class of either and especially the free States, are by such a state of abjection and contempt in their moral sentiments must be so far warped as to unfit them for the exercise of such a right in this State. Indeed, I should even regret to see this privilege granted to any of the native born who do not pay a tax, because he, who in Louisiana, after three or four years' labor, has not, his expenses paid, realized enough to purchase himself a slave to help him in his labors, or a small piece of property to shelter him, must have some failing which must unfit him for a proper exercise of it.

This question has not yet fixed general attention, and has, I believe, never been agitated in Louisiana. It will, I am pretty certain, find many supporters among our resident population of native as well as of foreign birth; but it will also, I am fearful, meet with much opposition from highly honorable men, whose deep-rooted prejudices will, at the first blush, deny the ascendancy over their better judgment. But I must be egregiously mistaken in my estimate of their superior understanding, if, on maturely weighing the merits of the case, and deliberately and calmly scanning late events, they should not muster prejudices which they will be another era, and heartily join in an act strictly just as it is eminently politic. But as it may, and be their unfortunate prejudices ever so great, they must in their heart feel and deplore the strange anomaly which the social condition of these men in the midst offers. They cannot gainsay the respectability of these people; their usefulness as members of our community; their fitness, in point of education and sentiments, to exercise the rights of American citizens. They cannot but acknowledge the devotion of them to their native soil, which devotion has been tested on more than one bloody field, which in times of peace has shown itself proof against all the allurements of foreign corruption. Yet, with all these qualities to recommend them, we still keep these men excluded from the exercise of the smallest political privilege, while, without any kind of discrimination, we lavish upon foreigners, in every respect below their inferiors, our most precious political rights; and that, too, to such an extent as, for a moment, to have endangered our institutions.

Ponder over this, ye worthy citizens of Louisiana, and then allow your consciences to dictate your line of duty. A LOUISIANIAN.

The Will of Peter the Great.

This strange document, which is said to have appeared in La Presse (Paris) in 1818, is from the Baltimore Times:

1. To have the Russian nation constantly at war, that the soldiery may be always disciplined and ready for action. Allow the country rest, but for replenishing of the treasury, and organizing the armies, and choosing the opportune moment for attack; making, in this manner, peace serve war and war serve peace, in the interest, aggrandizement and prosperity of Russia.

2. To attract, by all possible means, the most efficient and celebrated military officers in Europe during war, and highly educated, intellectual men of all countries in time of peace, that the Russians may enjoy the advantages of other countries without losing their identity.

3. To take part on all occasions in the disputes and contentions among the States of Europe, especially those of Germany, which are the nearest, we are the most directly interested.

4. To subdue Poland; foment there constant rivalries and disturbances—gain their colonels by bribery—influence their diets, and by insurrections take action in the election of their kings—their partisan cliques, and for their protection keep them Muscovite troops to remain in the country until the moment of complete occupation; then, the neighboring powers make opposition, and them at once by dismembering the country, thus giving to each a part.

5. To take what we can from Sweden, and make any attack by her a pretext for subjugation. For this, separate her from Denmark, and likewise Denmark from Sweden; and foment with care all animosities and rivalries between them.

6. To select wives for the Russian princes among the princesses of Germany, for the multiplying of family alliances conciliates interests, and by them will unite Germany to our cause, and increase our influence in that country.

7. To attend assiduously to forming an alliance with England for our commerce, the assistance of that power we must need for the purpose of building up a maratime force, and will be of the greatest service in supplying it with her gold in exchange for our lumber and other productions. Continual intercourse of her merchants and sailors will accustom them to navigation and commerce.

8. Extend ourselves unceasingly towards the North, the whole length of the Baltic, and likewise to the South, by the Black Sea.

9. To take every possible means of getting Constantinople and the Indies, (for he who is there will be prime sovereign of the world,) to make war continually in Turkey and Persia, establishing fortresses on the Black Sea, get the control of the sea, by degrees, and also of the Baltic, which is a double point necessary to the realization of our project; accelerating, as much as possible, the decay of Persia; penetrate the Persian Gulf; reestablish, if it be possible, by the way of Syria, the ancient commerce of the Levant; advance to the Indies, which are the great depot of the world. Once there, we can do without the gold of England.

10. Obtain and carefully cultivate the alliance of Austria; support (apparently) the ideas of future dominion over Germany; excite animosities and rivalries among her people—thus causing each party to claim the assistance of Russia, and exercise over this country a species of protection that will prepare for future dominion.

11. Interest the House of Austria in the expulsion of the Turks from Europe, and foment their dissensions at the moment of the conquest of Constantinople (having excited war among the old States of Europe) by giving to Austria a portion of the conquest, which afterwards we can be reclaimed.

12. Unite within your borders all the United or schismatic Greeks now scattered in Hungary and Poland, making ourselves the centre, establishing beforehand an independent church by a species of autocracy and sacred supremacy.

13. Sweden dismembered; Persia subdued; Poland subjected, and Turkey conquered, armies united, and the Black Sea and the Baltic guarded by our ships-of-war. It will be necessary to propose separately, and with the greatest secrecy, to the Court of Versailles, and afterwards to that of Vienna, to divide with them the empire of the universe.

If one of the two accept this offer so flattering to their ambition and self-love, let her be to annihilate the other, commencing a contest the issue of which cannot be doubtful, for Russia may take possession of all the East and a greater part of Europe.

If both nations should refuse the offer made by Russia, (which is not at all probable,) it will be necessary to excite quarrels among them which will engage them in a war with each other. Then Russia, improving the fleeting moment, advances her troops (assembled beforehand) on France and Germany at the same time. Two equadrons proceed—one by the way of Azof, the other by the port of Archangel—to be filled with Asiatic hordes, under the command of our armed ships in the Black Sea and the Baltic. Advance by the Mediterranean and the ocean, inundate France on one side, while Germany is inundated on the other, and these two countries conquered, the rest of Europe will pass under the yoke without firing a gun. Thus may and should be effected the subjugation of Europe.

D'ISRAELI.—The London Times, in a review of the Biography of D'Israeli, just published, claims—"Benjamin D'Israeli! what a name for the historian, the physiologist, the statesman, the philosopher and the divine! How will we approach the many-sided?" We cannot bring him up to the indignation, the scorn and the horror of the country, for we have all a common interest in his success, applaud his triumphs and approve his skill. We dare not propose him for general imitation, for Heaven knows, and we can guess how the success has been achieved, the triumphs used, the skill directed. What a model of pluck, of perseverance, of self-command, of endurance, of intellectual vigor, is this brazen-faced, ringleted, imperturable man, as he stands before us, defying the knife of the dissector, and smiling sardonically at the worst efforts of his foes."

OBITUARY:

DIED—In great peace, March 5th, 1854, at his residence in Sumpter Co., Ala., JOSEPH GILLESPIE, Sen'r., aged about 80 years. At an early age he removed from Ireland, his native country, to this. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a man of the most unbending integrity and of great consistency of character. When the messenger, Death, came, he was ready. In his life he had given unmistakable evidence of his faith in God, and upon his dying bed he exhibited the most unfaltering confidence in the promises of God.

His calmness and serenity as well as perfect soundness of mind at the approach of death, was indeed cheering to his wife and children, and greatly encouraging to his friends and brethren. The questions, are you ready? are you willing to die? were always answered most promptly in the affirmative. He was not a man of loud pretensions. He chose the humble, quiet walks of life. A few days before his death he called the writer to his bed-side, told him that he had made to his satisfaction and that of his wife and children, a distribution of his earthly goods, and requested him to perform the religious services of his funeral.

To the question, "Brother Gillespie, shall I tell the congregation you died trusting in God?" He unhesitatingly responded, "Yes." Shall I tell them that you feel His rod and His staff, they comfort you?" "Yes, yes, yes!" was his prompt reply. He lived esteemed and died lamented by all who knew him.

May the Lord more than supply the place of husband and father to his bereaved widow and children. DAN'L DUNCAN.

Belmont, Ala., April 24, 1854.

The subject of this memoir, Sister JUSTINE HELEN PERKINS, wife of Richard T. Cross, Esq., departed this life on the 22d inst., aged 2 years and 11 months. For many years she had been the subject of much bodily affliction, sometimes suffering great pain, yet without murmuring, but was patient, calm and submissive under it all, trusting in God. Comforting herself in His Word, frequently repeating the whole of the XXIII Psalm from memory.

Sister Cross was blessed with a deeply pious mother, who impressed upon her mind all the duties of the Christian character; to this parental training was added the influence of the Sabbath School, which she delighted to attend, first as a scholar, subsequently as a teacher, when her precarious health would permit.

At the age of about 20 years, and a year before her marriage, she united herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was of the number of faithful ones that composed, at that time, the "little flock" at Thibodaux she loved the Church of her choice, and all of God's ministers and people, and the instituted and prudential means of grace. She was devotedly fond of the class-meeting, and attended her class when able to do so, to the comfort and joy of her thereby refreshed soul, often speaking of her rich enjoyment in these spiritual feasts.

She was a constant and regular reader of the Bible; to read it consecutively through once each year was her constant practice and custom for many years. Her's was a fine spirit without guile; and the evidence of her acceptance with God, through her adorable Redeemer, was clear; and she loved to dwell upon the theme of experimental religion. She was always a dutiful and feeling daughter, of a sweet and amiable disposition; a gentle and loving wife, kind and affectionate sister; benevolent to the poor, a warm friend, courteous towards all; those who knew her best esteemed her most. But she is gone! A few moments before her spirit took its flight, she was asked by her mother, "Daughter, do you now put your trust in God? Have you entire reliance on your Saviour?" to which she promptly and distinctly replied, "Yes, ma, I do." As if wishing to leave her dying testimony to the truth of her favorite Psalm, these were her last words. Without a struggle, while surrounded by her mother, husband, brothers, relatives, friends and servants, bending in breathless silence over, she fell asleep in Jesus, leaving them all, and a sweet little daughter, two years old, to follow her and rejoin her in that better land.

"Her flesh shall slumber in the ground,
Till the last trumpet's joyful sound;
Then burst the chains with sweet surprise,
And in her Saviour's image rise."

Thibodaux, April 28, 1854.

[illegible]—At Rocky Springs, April 19, of inflammatory dysentery, Mrs. JANE MARIA, wife of Dr. James R. Coleman, and daughter of Hann and Mary Wilson Page, of Mansfield, Va., in the 46th year of her age. The subject of this notice was born in Virginia, December 7, 1808. She was brought up in the Episcopal Church, but after her removal in 1843, to Mississippi, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which she lived a life of an exemplary Christian, and after a short illness, died as she had lived.

Sister Coleman leaves many friends to mourn her loss, but they sorrow not as those without hope, for our loss is her gain. May the sanctify this affliction to the good of the [illegible] in this place and friends of the deceased, is the prayer of her Pastor. B.

Rocky Springs, April 25, 1854.

Richmond Christian Advocate please copy.

We see by the Court Records, that the two Misterletters, White, of Buffalo, and Lawrence, of Appiug, (N. H.) have been placed under two good dollars bonds, each, for making and using, imitatione of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It is right. If the law should protect men in imposition at all, it should certainly protect them from being imposed upon by a worthless counterfeit of such a medicine as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. We can only complain that the punishment is not half enough. The villain, who would for paltry gain, deliberately trifle with the health of his fellow man, by taking their lips, the cup of hope, when they are drug, and substituting a falsehood—an utter [illegible], should be punished at least as severely as he who counterfeits the coin of his country. [illegible] Co. Banner, Carrollton, Ill.

THE IRISH EXODUS.—It is stated that in Cork the tide of emigration has become so formidable that the ordinary vessels are quite insufficient, and the local steamship company has placed two additional steamers on the station between Cork and Liverpool. In Belfast the price of the steerage passage to New York and Quebec has been considerably advanced. It is an important fact that military recruiting is still fairly successful in Ireland, notwithstanding the vast amount of emigration.

LOCAL MATTERS.

GRAND JURY REPORT.—We copy from the True Delta of yesterday the following abridgment of the Report of the Grand Jury, rendered on Saturday last:

The Grand Inquest is pained to see a great increase of crime and perversion of just. The lock-up of the First District was found in a "filthy and disgusting condition," and the cells are considered as hardly fit habitations for wild beasts—being too confined, and wholly without proper means of ventilation. It is recommended that a better situated lock-up be obtained.

The Workhouse was found to be in good order, with the exception of the portion in which slaves are kept. The Superintendent is greatly blamed for not keeping the Wardens to their post during the night time. He is also blamed for discharging prisoners without any authority but his own will. Of those discharges, seventeen or eighteen are noted as having taken place on the 27th of March last, some with and some without releases from the Recorders. None of these prisoners, thus released, had served out the time for which they had been committed. Their discharges were dated March 25, but they were detained till the 27th; and this is looked upon as exceedingly suspicious, as the 27th was election day. The appointment of the Superintendent (Sullivan) as Commissioner of Election, is also considered as highly censurable.

The building termed the "House of Refuge for Boys" is thought to be but a poor affair, and a better one is recommended. The House of Refuge for Girls is also too small.

The Parish Prison was found to be clean and well-kept, but the wing appropriated for the insane was almost uninhabitable. A better asylum is recommended in the old Workhouse building in the Third District. It is also thought that suitable nurses should be employed instead of vagrants from the Workhouse.

An application of soap and water is recommended for the Third District lock-up.

The Charity Hospital is as usual praised, and the various Orphan Asylums are appropriately noticed, and their management generally lauded. The Third District Boys' Asylum is recommended to the favorable consideration of the charitable, and a high encomium is passed on its superintendent, "the Orphan's Father," Mr. Anthony Rasch.

Drunkenness is deplored by the jury; the general license system objected to, and the sale of liquor to slaves reprobated. It is intimated that oftentimes the police are leagued with cabaret-keepers, and recommended that a portion of the police be placed at the disposal of the District Attorney or the Attorney General, to ferret out offenders. It is also recommended that groceries be closed at an early hour in the evening.

The police force is considered "a farce" and a "cheat," by which the people have too long been imposed upon. In the First District police, at least, "dishonesty and peculation" are suspected to have been long rampant, but the jury hadn't time to examine into the matter thoroughly. They leave that duty to their successors in office.

The practice of holding elections in coffee-houses is condemned in toto, and it is hoped that it will be no more indulged in.

The report is signed by A. Gordon Bakewell as Foreman.

BOARD OF ASSISTANT ALDERMEN.—This Board met last night, the President, Mr. Campbell, in the Chair, and a quorum present. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved, and a message from the Mayor, was read, enclosing a remonstrance from sundry bakers against the bread ordinance; also a communication from the Chairman of a meeting held in Baton Rouge, for the purpose of considering the practicability of constructing a railroad between New Orleans and that city, and inviting the Mayor and Common Council to attend an adjourned meeting to be held in this city on the 17th inst., for the purpose of acting upon the matter. The invitation was accepted, and the other portions of the message were appropriately referred.

A resolution authorizing the digging of ditches in the rear of the Third District was adopted.

A resolution providing for the digging of a canal to drain the First and Fourth Districts was adopted. The cost of this work is estimated at about $22,000.

A resolution authorizing the sale of contracts for keeping in repair the wharves of the First, Second and Fourth Districts was adopted.

A resolution appropriating $5000 to the physicians composing the Sanitary Commission was offered by Mr. Stith, and lost by a vote of 11 to 14.

General Intelligence.

BURNING OF THE STEAMER ROCKAWAY NO. 2. The steamer Rockaway No. 2, Captain Len Moore, from Ouachita River, with about 500 bales Cotton on board, took fire on the morning of the 20th ult., about half-past four o'clock, six miles above Bayou Sara, and burnt to the water's edge. The fire originated in the woodrack, near the boilers. The officers of the steamer St. Charles state that the passengers and crew were all saved. The boat lost all her hooks and papers. Captain Len Moore and the Clerk remained at Bayou Sara, and the officers and crew came down on the St. Charles, who state that the stempipe of the Rockaway harsted and slightly injured a colored boy belonging to Mr. Conrey, of this city. A greater portion of the Rockaway's passengers came down on the St. Charles.

HEAVY FROST.—Capt. Holmes, of the steamer Princess, reports a very heavy frost in the Cotton region above Baton Rouge, on the morning of the 30th ult.

TORNADO IN TEXAS.—We learn from the Nacogdoches (Texas) Chronicle, that the town of Melroso, in that county, was visited on the 15th by a most destructive tornado, which did great damage to property. The houses of Mr. Stallings, Mr. Hardemann and Mr. Stevens, and many others of the place were blown down. The district school house was also blown over, and a son of Mr. Borren was killed while attempting to escape.

MRS. GEN. GAINES.—Mrs. Gen. Gaines passed through New York a few days ago, en route to Saratoga, where she will leave her daughter at school, and then return to New Orleans. The Washington Star understands that she intends to make another effort to get possession of the Clark property at New Orleans.

INCREASE OF SILVER.—The Treasury Department has sent to the Mint in Philadelphia fifty-two tons of ingots of silver, the value of which is one and a quarter million of dollars. The Government purchased Mexican ingots of silver amounting to two millions of dollars at three per cent premium, three-quarters of a million of which were left at the mint in New Orleans. The object of the purchase of this silver is to increase the supply of silver change.

WEATHER AND CROPS IN NORTH ALABAMA.—The Huntsville Democrat of the 26th ult. says: Our oldest citizens do not remember such a season as the present. At the time we write (the 25th) the weather is still dry, there having been no rain since the latter part of March. The stands of corn and cotton are never worse; much of both is not yet up, and the prospect is so gloomy that many planters are plowing up and replanting.

THE CITY OF GLASGOW.—The steamship City of Glasgow, which left Liverpool on the 1st of March, and has not been heard from since, had on board 64 cabin passengers, including about a dozen children, besides 299 passengers in the steerage, making, with her crew, about 400 souls in all. She had also a very valuable cargo, estimated to be worth about $1,000,000.

Miss Mitford, the English authoress, has been for some months suffering from a painful illness. Her new work, "Atherton," is just completed, and although written under the trials of great bodily suffering, is said to be one of the most genial and sunny books ever penned.

CALORIC SHIP ERICSSON SUNK.—The caloric ship Ericsson was struck by a squall off Jersey Flats, on the evening of the 26th, and capsized. She went down in twenty feet water, but it is believed that all on board were saved.

The loss of property on the Atlantic last year, according to Lloyd's List amounted to over $10,000,000.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, April 24, 1854.

Another week has commenced with about as little promise of advance in legislation as can well be imagined. I told you in my last letter that the Nebraska bill was to be received in a new form, and put through the House by a sort of legislative sleight of hand; such was the purpose of its guardians, but as this design got out, and led to a summons by telegraph of absentees, it has been found convenient to abandon the design for the present, and disavow it altogether.

In the Senate we still get more or less petitions each day against the Nebraska bill, or, as they are chiefly worded, against the repeal of the Missouri Compromise.

To-day the Senate has been chiefly occupied with the joint resolution for the reward of the rescuers of the sufferers on board the San Francisco. The recent terrible disaster on the New Jersey coast which resulted in the total loss of ship, cargo, and more than two hundred souls, on board the Powhatan, has recalled attention to the perils of the ocean. Congress made an appropriation of $10,000, a few years since, for the purchase of certain apparatus and some life-boats to be placed at every station on the N. J. coast—the appropriation has been the means of saving very many lives and ought to be continued and increased.

We are still kept in a sort of suspense in the matter of the veto of Miss Dix's bill, but I inclined to think that the Brigadier will listen to good counsel and sign it.

WASHINGTON, April 25, 1854.

To be a faithful Chronicler of passing events here, is to be tedious, for the repetition of the same thing day after day is wearisome to hear, and much worse so to write. The invariable accompaniment at the opening of the Senate's session is a series of petitions adverse to the Nebraska bill, from the North—there are none in favor of it from the South.

The Senate passed a bill to secure the preemption rights of settlers upon the Maison Rouge grant, in the event of the title to the same being confirmed to the United States. The rest of the day was occupied in secret session upon a Gadsden Treaty.

WASHINGTON, April 26, 1854.

After I had mailed my letter yesterday, I learnt that the Senate had decided upon the basis of a treaty with Mexico, the chief features of which are the liquidation of claims, the abrogation of the 11th Article of Trist's Treaty, and a guarantee of the Sloo route across the Isthmus, for a consideration of $10,000,000. This is bad enough, but only half as bad, as regards the pecuniary part, as the Gadsden affair.

To-day a bill was passed providing for the purchase of the portraits of the five first Presidents, taken by the celebrated Stuart. These memorials are now in the possession of Mrs. Col. Gibbs, of Newport, R. I., the daughter of Oliver Wolcott, one of the signers of the Declaration, and afterwards Secretary of the Treasury. It is designed to place them in the White House I believe, and certainly it is well to gather such things at the metropolis, and make them public property.

The rest of the day in the Senate was devoted to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The House took up Bennet's Land bill in the morning hour, and this gentleman concluded his speech in the advocacy of his scheme, which is to divide the public lands among the several States, according to the Federal ratio, and allow each State to issue its own warrants, etc., etc. It matters but little, however, what land schemes may be devised and passed by Congress, for it begins to be understood that the President thinks more of some general and indefinite resolution of the Baltimore Convention, which nominated him as a last resort, than he does of the deliberate decisions of Congress, and that he will veto all the land bills which are in the form of donations.

CHRONICLER.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Charles Morgan, Capt. Forbes, from Galveston we have received Galveston papers to the 30th ult., and our other Texas exchanges as late as due. The Galveston News of the 28th ult. says:

The news from our rivers is unfavorable. The steamers on the Trinity are laid up for want of water, and unless the customary May and June rises once more enable them to move, a large proportion of the Cotton crops will remain behind, and be subjected to the delay and heavy expense of land transportation. The quantity of goods now on the way and intended to be sent up the river, is very considerable also, and the disappointment and loss, which would follow, were navigation to remain closed for the season, must be very onerous on the interests of this community. The Brazos river had fallen also, yet, the steamers were still moving with light cargoes.

The reports of the crops from various parts are very favorable. The Indianola Bulletin of the 26th says: The farmers of our county are now actively engaged in cultivating their crops. Corn, cotton and all other crops are growing rapidly. The recent rains have had a most salutary effect on vegetation. The grass on the prairies is now abundant, and the cattle are in a thriving condition.

The telegraph is now in operation from Galveston to Palestine.

Gov. Pease has extended the time by proclamation for receiving proposals for the Pacific Railroad till the 1st of August.

Gen. Persifer F. Smith was married on the 17th ult., at Corpus Christi, to Mrs. Armstrong, widow of a son of the late Gen. Robert Armstrong, of Tennessee.

A company of minute men is being organized in Tarrant county, to range on the frontier.

The Galveston Times of the 30th ult. reports the Trinity river rapidly rising. It thinks that this rise will give sufficient time for that portion of the cotton crop still remaining in the interior to be brought out.

The telegraphic connection between Huntsville and Henderson will, it is thought, be completed shortly, when New Orleans will be in telegraphic communication with Galveston and Houston.

FROM THE BAHAMAS.—The Charleston Courier publishes intelligence from Nassau, N. P., to the 19th ult. The Nassau papers are replete with particulars of marine disasters—indeed, the Nassau Guardian, of the 12th inst., says that "within the last fortnight it is estimated that about 600,000 dollars' worth of wrecked property has been cast on our shores, owing to bad weather."

A private letter estimates the losses at one million.

The public revenue of the Bahama Islands for the quarter ending the 31st of December, 1853, was £6,884.4.3, being an excess of £1,393.7.3 over the expenditures.

Sir Alexander Bannerman, the newly appointed Governor of the Bahama Islands, was daily expected at Nassau.

FIRE IN NEW YORK AND LOSS OF LIFE.—We learn from the New York Herald of the 26th that the extensive tailoring establishment of W. T. Jennings, No. 231 Broadway, was totally destroyed by fire on the evening of the 25th. The Herald says:

At about 6 o'clock, when it was thought the fire had done its worst, with a dreadful crash the rear wall fell, burying beneath it a large number of the gallant spirits who had been so nobly struggling against the various flames. The falling of this wall was caused by the weight of a heavy safe in one of the upper stories, which shook, in its crash, the foundation of the entire building. Those who were crushed were at the base of the wall, and both those on the inside and outside of the building alike shared the disaster, the wall falling both ways. The walls fell twice. The rear wall fell first, burying several, and while releasing those the side wall fell, burying the rescuers. Great complaint is made in regard to the insubstantiality of the building. It was found to be a mere shell, built upon the "cheap principle," and to this is owing the disaster which we now record.

Of those buried in the ruins, two had been taken out dead at last accounts, and many others were seriously injured and not expected to live. J. A. Keyser and Jas. McNally were taken out of the ruins dead. It was thought several others were buried in the ruins. The entire loss by the fire was about $75,000, of which $40,000 will fall upon Mr. Jennings.

MARBLE ON WHITE RIVER.—The editor of the Batesville Standard has seen specimens of black marble, found on White River, in Arkansas, which is, he says, equal to any he ever saw.

European News by the Arabia.

ONE WEEK LATER.

Halifax, April 25, 1854.—The royal mail steamship Arabia, Captain Judkins, from Liverpool on Saturday the 15th inst., arrived here this morning.

The news by this arrival, although presenting no feature of striking importance, is of a very interesting character.

THE EUROPEAN WAR.—The interest this week centres more in negotiations than fighting, although the important announcement is received of a violation of Servian territory by the Russians at Radetzjeval.

Austria appears to be acting more in unison with the Western Powers, while Prussia leans more to Russia, although temporizing with both parties.

On the 9th, the protocol re-defining the integrity of the Ottoman territory was signed at Vienna by the Four Powers, including Prussia, but simultaneously therewith Prussia introduced into her mutual alliance treaty with Austria conditions and limitations which would render the treaty a dead letter, and which Austria consequently refuses to accept. The military arrangements arising out of the proposed treaty have been referred to a commission presided over by the Prince of Prussia.

It was announced that Chevalier Bunsen, the Prussian minister at London had been recalled and no reason assigned, but the whole story was subsequently contradicted.

Hanover sides with the Western Powers. All the minor German States, except Bavaria, do likewise, and will support Austria in forcing Prussia to declare herself should the subject come before the Federal Diet.

The Independance Belge announces positively that a treaty of permanent alliance—offensive and defensive—had just been signed between France and England, independently of the treaties of the present war.

The Turkish Government has ordered all Greeks who will not consent to place themselves under the exclusive protection of the Porte, to leave the Turkish territory within fifteen days from March 30. This expulsion, it is said, was determined on by the Porte, contrary to the advice of the representatives of the Four Powers.

The Baltic, April 12, 1854.—Admiral Napier left Kioge Bay for Gothland. It being reported that some of the Russian port were opened, and that a Russian squadron was off Faroe. Also reported three American ships somewhere in the Baltic, with stores for Russia, and an English steamer was dispatched after them.

All the allied fleet, excepting the Charlemagne steamer, were at Varna Bay on the 20th of March. Eight French line-of-battle ships, and six steamers, anchored east of Varna; and further east were ten English line-of-battle ships and six steamers.

All the marines of the fleet were to land to protect Varna.

Admiral Dundas had signalized his cruisers to take, burn, and destroy everything. His fleets were in communication with the Turkish land force.

Prince Paskiewitch arrived at Bucharest on the 5th of April.

Gortschakoff retains command of the army, but subject to the orders of Paskiewitch. The latter is invested with the same powers as he had in Poland.

On the 30th March an important sally was made from Kalefat, and a sanguinary encounter of four hours duration took place. The Russians were routed, and were pursued for a considerable distance.

From March 30 to April 2, there were engagements of greater or less severity.

It was reported that an important battle was fought near Rassova from the 21 to the 4th of April, but the result was not stated.

The Cyclops, British war steamer, arrived at Malta on the 7th, with important news. The Turks purposely left a free passage for the Russians to Hirsova, and then attacked them in the rear. After a hard fight one-half of the Russians were cut to pieces, and the remainder retired across the Danube. No date is given.

The Turks had evacuated the fortress of Czernavela, in the Dobradschu, which was shelled by the Russians.

It was further stated, without date, that 30,000 Russians had crossed at Galatz without opposition. The accounts of these occurrences are very confused.

From Malta, the 7th, it is stated that an English brig from the Danube, and the steamer Crescent, which was towing it, were fired into by the Russians. Another English brig, name unknown, laden with grain, was sank by Russian batteries on the Danube.

General Canrobert, with 3,000 French troops, arrived at Constantinople April 3.

The declaration of war by France and England was known in Turkey, and caused immense enthusiasm.

It was reported that the French Col. Dieu, a meritorious officer on the staff of Omar Pachu, was killed in a reconnoissance.

BIRTHPLACES OF THE CHIEF BRITISH OFFICERS ABOUT TO ACT AGAINST RUSSIA.—We learn from the London Civil Service Gazette, that of the five officers who are to command divisions, all are of different birth—a Scotchman, a Hanoverian, an Irishman, a Canadian, and an Englishman—thus, Sir George Brown is a native of Linkwood, near Elgin, the Duke of Cambridge was born at Hanenhausen, in Hanover, Sir De Lacy Evans is a native of Moig, in Ireland, Sir Richard England, a native of Detroit in Upper Canada, and the Earl of Lucan is the only Englishman of that rank; he is to command the cavalry, and is an Londoner by birth, though of course an Irishman by descent. So also it is remarkable with respect to the fleets how the two highest in command are not Englishmen; Sir Charles Napier was born near New Falkirk, in Scotland, and Admiral Dundas, at Calcutta, though he also is a Scotchman by descent. Among the eleven Brigadiers General, it is interesting to observe H. J. Bentinck (English,) of Dutch origin on both sides—his mother having been a Delleede Detlinkie, Sir Colin and Sir John Campbell of Scotch blood, Colonel Penefather, a "Tipperary boy," Col. Yorke Scarlett, of Jamaican descent, while J. B. H. Escourt is a Londoner, born near Portman square, and Lord Cardigan, a native of Hambledon, leaving only four unaccounted for, and of these H. W. Adams is probably a native of Warwickshire, since he is head of an old family in that county. William Eyr is probably of Nottinghamshire birth, and George Buller a Cornishman. Among the six Assistants Adjutant General, we notice the two Irish names of Doyle and Sullivan, and two Scotch, Maule and Gordon.

VISIT TO THE CITY OF TIMBUCTOO.—Dr. Barth, who is now traveling in the interior of Africa, entered the city of Timbuctoo on the 7th of September, 1853, after a tedious journey. He was escorted in grand style by the brother of Sheik-el-Bahay, the ruling chief, accompanied by a splendid suite on foot and mounted on horses and camels. He was welcomed by the people generally, though there was one faction not favorably disposed toward him, which wished his death, so that it was necessary for him to exercise great caution in his movements and intercourse. Fortunately, he had secured the friendship of the Sheikh, under whose immediate protection he lived at his residence, and who had promised him a safe escort on his return to Sackatu. The people of Timbuctoo are of so fanatical a disposition that the Sheikh considered it advisable that Dr. Barth should assume the character of a messenger from the Great Sultan of Stamboal. Dr. Barth describes the city of Timbuctoo as a pent up mass of closely packed houses. Its form is that of a triangle. The houses are mostly of clay and stone, many of them having handsome and tasteful fronts. He estimates the population of the city at 20,000 persons. It has long been famous as the headquarters of the North African caravan trade, but Dr. Barth found its market to be of less extent than that of Kano, though the merchandise was of superior quality and of greater value.

FATNESS A BEAUTY.—The women in Egypt, in order to acquire a degree of fatness, bathe themselves several days in lukewarm water. They stay so long in their baths that they eat and drink therein. During the time they are in the bath, they take every half-hour some broth made of a fat pullet and stuffed with sweet almonds, hazel-nuts, dates, and pistachio-nuts. After taking this kind of broth four times, they eat a pullet, all but the head. When they come out of the bath they are rubbed over with perfumes and sweet-scented pomatum, and after that some of them take myrobalans before going to bed; others take a draught prepared with gum tragacanth and sugar candy.

BAD DEBTS.—Hunt's Merchant's Magazine advocates the passage of an act abolishing all laws for the collection of debt, except where property is transferred for its security; the property so transferred to be the only legal security on such debt. The writer says, that should this become a law, it would prevent seventy-five per cent of the bad debts now made, besides promoting integrity and upright mercantile character.

George Law, it is said, realized about two million dollars by the recent sale of his interest in the Atlantic Ocean-Mail Steamship Line between New York and Aspinwall, and his stock in the Aspinwall and Panama Railroad.

The Mobile and New Orleans Railroad.

DAILY SUMMARY OF THE REPORT OF LEWIS TRONEY, ESQ.; CONSULTING ENGINEER, ON THE PRELIMINARY SURVEYS OF THE MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS RAILROAD, MADE BY THE LATE COL. A. A. DEXTER, C. E. AND THE MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS RAILROAD COMPANY.

Several preliminary lines were surveyed by Col Dexter, from Mobile to Pass Chef Menteur, six of them passing through the watering places on the Gulf; of these the following line is the most favorable: Commencing at Mobile river, in Mobile fifty feet northwardly of the north line of Virginia street, the line runs parallel with Virginia street to the western boundary of the city; thence deflecting to the south-west it runs to Pascagoula Bay, near Mrs. Rose Krebs—crossing Mobile, Middle and South Forks of Big River at the head of navigation, and keeping about three and one-half miles south-east of a direct line between Mobile and Pascagoula, in order to avoid the ridges between the waters of Mobile Bay and Escatapa river.

Thence crossing Pascagoula Bay, it runs along and near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, in the rear of Oceans Springs, the villages of Biloxi and Mississippi City, Pass Christian and Shieldsborough, to the Great Rigolets, at its entrance into Lake Borgne, intersecting in this distance the Bays of Biloxi and St. Louis and East Pearl River.

Thence crossing the Rigolets, the line runs nearly direct to New Orleans, intersecting the Little Rigolets and Pass Chef Menteur—the latter at the mouth of Bayou Chef Menteur, near Fort Wood.

The country from Mobile to Pascagoula (30 49 miles) is a flat, pine woods for 14.97 miles, and gently undulating for 24.25 miles. The soil is light sand and sand clay mixed, and is very favorable for grading.

From Pascagoula Bay to the Grand Plains marshes (52.67) the country is very level, and from eight to fifteen feet above the surface of mean tide to the Gulf of Mexico, and the soil is composed for the most part of sand.

Grand Plains marshes consist of a sandy alluvion, seldom if ever subject to overflow, covered with occasional patches of oak.

The sandy alluvion is from three to five feet deep, and rests on hard strata of sand and shells sufficiently firm to sustain an embankment.

The marshes between Pearl river and Chef Menteur are covered by occasional patches of live oak, and consist of sandy alluvion, resting on strata of sand and shells, at depths varying from five to ten feet, capable of sustaining a good road way. The borings and soundings for foundations on this line show that good and firm foundations may be obtained for bridge structures over the rivers and bays at the depths exhibited in the following

TABLE OF SOUNDINGS:

NAME OF RIVER OR BAY.	Extreme depth in good channel below surface of medium stage of water.	Depth of water at same sounding.	Depth of sand mud and shells at same sounding.
E. Pascagoula R....	34 feet.	18 feet.	17 feet.
W. Pascagoula R..	25 "	24 "	01 "
Bay of Biloxi....	25 "	18 "	17 "
Bay of St. Louis....	40 "	32 "	28 "
East Pearl River....	60 "	45 "	15 "
Great Rigolets....	65 "	44 "	21 "
Little Rigolets....	62 "	40 "	22 "
Chef Menteur.....	53 "	40 "	4 "

The result of these soundings and borings is very satisfactory, and at once demonstrates the practicability of constructing a permanent road. The stratum on which this firm foundation can be obtained, consists of compact stiff yellow and blue clay.

The following table will exhibit the characteristics of the line:

Total length of line.....miles	139.
Total length of straight line.....miles	133.32
Total length of curved line.....miles	5.68
Total deflection in degrees.....degrees	322° 45'
Shortest radius of curvature.....feet	5730.
Total length of level grade.....miles	87.20
Maximum grade each way per mile.....feet	20.40
Total length of grades, from 0 to 10 feet per mile.....miles	26.27
Total length of grades, from 10 to 20.40 feet per mile.....miles	25.53
Total length of maximum grades of 20.40 feet per mile.....miles	14.68
Total rise and fall in feet.....feet	704.29
Highest summit above mean tide to be overcome.....feet	137.

The grades and curves of the Mobile and New Orleans Railroad, as shown in the above table, are remarkably favorable. With a good railroad and a strong train, trains containing 1000 or 2000 passengers, can safely pass over it, at a speed of 40 or 50 miles per hour, and freight trains with a load of 275 tons freight may be loaded over it at a speed of 15 miles per hour, thus making the time of transit for passengers between Mobile and New Orleans, from 3 to 4 hours, and for freight from 9 to 10 hours.

Omitting the details of plans of construction and of estimates, it is sufficient to state that they are made for a first class railroad in every respect; all the timber exposed to the action of the sea worms is to be protected by metal sheathing; all navigable rivers and bays are to be provided with draw-bridges, 60 feet wide, except the Great Rigolets, where it is proposed to have two double draws of 120 feet opening each; the charter of the Pontchartrain Railroad in Louisiana may render it illegal to build a permanent bridge across the Great Rigolets with openings for navigation, as proposed. In this event, it would be advisable to make a temporary crossing, with a steam vessel so arranged as to take passenger and freight trains on deck, and rely on the wisdom and justice of future legislation for permission to substitute a permanent bridge.

The total cost of construction of the entire road complete, including an equipment for the first and second year's business, is estimated at $3,896,360, or $27,618 per mile.

The Strongholds of the Baltic.

The subjoined description of the several strongholds of the Baltic will, doubtless, be read with interest at the present juncture:

VIBORG.

The port of Viborg is of great extent, and is enclosed by two large islands, which form, as it were, two natural break-waters. As a fortress it ranks high for its position and strength. The sea washes nearly the whole length of the outer walls of the battery upon battery commands every approach. Between the lines and the city there flows a broad arm of the sea, in the midst of which stands a solitary rock, crowned with a fine old tower of other days, rearing its still proud head high and imposing above all around it. The view of this frontier fortress, with its churches and domes flashing in the sun, and its long line of batteries and bastions rising in massive strength from the water's edge, is very striking. The castle of Viborg, destroyed by fire and now in ruins, was built in 1293, by the brave Tarkel Knudtzon, one of the most illustrious Swedes mentioned in history. Viborg was then one of the chief cities in Finland, and the seat of a bishop. Attacked on several occasions by the Russians, it defended itself with great bravery. In 1710 the place was besieged by Peter the Great, and taken after a hard struggle, which occupied several weeks. The peace in 1721, known as the treaty of Nystad, put the Czar in definite possession of it, and the neighboring country, and in 1745 the treaty of Abo enlarged still further this conquest. The Swedes since the days of Peter, have always played a losing game when at war with Russia, particularly as the latter have almost always succeeded in gaining the assistance of the Germanic Kings of Denmark, and in the desperate battle fought near Abo, between the two fleets, in 1790, the Swedes lost nine ships of the line, three frigates, and upwards of twenty galleys. For nearly a century the conquered portions of Finland, distinguished as Kamla Finland or ancient Finland, were subject to the same regulations in civil matters as the rest of the Russian empire.

FREDERIKSHAM.

In this circle lies also, on a peninsula in the Bay of Finland, Frederiksham, a town with about 1500 inhabitants. The fortress was constructed on Vauban's principle; but, judging by the neglected aspect of the place, Russia has very little use for the stronghold. Originally it was a place of great strength, and inaccessible on two sides; the approaches are covered and protected by field works to a considerable distance; and the only entrance to the town, which looks as deserted as the fortifications, is by a narrow passage winding round the angle of a bastion, enfilladed in every direction by the works from the body of the place. Frederiksham was, in former days, the residence of the Governor of the province: a massive tower, constructed in the middle of the square, overlooked the whole town, and from this every street diverged like the spokes of a wheel. It was in this tower, on the 5th of September, 1809, that the treaty of the place was signed, by which Sweden surrendered Finland to Russia. A fire consumed the tower and several of the streets some few years since.

ST. MICHAEL.

St. Michael, north-west of the preceding circle, contains a small town of the same name, and Nyslot, another small town, with a strong castle on a rock in the middle of a deep stream. The town lies about 75 miles north of Viborg, on two islands in Lake Harpavesi or Outrouis, and communicates with the mainland by a bridge. It was ceded to Russia at the peace of Abo in 1743.

HELSINGFORS.

In Nyland, to the west of Viborg, is Helsingfors, the present capital of the Duchy, on a tongue of land in the Gulf of Finland, with about 16 000 inhabitants, and the strong fortress of Sveaborg protecting the entrance of the harbor. Helsingfors lies in latitude 60 deg. 9 min 42 sec. N., long. 24 deg. 57 min. 30 sec. E., at the mouth of the Vanna, about 180 miles W. N. W. of St. Petersburg. The town is, historically speaking, comparatively of modern creation, having been founded by Gustavus Vasa, in the sixteenth century; its name came from a colony of the province of Helsingland, which had been established in the neighborhood for several centuries. In 1639, however, the town changed its site, and the inhabitants moved their wooden houses nearer the sea-shore, and on the spot where Helsingfors now stands; war, plague, famine, and fire ravaged it, each in its turn, and the end of a century found it with only a population of 5000 souls. At the present moment it numbers 16,000, exclusive of the garrison. The Russians have greatly augmented and improved Helsingfors since it came into their possession, more particularly since the year 1819, when it became the capital of Finland; the removal to it of the University of Abo, and the Senate, after the conflagration of that town in 1827, also materially increased its importance. The streets are long, large, and laid out at right angles, as in most other Russian towns.

The remains of the library saved from the fire of Abo is at present preserved in this building. It consists of about 80,000 volumes, chiefly editions of the classics taken by Charles the Twelfth from the monasteries during the Seven Years' War. An extensive collection of Sagas and historical documents relating to the history of Finland unfortunately fell a prey to the flames. The number of students matriculated at the University of Helsingfors in the winter term of 1851 was 491. The celebrated Arabian scholar and traveler, Dr. Wallin, died lately at this University.

The harbor is capacious, and ranks as one of the best in the Baltic, and an important trade is carried on in timber, corn and fish. Helsingfors is the residence of the Governor General, and the seat of important courts and public offices—it contains the Senate House, several churches, and has manufactures of linen, sailcloth and tobacco. There are several agreeable walks in the neighborhood, amongst which the forests of Stansvik, the solitary coast near Mailand, and the verdant gardens of Traeskenda are chiefly noticeable.

The approach to Helsingfors by water is exceedingly striking. The harbor is well protected by the works and fortress of Sveaborg, which are built upon seven islands. The fortifications are said to mount 800 cannon, with barracks and casements for a garrison of 12,000 men. The strength of this fortress is such that it has been termed the Gibraltar of the North. The original fortress was erected by Count Ehrensvaerd, Field Marshal of Sweden, by the command of Gustavus the First; it was destroyed in the Russian war, and a Swedish army under Count Levenhaupt, surrendered by capitulation to the Russians. The last stone of the new citadel was laid in 1758, and after the conquest of Viborg and Ingermania by Peter the Great, this fortress was the last rampart of Sweden against the Russians, and the rallying point of the troops and fleet. In March, 1808, it was besieged by the Russians, and two months after, Admiral Cronstadt, who defended the place with 1500 men and two frigates, capitulated, though well furnished with every munition of war. The secret of this capitulation, without example in history, was never known.

"The Malta of the Baltic."

Cronstadt, which, it is thought, Sir Charles Napier will make the scene of brilliant naval achievements during the coming season, is a town, fortress and port in the Government of St. Petersburg, from which city it is about thirty-one miles distant. It is built at the southeast extremity of Cotlin-Ostrof, an island in that part of the Gulf of Finland called the Bay of Cronstadt, about sixteen miles from the mouth of the Neva. At the entrance of the harbor, on an island opposite the citadel, lies the castle or fortress of Cronsshlott, built by Peter the Great. The fortress and the mole bristle with guns, and the harbor itself is approachable only by one channel, which is fortified with a double line of guns. The passage between this place and Cronstadt is 2000 paces in width, and has ample depth for the largest vessels. Besides its importance as the great naval station of the Russian fleet, Cronstadt is the harbor of St. Petersburg. All vessels proceeding to that port are searched here and their cargoes sealed; and such as are too large for the shallow waters of the Upper Neva, unload their cargoes at Cronstadt and transport them in smaller craft. The channel is marked by stakes the whole way, and vessels built at St. Petersburg are placed on a "camel," or kind of raft, by which their draught of water is lessened one-half, then floated down the Neva and over its bar, on which there is often only seven feet water. Cronstadt, which is built in the form of an irregular triangle, is strongly fortified on all sides. It has three harbors, lying in the south of the town. The outer, or military dock is entirely surrounded by a massive and strongly fortified mole, in a rectangle, stretching out into the sea, and is capable of containing, besides smaller vessels, above thirty-five ships of the line. It is now, however, so shallow at low water, that many of the ships are obliged to anchor in the middle harbor, which is probably intended for the fitting out and repairing of vessels. It contains the slips, a powder magazine, a manufactory of pitch, tar, etc. The third, west or innermost harbor, which has space for six hundred merchant vessels and runs parallel with the middle harbor, admits only merchantmen, for which there is besides an excellent roadstead immediately outside of the port, which is also defended by the citadel, constructed in a rock in the middle of the Sea of Cronstadt. All these harbors are well secured, but in consequence of the freshness of the sea water, no vessel can be preserved in them over twenty years. They are, besides, detained a great part of the year by the ice in the Bay of Cronstadt, which usually prevents vessels from entering after the end of November, or leaving before the end of April, or sometimes even later. In 1849, the season commenced on the 15th of May and ended on the 26th of November. The town is very regularly built, and contains many fine, straight and well-paved streets, and several public squares. The houses, however, with the exception of those belonging to the Government, are chiefly of one story and built of wood. The permanent population of Cronstadt, exclusive of the garrison, the pupils of the naval school, workmen and sailors, is not inconsiderable. During the summer it amounts to upwards of 40,000 individuals of various nations. Of these, next to the Russians, the English are most numerous. The inhabitants derive their chief support from the fleet, trade and shipping. The town presents an appearance of great activity and bustle during the summer, but in winter all is dead and stagnant. The town and port were laid out, and the buildings far advanced, by Peter the Great, who founded Cronstadt in 1710; but it did not receive its present name, this town of the crown, till 1721.

Professor Wilson.

The intelligence by the Arctic tells us that the master spirit of old Maga—Blackwood's Magazine—is dead. We are to have no more communion, save in memory, with the author of "Noctes Ambrosianæ" and "Disa Borealis"—no more songs from the singer of the "Isle of Palms," and the "City of the Plague," and no more gentle, yet brave romancing from the sketcher of the "Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life," "The Foresters," and "The Trials of Margaret Lindsay." Close upon the solemn shade cast by the exit of Talfourd, moves another, broader and deeper and grander—the awful spectacle, Death, piloting John Wilson past the "dark valley and shadow," into the heaven of light and beauty, where, if any spirit has claim to move, the soul of "Christopher North" is now gloriously recreating.

Professor Wilson was ens of the most widely known and read, and most esteemed and admired, of the great literary lights of modern times. He was born at Paisley, Scotland, in 1788, making his age, at the period of his death, 66 years. His father was a manufacturer of wealth. Young Wilson was educated at the Glasgow University, and Magdalen College, Oxford. Precocious in the power of intellectual accomplishment, he rapidly mastered the learning of the schools. While at Oxford, he gained the Newdigate prize for a poem of sixty lines. Returning from Oxford, he purchased an estate on the shores of Lake Windermere, near to Wordsworth, from which halcyon retreat he was driven by reverses of fortune. He then pursued the study of the law, and became a member of the Scottish Bar, at which, however, he never practiced.

In 1818, at the age of 30, he was elected to the chair of Moral Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh, and about that period commenced those contributions to Blackwood's Magazine, which, for more than a quarter of a century, were scarcely interrupted, and which, read with delight wherever the English language was spoken, gave to that Magazine the crown of its reputation for brilliancy and power. For a long period "Kit North," as he was familiarly known, was the sole editor of that great Tory organ. His writings for it were of the widest range and diversity—all subjects seemed to him alike intelligible, and while some were charmed with his logic, wit, or philosophy, others shook their sides over his humor, or wept at his pathos. He was equal as reviewer, historian, critic, essayist, poet and descanter on rural and manly sports and pastimes.

For more than a quarter of a century, Wilson also held his chair in the famous University of "auld Reekie," and a friend who attended on his lectures a few years since, has described to us the appearance and manner of the moral philosopher. Over six feet in height, his breadth of chest and shoulders was worthy of an Atlas. His head was large and massive, his hair—in younger days a blending of the Saxon's and the Gael's—thickly sprinkled with gray, flowed curlingly to his shoulders, while his large brow, fine chin and nose—eagle like—mouth stamped with decision's seal, and eyes that could flash fire from their sockets, made an impression even on the casual beholder, never to be forgotten. In speech his voice was full, round and musical, and his utterance seemed without effort—like the running of a perennial fountain. All who knew him were warmly attached to him. Students held him in semi-idolatry. Strangers in Edinburgh made it a point to see and hear Wilson, more than any other man, says, perhaps, Chalmers.

Besides his scholarly and literary pursuits, Professor Wilson was famed as being the best athlete in the country. His physical nature was as elastic and vigorous as his spirits were keen and buoyant. He indulged in leaping, wrestling, curling, hunting, fishing, horse riding, and the science of "the gloves," not more as politic for health purposes, than because the exuberence of his finely balanced intellectual and physical activity forced him into the ring, the open field, and away to the mountains. He delighted, revelled and excelled in manly sports. He was as great a walker as De Quincy. At home, as in society, he was ever the same genial, delightful spirit.

In 1850, a stroke of paralysis incapacitated him from authorship, though his mental faculties were untouched. Since his retirement from the pages of Blackwood, his place has been filled by his son-in-law, Professor Aytoun, well known through his ballads, on whom will doubtless devolve the biography of the lamented "Christopher North." In 1842, a collection of Wilson's best articles was made from the Magazine, and republished in volumes as "The Recreations of Christopher North." Collections of other articles, particularly the "Noctes," now out of print, have been published in this country. Wilson left no son to inherit his name and fame—none was needed to perpetuate them.

UNPUBLISHED LETTER OF GEN. MONTGOMERY.—The Philadelphia Bizarre publishes the following autograph letter for the first time. It was written by the unfortunate Montgomery, at Quebec, previous to his making the fatal charge, in which he was killed. It is well-known that the British were defeated, and were meditating a surrender, when a chance shot deprived Montgomery of his life, and threw the American army into disorder, as to prevent them from following up their advantage. But for that we would now be in possession of Canada. The letter is addressed to Sir Guy Carlton, commander of the British forces:

HOLLAND HOUSE.

SIR—Met me once more entreat you to have compassion on the unfortunate inhabitants of Quebec—to what purpose do you compel me to distress them? You can but pratract a few days that event which must inevitably in a very short time take place. If you possess any share of humanity, you will not sacrifice the lives and properties of so many innocent people to a vain punctilio.

Embrace the opportunity I offer you of retiring in a manner suitable to your rank. You shall not be a prisoner. You shall have a safe conduct to New York or wheresoever you may choose to embark. The Lieutenant Governor shall have the same indulgence.

I engage in the most solemn manner for the security of the lives and properties of the citizens—our dispute is not with them—we bear no malice, and the hopes of affording them relief alone induce me to make these proposals.

Should you decline the offer I now make, I hope I shall stand acquitted in the eyes of the world of the fatal consequences which must attend your refusal—which I have sufficiently explained in my former letter.

Newstead Abbey.

We copy the following from Irving's Crayon Miscellanies:

Newstead Abbey is one of the finest specimens in existence of those quaint and romantic piles, half castle, half convent, which remain as monuments of the olden times in England. It was originally a priory, founded in the latter part of the twelfth century, by Henry II., at the time when he sought, by the building of shrines and convents, and by other acts of external piety, to expatiate the murder of Thomas à Becket.

At the time of the dissolution of the convents, during the reign of Henry VIII, Newstead was given, with the neighboring manor and rectory of Papelwick, to Sir John Byron, Steward of Manchester and Rochdale, and Lieutenant of Sherwood Forest. He converted the saintly edifice into a castellated dwelling, making it his favorite residence and the seat of his forest-jurisdiction.

The Byron family being subsequently ennobled by a baronial title, and enriched by various possessions, maintained great style and retinue at Newstead. The proud edifice partook, however, of the vicissitudes of the times, and Lord Byron, in one of his poems, represents it as alternately the scene of lordly wassailing and of civil war:

"Hark, how the hall resounding to the strain,
Shakes with the martial music's noval din!
The heralds of a warrior's haughty reign,
High-crested banners wave thy walls within.
Of changing sentinels the distant hum,
The mirth of feasts, the clang of burnished arms,
The braying trumpet and the hoarser drum,
Unite in concert with increased alarms."

About the middle of the last century, the Abbey came into the possession of the grand-uncle of the poet, familiarly known among the gossiping chroniclers of the Abbey as "the wicked Lord Byron." The wayward passions of this unhappy man caused a separation from his wife, and finally spread a solitude around him. Being displeased at the marriage of his son and heir, he displayed an inveterate malignity towards him. Not being able to cut off his succession to the Abbey estate, which descended to him by entail, he endeavored to injure it as much as possible, so that it might come a mere wreck into his hands. He was baffled in his unnatural revenge by the premature death of his son, and passed the remainder of his days brooding amidst the scenes he had laid waste.

The death of the "old lord" occurred in 1708, and the Abbey then passed into the possession of the poet, then a boy of eleven years of age and living in humble style with his mother in Scotland. During Lord Byron's minority, the Abbey was let to Lord Grey de Ruthven, but the poet visited it occasionally during the Harrow-vacations, when he resided with his mother at Nottingham. It was treated little better by its prescut tenant than by the old lord who preceded him; so that when, in the autumn of 1808, Lord Byron took up his abode there, it was in a ruinous condition. The following lines, from his own pen, may give some idea of its condition:

"Through thy battlements, Newsted, the hollow winds whistle.
Thou, the hall of my fathers, art gone to decay:
In thy once smiling garden, the hemlock and thistle
Have choked up the rose which once bloomed in thy way.

"Of the mail-covered barons, who, proudly to battle,
Led thy vassals from Europe to Palestine's plain,
The escutcheon and shield, which with every wind rattle,
Are the only sad vestiges now that remain."

Lord Byron had not sufficient fortune to put the building in extensive repair, nor to maintain anything like the state of his ancestor. He restored some of the apartments, so as to furnish a comfortable home for his mother, and fitted up a quaint study for himself. But the repairs thus made were of transient benefit; for the roof being left in its dilapidated state, the rain soon penetrated into the restored apartments, and, in a few years, rendered them almost as desolate as the rest of the abbey.

It is needless to enter into a detail of circumstances which led his lordship to sell his ancestral property. Fortunately it fell into the hands of Col Wildman, an enthusiastic admirer of the poet; add it was a great consolation to Lord Byron, in parting with his family estate, to know that it was held by one capable of restoring its faded glories, and who would respect and preserve all the monuments and memorials of his line. The confidence of Lord Byron in the good feeling and taste of Col. Wildman, has been justified by the event. Under his judicious eye and munificent hand, the venerable and romantic pile has risen from its ruins, in all its old monastic and baronial splendor. Eighty thousand pounds have already been expended, yet the work is still going on, and Newstead promises to realize the hope faintly breathed by the poet when bidding it a melancholy farewell:

"Haply thy sun emerging, yet may shine,
Thee to irradiate with meridian ray;
Hours splendid as the past may still be thine,
And bless thy future as thy former day."

An Abduction Indeed.

We copy a passage from a paper read before the American Geographical Society by Capt. Gibson, lately returned from the East Indies, and bringing with him some new facts as to the tribes of orang-outange inhabiting the deserts of that part of the world. He says:

"My statement of the extraordinary peculiarities of these apparently semi-human beings has led to the expression of so much curiosity to know more of them by some, and of skepticism as to the fact of their existence on the part of others, that I have deemed it due to myself and to public curiosity, to give some additional facts along with all the corroborative evidence that has fallen under my observation.

"While at Mintok, Palambang, and Batavia, I heard many remarkable stories of the agility, audacity, and especially of the superhuman strength of the orang-outang. I will trespass upon your attention by relating one of the most extraordinary, and at the same time one of the best attested, which I heard while in Batavia. Lieut. Shoob, of the Dutch East India army, was on a march with a small detachment of troops and coolies on the southeastern coast of Borneo; he had encamped, on one occasion, during the noonday heat, on the banks of one of the small tributaries of the Bangartoassin. The Lieutenant had with him his domestic establishment, which included his daughter, a playful and interesting little girl of the age of thirteen.

One day, while wandering in the jungle, beyond the prescribed limits of the camp, and having from the oppressive heat, loosened her garments and thrown them off almost to nudity, the beauty of her person excited the notice of an orang-outang, who sprang upon her and carried her off. Her piercing screams rang through the forest to the ears of her dosing, protectors, and roused every man in the camp. The swift, barefooted coolies were foremost in the pursuit, and now the cry rings in the agonized father's ears that his daughter is devoured by a hinatag—again that an orang-outang has carried her off. He rushes, half phrousied, with the whole company to the thicket from whence the screams proceeded, and there, among the top-most limbs of an enormous banyan, the father beholds his daughter, naked, bleeding, and struggling in the grasp of a powerful orang-outang, who held her tightly, yet easily, with one arm, while he sprang lightly from limb to limb, as if wholly unencumbered. It was in vain to think of shooting the monster, so agile was he. The Dyak coolies, knowing the habits of the orang-outang, and knowing that he will always plunge into the nearest stream when hard pressed, began a system of operations to drive him to the water; they set up a great shout, throwing missiles of all kinds; and agitating the underbrush while some proceeded to ascend the tree. By the redoubled exertions of the whole company the monster was gradually driven towards the water, yet still holding tightly to the poor girl.

At last, the monster and his victim were seen on an outstretching limb over-hanging the stream; the coolies, who are among the expertest swimmers in the world, immediately lined the banks; the soldiers continued the outeries and throwing of missiles. He clasped his prize more tightly, took a survey of water and then of his upward gazing enemies, and then leaped into the flood. He had hardly touched the water, ere fifty resolute swimmers plunged in pursuit; as he rises, a dozen arms are reached towards him; he is grasped; others lay hold upon the insensible girl; the orang-outang used both arms to defend, and, after lacerating the bodies of some of the coolies with his powerful nervous claws, finally succeeded in diving beyond the reach of his pursuers, and, in escaping down the stream, while the bleeding, insensible Ledah was restored to the arms of her father and nurses, in whose hands she was ultimately restored to consciousness, health and strength once more. This savage version of the classic story of Pluto and Proserpine is well authenticated, and the girl, now a grown-up woman, is living at Amboyna, in the Moluccas."

"Young America" in Society.

American society, at least in our cities, is fast becoming both silly and stupid. "Young America" reigns paramount in it. Boys, who but yesterday were being flogged for false Latin, and girls who have just escaped from a-b-c-ing and bread and butter, take on themselves all the airs of grown-up people, actually thrusting their parents aside, and assuming the entire control of the amusements. At most parties the tone is given by comparative children. Conceited youngsters, on whose chin the down has scarcely begun to appear, strut about in high shirt collars, short tailed coats, deep cuffs, and tight pantaloons; take the head of cotillions, as if by right of precedence; affect to be as blazé as a noble of the ancien régime, and annoy women, old enough to be their mothers, and with more sense in a finger than these little monkeys have in all their bodies, with ridiculous compliments, absurd criticisms on music, or slang intended for wit. Little misses, also, with bare shoulders, bare arms, and minds more bare than either, look contemptuously around and express their imperial wonder that the hostess could be so stupid as to invite so many married ladies. In American society it is, at present, "the day of small things."

The conversation at these social assemblies is what might be expected from the character of those who control them. It is as flat as stale beer, and as insipid as skim-milk. The little girls giggle, and the little boys look solemn; the former smooth down their dresses, and the latter pull up their collars; but with this difference, they behave much alike. At the supper table, they push forward into the most prominent places; help themselves first; scatter terrapin, cream and jellies indiscriminately over the dresses of such married ladies as happen to be in their way; drink what they elegantly call "lots" of champagne; and keep up such an incessant chattering and laughing, that nobody, as the phrase goes, "can ear their own ears."

It would be fortunate, however, if "Young America" confined its presumptuousness to parties. But the lady who has opened her house is subjected, for days afterwards, to the morning visits of boys seeking to play the fine gentleman, who talk to her in a style half silly and half impudent, treating her as if she were still unmarried; and this, though they were not invited to her hall, perhaps, but only came with some female guest, and though they know, or ought to know, that the mother of a family, in America, has something better to do of mornings, than to listen to the empty talk of idle young fools.

Yet, it must be confessed, this sovereignty of "Young America" is partly the fault of grown-up people. Married women too generally abdicate into household drudges; neglect the cultivation of mind and manners; and, by abdicating their true position in society, make way for the usurpation of the miesee and masters that "polk." We do not advocate the disregard of domestic duties. But we contend that their fulfillment is quite compatible with a proper degree of social recreation, and that, indeed, a wife and mother is healthier, in both mind and body, for occasional relaxation in society. Moreover, as a general tale, women do not begin to think till they are married. A man of sense finds the conversation of a raw girl inexpressibly stupid, for it has lost the naiveté of childhood without acquiring the solid character of experience in life; and intelligent women complain continually of the annoyance of having to talk to conceited boys. Why do not the real heads of society, therefore, assert their supremacy, and, by putting down the reign of the Mazourka, the Schottisch, and their concomitant, "Young America," restore to society a higher tone? The is formed, the intelligent, and the really well-bred, who now avoid what is called society, would then return to it, and a party would become a place for the exchange of ideas, and grow to be a rational amusement. But, while "Young America" keeps the head, the heels will carry it "all hollow" against the head. [Phil. Ledger.

COTTON IS KING.—Charles Dickens, in a late number of his "Household Words," after enumerating the striking facts of Cotton, says:

"Let any social or physical convulsion visit the United States, and England would feel the shock from Land's End to John O'Groat's. The lives of nearly two millions of our countrymen are dependent upon the Cotton crops of America; their destiny may be said, without any sort of hyperbole, to hang upon a thread.

"Should any dire calamity befall the land of Cotton, a thousand of our merchant ships would rot idly in dock; ten thousand mills must stop their huey looms, and two million mouths would starve for lack of food to feed them."

A SECOND EDITION OF TEN THOUSAND PRINTED!

The extraordinary favor with which the all-absorbing work has been received by the united press and the public, has exhausted the enormous number first published in the space of thirty days. The publishers are now prepared with a second edition of 10,000 copies. The production is fast becoming verified that 10,000 copies of this journal of a book will have been disposed of in less time than was consumed in selling the same number of Mrs. Stowe's famous fiction. Volumes could be filled with the commendations it has received from all sections and classes. We submit a few extracts to exhibit the unmistakable heartiness of this reception:

[From the Boston Daily Journal.]

"Third great Missionary work; same name; thrilling incidents, illustrating the remark that 'truth is stranger than fiction.' It is a work of deep interest. The profits arising therefrom are to be devoted to the support of the 'Ladies' Mission.'"

[From the New York Observer.]

"We have read this book with deep interest. It contains the annals of a noble charity. Some of the narratives have a touching and thrilling interest. The volume is illustrated with fine engravings, and the proposition 'Old Corn,' we were compelled recently to notice."

[From the Cleveland (Ohio) Herald.]

"'The Old Brewery' bids fair to reach a circulation equal to that of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' It contains many a stirring and truthful picture of the misery, degradation, squalor, sin, and almost incredible wretchedness that exists in this glorious spot."

[From the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.]

"They possess interest far surpassing that of any work of fiction that has been or can be written on similar subjects. Whatever profits may arise from the sale of this book, will be applied to the support of the Ladies' Mission."

[From the Examiner, N. Y. City.]

"These deeply interesting sketches are written with a simplicity and pathos which will greatly add to the reader. It is illustrated with five fine engravings, and in style and appearance has everything to commend it."

[From the Reading (Pa.) Gazette.]

"The most intensely interesting narratives ever issued from the press. The real charm, the true value of the book, consists in the literal translations of every story it contains. No touching incidents will be found in its pages. It is a volume of rare merit for all to read."

AYER'S
CHERRY PECTORAL,
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS,
BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH,
CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notoriety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the Cherry Pectoral does not only as a general thing, but almost invariably cure the maladies for which it is employed.

As time makes these facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually become the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log-cabin of the American peasant to the palaces of European kings. Throughout this entire country, Cherry Pectoral is known as the best remedy extant for diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, Cherry Pectoral is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms-houses, Public Institutions and in domestic practice, as the surest remedy their attending physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases and for children it is safe, pleasant and effectual to cure. In fact, none of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from parents who have found it efficacious in cases particularly incidental to childhood.

The Cherry Pectoral is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it undergoes its own eye, with invariable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.

We have endeavored here to furnish this community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should commend itself to their confidence—a remedy not once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and countless trials proved itself to be; and thus by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of uniform strength to afford physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy that will do for them all that medicine can do. YOUNG CONVERTS SHOULD BE HOLY.

Perhaps no fact connected with Christian experience can be better demonstrated than the above. And yet I have heard some contend that every converted person was in that moment made pure and holy; thus making holiness and regeneration identical. Can there be a more fatal error than this? If we examine the case closely, we shall find that Satan has many seductive snares laid for us at this very point. It is true the enemy is conquered in that hour, but he is not destroyed; he is manacled and fettered, but not yet expelled. The groaning monster there, and like the lion in the net, may be ahernessed by a very small object; nay, smaller than we may be apt to suspect. A mouse may gnaw the covering, may cut the bonds, and the raging monster is again at liberty. It is a great work to conquer sin in the heart, but a greater still to expel it from it cannot be that the first can happen without producing joy and relief; but a very little while will convince us that the demon is neither dead nor sleeping, but only chained, and if we are not fully aware of our danger, he may be covered with guilt and confusion in a very short time. Prudent caution to young believers at this important crisis is essential to their happiness. How natural it is for the heart that was bowed down with the heaviness of guilt, writhing under the apprehension of Divine vengeance facing the dread catalogue of sins, when the spirit speaks the word, and it looks up into the face of a reconciled Father, to imagine that he is now out of danger! Yet how great an error it is! A mistake made here is the fruitful consequence of trouble, vexation, doubts, unbelief, and worst of all, of apostacy. Many honest persons are truly and scripturally converted, and soon fall away, give up their confidence, and cast their shield away. These things discourage the Church, and many are prone to believe that these people were deceived, whilst the poor wanderer catches at the welcome intelligence which frees them from the charge of falling away. This case is in some respects almost equal to the effects of that anti-scriptural, illogical, and ruinous dogma of final perseverance rendered complete in a single act of faith. I say almost, in its effects, for I certainly think that if the Devil were to choose a text, and make a sermon for young converts, he could not serve his purpose better than is often done by ministers under the pernicious doctrine of the impossibility of apostacy. But we often let our young converts remain right where our great enemy would have them in order to complete their ruin. Further is it saying too much, to say that a zealous preacher will have need to exercise all his ingenuity to save his young lambs from straying from the fold. It is not enough to get them into the flock; it is not enough to place their names upon their class-papers: it is not enough to know that they are genuinely converted; but we must mark them afterward, and see the first approach of temptation to doubt or sin, and seize it as the strongest evidence of the necessity of a faster work, a cleansing work, and then we shall direct their minds to that point where divine wisdom will assist, convince and visit them in all cleansing power.

I do not hesitate to say that the lamentable decrease of backsliders in the Church, in modern revivals, is owing almost solely to the neglect of this work of holiness. Good Christians whose zeal for the good cause leads them to open the arms of their benevolent faith and take in the whole world in their labors, are too apt to be straining to get more than rather than to keep those who have been already secured. They forget how great is the moral influence exerted by the membership of the Church, even in revivals, and if their labors be ever so potent, they will fail of their desired object, unless they are sustained by an orderly, consistent, and spiritual membership. This assertion is doubtless sustained by the experience of every minister of the Gospel. Go where you will, and inquire of the conesrns of Methodism, and you will be met by an almost universal regret, that the discipline of the Church is so generally neglected; indeed it sometimes happens that those who call loudest for this pruning work prune themselves dead branches, and would be among the first severed from the vine. Yet this so common among us to lament this evil, that one may scarcely claim his kinship to the Methodist family unless he joins the hue and cry after the preachers, and lay the blame at their doors. But notwithstanding this, the man who commences this work of purifying the Church may expect to have carnal professors aroused to open rupture with him, and opposing him at every point, and if he gains the desired end he will make himself enemies, and be plentifully abused for his labor. Some will say that the discipline is out of date, and that its rules are not suited to the times—this is true. Unfortunately it is neglected too much, and it never was suited to the times; but it was once, and is now, the best guide to Heaven, outside of the Bible, of which indeed its rules are but a convenient transcript. I do sincerely pity that pseudo Methodist whose carnal refinement regards that little book as the production of a benighted age, unfit for this day of educated sin and fleshly luxury. But are there not some who thus regard it? God grant they may soon be among a lost race of inconsistent dreamers.

Now the question arises, what influences have brought about this extensive necessity for rigid discipline? Doubtless other causes may concur, but this will be found the most potent in the number: our people are not taught the peculiarity of Methodism—holiness. They are not indoctrinated on this point, and consequently they lapse into doubt, error and sin, until they become bold in unbelief, and if they do not deny the Lord that bought them, they nevertheless ridicule that standard of faith and practice which they once so highly estimated. Conscious that they do not obey it, they can readily find reasons to urge against their obligation to observe it. But how did they fall to this lamentable condition? Perhaps thus: they were converted, truly, soundly, and brought into the Church. They never conceived that it was essential to be converted until the minister brought so many evidences of the fact before them, that they could not resist the light without, and the Holy Spirit within; they believed, and were delivered from the guilt and punishment of sin; the old man of sin was destroyed in the heart, and perhaps for days, or even weeks, they had peace with God. But soon they felt temptations to sin; some besetment of old appeared again, and they listened to it, lust conceived and brought forth sin; they did not design the result, but having heard little or nothing on the subject of holiness, they supposed that it was positively impossible to prevent sinning sometimes, and soon they learn to take courage, and quote Scripture to prove that "there is none good, no, not one;" if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us;" and similar passages from which they conclude that it was quite necessary to live moderately in sin that grace may abound! They verily thought, too, that this course of sinning and repenting was the tribulation that they should meet in the world! A good brother, once addicted to the bottle, after experiencing a change, made a matter of conscience in taking his morning refreshment, and would not for the world take more than a Christian dram, but in a short time inadvertently he is betrayed, and falls back again into the mire. Now, had this brother looked carefully at the third specification in our general rules, among the evils we are to avoid, he would have seen that his morning beverage was as much a violation of the Church regulations as the act of drunkenness. A sister, once fond of the intoxicating pleasures of the dance, never supposed it was wrong to see that going on, which her conscience warned her not to engage in herself; but a few like occasions found her the gayest of the party, whirling down the senseless follies of the waltz. Now what is the cure? Let us go back to the old paths, brethren, we shall find an efficient remedy. Let us ask ourselves, the old patriarchs among us, and the records of the past, what was done fifty years ago in similar cases; let us follow that example and we shall find our piety increasing as a Church, and God will own us now, as he did then, in mighty power, confounding the wicked, and creating a holy body in our midst. I would that we could all see the importance of this course, and that the good spirit of God would influence us to take it. We must do so, or the Methodism to which the world looks hopefully as the grand instrument in its salvation, will be numbered among the things that were!

COUNSEL TO PARENTS.—Be very vigilant over thy child in the April of his understanding, lest the frost of May nip his blossoms. While he is a tender twig strengthen him; while he is a new vessel season him; such as thou makest him, such commonly thou shalt find him. Let his first lesson be obedience, and the second shall be what thou wilt. Give him education in good letters, to the utmost of thy ability and his capacity. Season his youth with the love of his Creator, and make the fear of his God the beginning of his knowledge. If he have an active spirit, rather rectify than curb it; but reckon idleness among his chief faults. Above all things, keep him from vain, lascivious, and amorous pamphlets, as the forerunners of all vice.

As his judgment ripens, observe his inclination, and tender him a calling that shall not cross it; forced marriages and callings seldom prosper. Show him both the mow and the plough; and prepare him as well for the danger of the skirmish as for the honor of the prize. If he choose the profession of a scholar, advise him to study the most profitable arts. Poetry and mathematics take up too great a latitude of the soul, and, moderately used, are good recreations, but bad callings, being nothing but their own reward. If he choose a trade, teach him to forget his father's house and his mother's wing; advise him to be conscientious, careful, and constant. This done, thou hast done thy part; leave the rest to Providence, and thou hast done it well. [Quarles.*

* It may be well to note that this writer was well qualified, from his own experience, to give counsel to parents, being himself the father of eighteen children.

SCRIPTURE IN SERMONS.—Wise and godly ministers of Christ have frequently urged the importance of not only making a portion of divine truth the basis of a sermon, but also of making the entire discourse eminently scriptural.

This was never more appropriate than at present. Ministers, especially those who are young in their work, are too ready to think that the quotation of a plain text, to give sanction to a plain truth, is unnecessary, and perhaps would be deemed commonplace and uninteresting. This conclusion arises from a mistaken feeling that preaching the gospel of Christ is like other forms of public instruction, in which trite quotations from authors, to give force to a plain sentiment, would be considered dull. But preaching the word of God is not like preaching anything else. Every word of God is authoritative; and the end to be secured by preaching it is not attained by the "excellency of speech," but by the power of the Holy Spirit; and as the spirit ordinarily works with the truth, it is to place Divine truth before the mind, though it be truth that is undisputed by the hearer; for who can tell at what time the Holy Spirit may give it a power that the hearer never felt before. Our business is to preach God's word rather than our own.

OCEAN SPRINGS, May 4, 1854.

Leaving Bay St. Louis, I crossed over Jordan river to inspect the peach orchards of Col. Whitfield and the Rev. Mr. Anderson; the latter has abandoned his, and now offers it for sale, and a charming place it is, either for a man of fortune to enjoy the otium cum dignitate, or for a skillful arbor-culturist to realize an independence. Col. Whitfield is a man of wealth, and is making a liberal expenditure of it to test the capacities of this region for fruit. He has many varieties under trial, and is experimenting with guano and other stimulants and vermifuges extensively. Such men are the real benefactors of a country; they instruct thousands by their example; they teach the barren sands to produce; they cheapen the luxuries of life; they plant the wilderness with roses; they infuse a taste for the beautiful and useful, and thus soften and ameliorate the asperities of human nature. Give men comforts, and they must naturally feel grateful; multiply our enjoyments, and the emotions we feel are kindred to prayer. Who has not felt the worship of a flower; the inspiration of a vocal forest, and the booming ocean, and thus learned to—

"Look through Nature up to Nature's God!"

In the vicinity of Col. Whitfield's I visited the farm of Col. Lambkin (an oasis in the desert) whose old Virginia hospitality makes every wayfarer welcome. He was educated a lawyer; was subsequently Professor of Languages at Jefferson College, Mississippi, and is now extensively engaged in burning charcoal. With this business, which he carries on with some thirty hands, he combines a little scientific farming. One experiment I had never witnessed before. He has planted corn and sweet potatoes in the same ridge, applying guano at the rate of 200 pounds to the acre. The prospect is a heavy yield of each.

With a gentle breeze I soon sailed round to Pass Christian, a beautiful and improving place, stretching along the coast for several miles. Here I found many agreeable acquaintances, and among them Col. Thomas Kershaw, the Rev. Mr. Savage and Hon. John Henderson. Col Kershaw is a South Carolinian, son of a late eminent merchant of Charleston. He is a large planter on Lake Washington, but makes the Pass his permanent residence; and here he has everything to render home delightful; an elegant house, a spacious garden, a select library, the means of enjoyment on land and sea, and a temperament to appreciate these blessings. Mr. Savage has in charge a flourishing seminary for young ladies. He is a man of fine attainments; of refined manners, and unaffected piety, and of much experience, having passed many years of his life on missionary duty in Asia and Africa. General Henderson commenced his career as a lawyer, in Woodville. He removed to the Pass many years ago, bringing with him a high reputation, and succeeding to the practice of the late Judge Pray, who had been called to the High Court of Appeals. While thus engaged, he was elected to the Senate of the United States, where he served with distinction. This carried him into the Supreme Court of the United States, in which he has an extensive practice. He now practices, likewise, in New Orleans, and in Mississippi, ranking as one of the ablest jurists in the South. As the head and leader of "Young America," and the champion of Cuban independence, he is the nucleus of a powerful party, and exercises much influence on public opinion. I find at the Pass many of your citizens, with elegant establishments, and to one of them especially, Mr. John. M. Bach, I must return my thanks for placing his boat at my disposal, and other polite attentions. He treated me to a chowder made after a recipe presented to him by Mr. Webster, and sent me a rose cut from a tree planted by Mr. Clay, many years ago, on a visit to Mr. Bach in Jefferson City.

A pleasant drive brought me to Barnes' Hotel, Mississippi City, owned by one of your enterprising citizens, and is, in all its departments, a credit to him and to the sea-shore. The renowned Palmetto Farm of Dr. Tegarden is near-by, and a model farm it is. The mansion and flank buildings, and out-houses generally, are stately, spacious, and admirably planned. The dining-saloon, with its fixtures and appurtenances, excels any I have ever seen, and the kitchen and culinary apparatus make a scientific study. These gastronomic arrangements were planned and manufactured by Mr. Hand, the head of the extensive foundry at Buena Vista, and one of the most ingenious men of the day. On this farm, highly fertilized with guano, marsh-muck, sea weed, putrescent fish and stable composts, is produced a large portion of the supplies for a table of 300 persons. The potatoes, vegetables, fruit of many kinds, and in great perfection and abundance; oats, rice and corn are all grown here; besides, butter, mutton, beef and pork of fine flavor. This has been effected on a sand-bank, where, in former times, scarcely a blade of nutricious grass was seen to grow; yet now, the rich Bermuda grass, almost equal to the pastures of Kentucky, fringes the sea-beach, and yields the finest hay. So much for perseverance and book-farming; so much for agricultural chemistry and agricultural newspapers, which teach us to discard old prejudices, and to test new methods. As a landlord, Dr. Tegarden is what is technically called "a trump," or, in marine phrase, "A No. 1." He was long a practitioner of medicine, but is now a homeopathist, and, what is still better, a tee-totaller.

A happy exemption from the use of alcoholic drinks pervades this community. This is owing, originally, to the Doctor's son-in-law, John J. McCaughan, one of the most intellectual men I have fallen in with in my journeyings. He has peculiar notions on politics, government, law, society and religion, and is no tyro in discussion. He frequently engages in debate with politicians and preachers, and my advice to either class which encounter him is, to be well posted up. The father of this gentleman is a venerable Methodist minister, and, sceptical as the son is, I do not despair of seeing him one day at the foot of the altar, surrendering his "unbelief," and crying: "Lord, what shall I do to be saved?" Mr. McCaughan was the early champion of the temperance movement; he advocated it in the Legislature, and has sustained it here, amidst the temptations of a seaside resort, overflowing with metropolitan visitors, by his own example. He has had able and earnest coadjutors in the Rev. H. T. Lewis, W. A. Champlin, an influential and popular lawyer, and many others in the vicinity, where the "Social Circles" are fully organized, and are accomplishing much good.

Immediately in the rear of Mississippi City lies Buena Vista, one of the most beautiful and picturesque, and one of the most thriving and prosperous villages in the South, with a population distinguished for intelligence, enterprise, industry, sobriety, and all the social virtues. The learned professions are duly and ably represented; its merchants are enlightened and liberal men; it is blessed with the presence and good works of several ministers of the Gospel, who "walk in Christ," and whose paths are as "shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." But its population consists chiefly of mechanics, and here they constitute a community of which any country may well be proud. Millwrights, foundry-men, house-joiners, ship-carpenters, blacksmiths, coach-makers, braziers, painters, cabinet-makers, shoemakers, and saddlers; in short, every branch of the mechanic arts may be found in Buena Vista in full operation. The mills carry on an immense trade in lumber, and at the foundry, which employs, I believe, about one hundred hands, any kind of machinery, of any required delicacy, strength, or magnitude, may be executed to order faithfully and with despatch. Schooners, sloops, or steamboats can be built and completely equipped at Buena Vista. The village, and indeed the whole country round, is blessed with good health and good water; and the lovers of good fruit and fine vegetables will find the very best on the highly cultivated little farms in the vicinity. Since the first establishment of Buena Vista, there never has been a drop of ardent spirits sold within its limits—the citizens are all tetotallers. I must not forget to mention the "Reformer," a family paper recently set up by the Rev. Mr. Lewis, the main pillar of the temperance cause, and a man of extraordinary energy and perseverance. His journal is conducted with taste, vigor and good sense, and is rapidly getting into circulation. This paper has become the medium of many correspondents in the sea-coast counties, and has disclosed the existence of much literary talent, heretofore dormant.

A very pleasant ride took me to Biloxi, the most ancient village on the sea-shore, and long the favorite resort of your creole population. It is a historical place, and the traditions and legends connected with it are full of poetry and romance. These, I presume, will appear, from time to time, in the "Sea-Coast Journal," a very handsome paper lately established by Mr. Marschall, a gentleman long known to the profession. Biloxi is distinguished for its shrubbery, its picturesque sentinel cottages and villas; its picturesque water view, and magnificent oaks, some of which, the "Green Oaks," give name to a popular hotel, whose garden rivals the bowers of Calypso, and whose cuisine is the theme and admiration of all epicures. There are several excellent boarding-houses in Biloxi, and most agreeable society.

From this point I crossed over, in a sail-boat, to Ocean Spring, that far-famed infant phenomenon and temple of health, of which I had heard so much. The progress of improvement has certainly been wonderful. Two years ago a solitary settlement, the resort of fishermen and hunters; now, a beautiful town, with its commanding wharf, its daily steamers, its palace-like hotel, its splendid private mansions and beautiful residences; grounds and gardens richly embellished; streets and squares laid out on a scale of metropolitan magnitude; but not at all too much so for the apparent and proximate destiny of the place. It is in the hands of men who combine capital and credit; enterprise and liberality; high private character with public spirit, and a proper conception of the useful and the beautiful. Such men cannot fail to develop the wonderful resources of this attractive place. Disconnected with hygienic considerations, it has a charm about it, an eligibility of position, a water prospect, a high, undulating surface singularly adapted to embellishment; a bold bluff and a defined originality of outline distinct from any other sea-shore resort, and certain to captivate the man of taste.

The proprietors have liberally and judiciously adopted a scale of prices, in valuing their lots, which puts it in the power of any industrious man to become a proprietor, and hence the unexampled improvement of Ocean Springs. Most of those that live here sit "under their own vine and fig-tree." It is their interest to improve; and, as though by enchantment, new edifices are springing up in every direction. A permanent, prosperous, lot-owning population has been secured; what remains to establish its prosperity and stimulate its progress will be accomplished, without the intervention of man, by the almost miraculous waters which here bubble up from the bosom of the earth.

Of these waters, and the extraordinary cures they have effected, I will hereafter speak. They seem to have been placed there by Providence for the relief of suffering humanity; and recall to my mind the words of Job: "The thing that is hid bringeth He forth to light." JOHN BUNYAN.

CRANMAR AND THE POPISH PRIEST.

In 1538 the whole Bible was reprinted by Grafton and Whitchurch, under the authority of Archbishop Cranmer, who also wrote a preface for it. This was called Cranmer's Bible, and had an uncommon series of good and bad fortune. After being ordered by Henry VIII, in 1540, to be set out and read in every parish church, the capricious prince in less than two years afterwards, prohibited its use. Edward VI restored it in 1550, and it subsequently shared the fate of the religion it was intended to elucidate.

There is an anecdote relative to the Archbishop preserved, which curiously illustrates the obloquy which was heaped upon him by the illiberal party, in consequence of his having succeeded in obtaining the king's license for the publication of his Bible.

"A priest who resided near Scarborough, was sitting among his companions regaling himself with his usual potations of beer, at the door of the parish ale-house, when the conversation happened to turn upon the Archbishop. The priest, who had more scurrility than discernment, and more freedom than discretion, replied, that great as that man now was, he was once but an hostler, and had no more learning than the goslings yonder on the green. This speech being reported to Lord Essex, he desired that the priest might be arrested and brought to the Fleet. Some months after, the Archbishop, who was ignorant of the whole affair, received a petition from him, expressive of great contrition for his offence, and earnestly importuning him for forgiveness. Inquiry having been made, he was sent for, and being brought before the primate, he thus addressed him: 'I hear,' said he, 'you have accused me of many things, and among others of my being a very ignorant man; you have now an opportunity of setting your neighbors right in the matter, and may examine me if you please.' The consternation of the priest at this unexpected offer may be more easily conceived than described, and in great confusion he besought his grace's pardon, and owned he was not much learned in book matters. 'Well, then,' said the Archbishop, mildly, 'since you will not examine me, let me examine you.' The poor priest was now in greater distress than before, which the Archbishop seeing, endeavored to reassure him, by telling him he would not 'go very deep,' and then asked him two or three simple questions in the Bible. 'Tell me,' said he, 'who was King David's father?' The priest paused, and then said, 'In good faith, my lord, I have forgotten his name.' 'Well, then,' returned the Archbishop, 'since you cannot tell me that, who was Solomon's father?' It was in vain; the priest was as much puzzled as before. 'Good my lord,' said he, 'bear with me; I am not further read in the Bible than is daily read in our service in the Church; I am altogether unlearned, and understand not the Latin tongue but very simply. My only study has been to say my service and mass, fair and deliberate; which I can do as well as any priest in the country where I dwell, thank God!' Cranmar now gently rebuked him; and having pointed out the folly of his behaviour, dismissed him with these words: 'You see how your accusation rises against yourself; you are an admirable judge of learning, indeed, in arraigning your betters, and have no desire to keep you. Get home, and if you are an ignorant man, learn at least, to be an honest one.' Then alluding to the rest of the Popish party, he added, 'God amend your all, forgive you, and send you better minds.'"

ENGLISH GARDENS.

Why have we no history of English gardens? It might make a reputation. Mr. Johnson has drawn up a sketch, but dry and imperfect. We want Evelyn and Walpole united, with a tinge of Gray. The monks were the first horticulturists. Orchards and gardens grew round the sequestered homes of learning. Chaucer describes a garden of the fifteenth century—

This yerde was large, and railed al the alleye,
And shadowed well with blossoming bowis grene,
And trenched newe, and sanded all the weye.

The gardens of Nonsuch, in the reign of Henry VIII, might be taken as the starting-point. About the same period, Hamptou Court was laid out by Wolsey. A paper in the "Archæologia" supplies some pleasing notices; and a scholar, of high attainments, recently communicated several particulars to the open and watchful ear of Sylvanus Urban. He mentions Hollar's engraving of Boscobel and Lord Arundel's seat in Surrey; the delicious pleasure-grounds of Sir Matthew Decker on Richmond green, where the pine-apple was first brought to perfection; Beddington, the place of the Carews, and the home of the earliest orange-tree planted in England; and Ham House, on the banks of the Thames, shaded by sprouting elms and still reminding us of Evelyn's account of its pastures, orangeries, groves, fountains and aviaries. In later days, Ham House has been sketched by the same pencil that gave fame to Our Village. "Ham House is a perfect model of the mansion of the last century, with its dark, shadowy front, its steps and terraces, its marble busts, and its deep silent court. Harlow Place must have been just such an abode of stateliness and seclusion. Those iron gates seem to have been erected for no other purpose than to divide Lovelace from Clarissa—they look so stern, and so unrelenting. If there were any Clarisses now-a-days, they would be found at Ham House. And the keeping is so perfect. The very flowers are old-fashioned. No American borders, no kalmias or azaleas, or magnolias, or such heathen shrubs. No flimsy China roses. Nothing new-fangled. None but flowers of the olden time, arranged in gay, formal knots, staid, and trim, and regular, and without a leaf awry."

I may add that Camden, a cotemporary of Spenser, mentions Guy-Cliff, in Warwickshire, with unusual animation; and Sir William Temple bestowes a panegyric on Sir Henry Fanshawe's flower-garden at Ware Park, and his article on arrangement of colors. "In did so precisely examine the tinctures and seasons of his flowers, that in their settings the inwardest of which that were to come up at the same time should be always a little darker than the utmost; and to serve them for a kind of gentle shadow." Temple also mentions, as the "perfectest figure of a garden" he ever saw, "either at home or abroad," the one made by the Countess of Bedford, who was the theme of Donne and his poetic brethren. It combined every excellence of the antique pleasure-ground; the terrace gravel-walk, three hundred paces long, and broad in proportion; "the border set with standard laurels, and at large distances, which have the beauty of orange-trees, both of flower and fruit;" the stone steps, in three series, leading to extensive parterres; the fountains and statues; summer-houses; and a cloister facing the south and covered with vines. These, with the ivied balustrade, and—composed a garden that suited, while it encouraged, the meditative temper of our ancestors.

The English garden of the sixteenth century was the Latin reproduced. Lord Bacon's walks and topiary work at Gorhambury were reflections of Pliny's Tusculan Villa. The solemn terrace, sloping lawn, little flower-garden, with fountain in the centre, and sculptured trees, were common to both. Evelyn's garden was a happy example. Perhaps the antique system had more than one feature worthy of preservation. It is pleasant to look at Pliny, through one of his own amusing letters, sitting in a room shaded by plane-trees, and, like Sidney—

Deaf to noise and blind to light; or sauntering beneath an embowered walk of vines, so soft that his uncovered feet suffered no inconvenience. Pope describes such a path in his ingenious imitation of Cowley—

There in bright drops the crystal fountains play,
By laurels shaded from the burning day;
Where summer's beauty, spite of winter stays
And winter's coldness spite of summer's rays.

And Milton shows our first parents, in Eden, rising with the early dawn to dress the —alleys green,

Their walk at noon, with branches over-grown.

Bacon, in gardening as in philosophy, had the prophetic eye. He foresaw the charm of ornamental scenery, which was to delight the refined taste of another generation. Mason praises him for banishing the crisped knot and artificial foliage, while he restored the ample lawn,

—to feast their sight,
With verdure pure, unbroken, unabridged.

Bacon and Milton were the prophet and the herald, Pope and Addison the reformer and the legislator, of horticulture—Pope in the Spectator, Addison in the Guardian. Neither was a mere theorist. Addison made a few experiments in landscape decoration at his rural seat, near Rugby; and Pope created a little Elysium at Twickenham. However modern rhymers about green beds may deride him, he loved nature and understood her charms. In a letter to Richardson, written in the freshness of a summer morning, he invites him to pass the day among his shades, "and as much of the night as a fine moon allows." From the heat of noon he retreated into his grotto—fit haunt for poetry and wood-nymphs! Sails gliding up and down the river cast a faint, vanishing gleam through a sloping arcade of trees; and when the doors of the grotto were closed, the changeful scenery of birds, woods and boats were reflected on the wall. As the sun sunk behind the branches, his terrace tempted him abroad: it commanded the finest reach of the river. At Richmond, in the words of Thomson,

—the silver Thames first rural grows,
Pair winding up to where the Muses haunt,
In Twit'nam's bowers.

The leafy walks of Ham were opposite, and Petersham-wood lent a dark frame to the bright hill of Richmond, of which the Saxon name, Shene, or brilliancy, is so happily descriptive. Not a foot of ground was overlooked or unembellished. Within the small enclosure of five acres, Pope had a charming flower-garden—his own work—an orangery, bowling-green and vineyard. There he feasted his friends, Swift saying grace, which Dr. Wharton declares that he always did with remarkable devotion:

'Tis true no lackeys dignify my boards,
But gardeners, threshers, which my Thames affords;
To Homer's health I drink, and if a toast to Dryden,
There comes your mutton, and these sallets my own.
From you old walnut tree a shower shall fall,
And grapes, long hanging on my only wall,
And figs from standard and espalier join.

Nor should that other garden be forgotten, where,

—through the gloom of Shenstone's fairy grove,
Maria's urn still breathes the voice of love.

It was the creation and home of a most accomplished person, who delighted in every refinement of rural taste, and brought elegance into a rustic farm, to—

Grace the low vales with many a budding rose,
Now founts of lilies distill,
Call for refreshing shades, and decorate repose.

Whately gave the best account of his "eye" lay the town of Hales Owen. The Wrekin, thirty miles distant, rose clearly above the horizon; a grove overhung a small valley, through which a rivulet flowed, with clusters of open coppice-wood scattered along its banks, and the shadow of every leaf marked on the water. Shenstone had no model to work after, but his zig-zag walk, gilt urn, and other eccentricities, may well be forgiven. But he felt the melancholy complaint of a heart ever sadder than his own:

How oft the scenes that offer rest,
And hearts, that cannot rest, agree.

"I feed my wild ducks, I water my carnations! happy enough if I could extinguish my ambition quite, or indulge my desire of being something more beneficial in my sphere."

Shenstone's hardest trial was the nearness of Hagley—it was the sometime living next door to the epic poet. What was Virgil's Grove compared with the Tinian Lawn, encircled by stately trees, so full of leaf that no branch or stem was visible—nothing but large undulating masses of foliage. How insignificant became all rustic ornament before the solitary urn, chosen by Pope himself for the spot, afterwards inscribed to his memory, and "shown by a gleam of moonlight through the trees." Whately touches the autumnal beauty of this scene with great sweetness: "It is delightful to saunter here, and see the grass and gossamer which entwine it glistening with dew; to listen and hear nothing stir except, perhaps, a withered leaf dropping gently through a tree." The exquisite lines of Thomson are recalled by this imitation:

—for now the leaf
Incessant rustles from the mournful grove,
Oft starting such as studious walk below.

By degrees, the influence of taste began to spread. Gardening, like criticism, was taught by the poets. Kent attributes his skill in laying out ground to the study of Spenser. But pictures helped him. In Pope's graceful letter to Lord Burlington, he speaks of

—Kent, who felt
The pencil's power

Stowe and Claremont were celebrated by Garth, Thomson, and Walpole: Esher, too, received the praise of the learned poet, to whom Kent was deeply indebted for leave and assistance:

Pleased let me stray to Esher's peaceful grove,
Where Kent and nature vie for Pelham's love.

Brown was another architect of gardens, who has found a niche in poetry. Cooper regarded his desolating style with indignation and contempt:

He speaks! the lake in front becomes a lawn,
Woods vanish, hills subside, and valleys rise.

But he had a good eye for particular effects, and his treatment of water at Blenheim was admirable. "I used to think it," was the lively saying of Walpole, "one of the ugliest places in England; a giant's castle, which had laid waste all the country round him." In the garden scene, Brown showed his power; he was the reformer of gravel-walks. A friend of mine reminds me of two other improvers of gardens—Mr Hamilton, who shaped the beautiful grounds at Payne's Hill; and the great Lord Chatham, who in the eagerness of his temper designed (as was by torch-light, and was so careless of expense, that he spread the streams in the little valleys of Kent and Middlesex into lakes, and covered the hills of Somersetshire with cedars that he beat from the nurseries of London. One charm of an English garden is quite peculiar to it—freshness and beauty of turf. The grass-plot is as much our own as the green hedge. Throughout Italy—with the single exception of Caserta—the bright English color is unknown. Perhaps the quiet courts of our colleges present the finest specimens of grass; still the meadows behind Trinity and Clare are abundantly gay and fruitful. There wantons the "pad" of the modern abbot—

His sleek sides bathing in the dewy green.

Happy is he in his labor and his rest. No commission disturbs his stall. He cares not for corn-laws, watched over by the benevolent eye of the Bursar; and in the warm twilight of a June evening, it is very pleasant to hear him leisurely pattering home under the dim avenue of limes.

The picturesque tourist in England may find numerous pleasure-grounds to reward his industry. It will be sufficient to specify the Chinese garden at Cassiobury, famous in Evelyn's time, with conservatory and pagoda full of porcelain, mandarins, paintings, and gold fish, all set off by large sea-plants; the antique flower-garden at Hatfield, Lord Salisbury's, with its walks over-arched by clipped lime trees; the rock-garden of Lady Broughton, who spent eight years in its composition; and of the late Mr. Wells, at Red-Leaf, where Nature herself is the most liberal and accomplished contributor. The chief beauty of White Knights, now broken up, arose from the display of exotics, and the variegated flush of color.

One word on London gardens may not be uninteresting. No passage in the Task is more familiar to poetic ears, than the description of the citizen's delight in a glimpse of flowers on his wall:

The villas with which London stands begirt,
Like a swarth Indian with his belt of beads,
Prove this
A garden in which nothing thrives, has charms
To soothe the rich possessor, much consoled
That here and there some sprigs of mournful mint,
Or night-shade, or valerian, grace the well
He cultivates.

But a great change has come over the London gardens since Cowper's day. The late Mr. London drew attention to the costly plants found in them. He gave this explanation: The gardens of suburban streets are planted by speculative builders, and chiefly from nursery sales, which have been very frequent during the last twenty or thirty years. It is the custom at these auctions to mix rare with common plants, that the former may sell the latter. In this way, the choicest specimens have found their way into the grass-plots of cottage-villas, or the humbler rew.

I have not spoken of the moral influence of a garden; but it is lively and lasting. Is there not a holy truth in the angel's admonition to Esdras, (II. ix. 24-5.) "Go into a field of flowers where no house is builded, and eat only the flowers of the field; taste no flesh, drink no wine, but eat flowers only. And pray unto the Highest continually—then will I come and talk with thee." "Happy they who can create a rose, or erect a honeysuckle." The remark is Gray's, and history furnishes touching testimony to its truth. When Hoogh visited Sancroft in Suffolk, he found him working in his garden; "Almost all you see," said the good Archbishop, "is the work of my own hands, though I am bordering on eighty years of age. My old woman does the weeding, and John mows the turf and digs for me; but all the nicer work—the sowing, grafting, budding, transplanting, and the like—I trust to no other hand but my own—so long, at least, as my health will allow me to enjoy so pleasing an occupation; and in good south, the fruits here taste more sweet, and the flowers have a richer perfume, than they had at Lambeth." If Sancroft could have foreseen the Task, he would have heard his voice reflected in the writer's account of his own rustic labors:

—no works, indeed,
That ask robust tough sinews, bred to toil,
Servile employ; but such as may amuse,
Not tire, demanding rather skill than force.

Though a mightier hand than Cowper's had, long before, in a magnificent history-pieces, exhibited the earliest gardeners of the world reposing after their toil—

Under a tuft of shade that on the green
Stood whispering soft, by a fresh fountain side
They sat them down; and after no more toil
Of their sweet gardening labor than sufficed
To recommend cool zephyr, and made ease
More easy.

We have, in our gallery of literature, two very celebrated personages, who were always longing for country seclusion, and at length obtained what they sought—Cowley and Bolingbroke. Perhaps this wish was the only one which to covetousness an that one which I have always had—that I might be the master at last of a small house and a large garden, and there dedicate the remainder of my life only to the culture of flowers and the study of nature." The lover of sweet fancies has reason to regret that Cowley did not find the Eden he anticipated, or live to make it what he hoped; he had the "inward eye which is the bliss of solitude," and discovered in the meanest flower or weed by the hedge-row—

Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

When Boswell mentioned to Johnson the saying of Shenstone, that Pope had the art beyond any other writer of condensing sense, Johnson replied: "It is not true, sir; there is more sense in a line of Cowley than in a page of Pope." He might have enlarged this criticism in his Life of Cowley; other poets may be read; he is to be studied. The multitude of his allusions cause a continual strain on the memory; and the richness of his fancy blinds the reader to the strength of his intellect; as in tropical woods the thickest trunk of the tree is hidden by the tall grass and plants, that climb up and encircle it.

In Cowley, the feeling for gardens, trees, and fountains, was natural and sincere. He was one —whose heart the holy forms

Of young imagination have kept pure.

But it is worth remarking, that the complaint of his touching line—

Business, that contradiction of my fate, was breathed long before by Bacon.

By the side of Cowley, Bolingbroke looks like fiction holding the hand of Truth: upon his lips, affection for the country was a sigh after flowers upon the stage. However, into woods and fields he went—everything was to be rural; the walls of his house were painted with implements of husbandry, done in black crayon. "I am in my farm," he wrote to Swift; "and here I shoot strong and tenacious roots. I have caught hold of the earth, to use a gardener's phrase, and neither my friends nor my enemies will find it an easy matter to transplant me again." Is it ungenerous to couple with Bolingbroke's affected love of gardens, the delight of Walpole in planting beeches and chestnuts at Houghton? "My flatterers," he wrote to General Churchill, "are mutes; they will not lie. I, in return, with sincerity admire them; and have as many beauties about me as fill up all my hours without dangling; and no disgrace attends me from the age of sixty-seven."

My notes on gardens have swelled into an essay; but I must say one word on their relationship to the pencil. Among ourselves, landscape gardening is confined within narrow boundaries. Few parts of England furnish materials for representing the pictures of Poussin, Claude, and the Poussins. Occasional situations may give the scenes of Ruysdael, Berghem, and Hobbema, Waterloo, and A. Vandervelt can be copied wherever trees, lanes, and water are found. Walpole included Claude in the list, but we have neither his architecture or sunshine.

The eminent author of "The Saint's Rest," being reminded of his labors on his death-bed, replied, "I was but a pen in God's hand, and what praise is due to a pen?"

GENERAL CONFERENCE.—We give a copious abstract of the proceedings of this body as late as received. Our abstract is made up from the official reports, published in the Times & Sentinel, under the supervision of a committee of the Conference. These abstracts will be continued during the session which, along with the Editorial Correspondence, will keep the readers of the Advocate fully advised, and at the earliest possible date.

QUESTION.—"Should Members and ordained Ministers of the Methodist Church attend the Circus?" This is what a nomme de plume, called Junius, propounds to our Editor. Under the circumstances, the tripod is silent, and no ex-cathedra response can be given. If the chair were in working order as they say of the Telegraph, we are sure the answer would be: they should not. It is to be regretted that occasion has ever required the asking of such a question. If any man seem to be contentious like Paul, we would cut him off with a word: "We have no such custom in the Churches."

MISS LESLIE'S NEW RECEIPTS FOR COOKING. This work, we take it, is indispensable to the progressive cuisine of every house-wife. It contains the elements of that domestic accomplishment, which displays itself in the furnishing and conduct of pleasant and attractive homes. Somebody defines man as a "cooking animal." If so, cook-books should be studied, doubtless. This we believe is the best work, and latest—containing all the recent discoveries and perfections of the culinary art. At J. B. Steel's, No. 10 Camp st., New Orleans.

JOHN BUNYAN.—Those desirous of acquainting themselves with the Gulf Coast, will be richly repaid in the perusal of the communication from this excellent writer, on the first page of to-day's paper. Other letters will follow, replete with interest.

BLACKWOOD'S FOR APRIL.—This old standard is on the table. Fully equal to itself, which is as much as need be said.

We received this note just as we were going to press last week—too late for insertion.—[ED.

NEW YORK CITY, April 28, 1854.

MY DEAR BROTHER: The Missionaries are all in the city, and on to-morrow we contemplate sailing for China, on the ship "Ariel," bound for Shanghai. We shall not be able to complete the trip, and reach our destined field of labor, in less time than four months. It is not quite stormy without, and the wind comes as though it was immediately from the icebergs of the North. But still the Missionaries are in good spirits, and I have the consolation to know that God is able and willing to protect us by land and by sea.

Great responsibilities rest upon us, and we need the prayers of the whole Church in our behalf, that we may have sufficient grace to sustain us, and that our love for doing good and spreading the Gospel, may be unbounded. My prayer is, that the Church may be wholly sanctified to God—that Christianity may spread to the uttermost portions of the earth, and that heathenism may be dethroned from its power.

I remain your brother in Christ.

WILLIAM LAMBUTH.

MOTHER SYMINGTON.—About one hundred years ago a clergyman in Massachusetts had a respectable neighbor belonging to his parish, who was notoriously addicted to lying; not from any malicious or pecuniary motive, but from perverse habit. This person was Captain Clark, a friend of the clergyman in all temporal matters, and a useful man in the parish. But his example was a source of much inquietude to the divine. He was determined to preach a sermon for the occasion. Accordingly he took for his text, "Lie not one to another." He expatiated on the folly, the wickedness, and evil example of lying, that nearly every person present thought that the clergyman was aiming at the captain. The service being ended, some one said to the captain, "What do you think of the sermon?" "Excellent! excellent!" he replied; "but I could not for my life keep my eyes off old Mother Symington thinking how she must feel, for he certainly meant her". This story was told by a daughter of the clergyman, who heard the sermon; to which she added: "When you see any folly or vice exhibited from the pulpit, before you look out for a Mother Symington, look within yourself, and see if Captain Clark is not there." Her advice had some effect, and may have again. [Belcher's Clergy.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

COLUMBUS, GA., May 5, 1854.

DEAR BRETHER:—The third General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, met in Columbus, Ga., last Monday. A very large proportion of delegates present at the opening of Conference—about 103 out of 120. The sessions are held in the body of the church; and our friends of Columbus present as commodious, substantial and handsomely finished a Methodist church as I have anywhere seen.

To-day the committee on Episcopacy, having examined the administration of the bishops for the last four years, reported a resolution approving the same, and "that the characters of the bishops do pass." It was passed by a unanimous and rising vote. Proper resolutions were also passed touching the lamented death of Bishop Bascom, Bishop Capers and Andrew have not yet appeared in Conference: cause of their detention unknown. There is a painful solicitude, lest it be personal or family affliction. Bishop Paine is not well, though occasionally able to preside. The venerable senior Bishop, SOULE, is bowing under age and long service and infirmities of body, though yet brave and erect. Those that look out of the windows are darkened." He complained yesterday that the audiences were blurred to his eyes—could see none of them distinctly, unless very near, recognized speakers mainly by the sound of voice, and even his hearing was becoming dull. Our Episcopal staff needs strengthening by at least half a dozen additions. In the last four years, thirteen Annual Conferences have been held without Bishops; nine of these west of the Mississippi. And yet these western and southwestern Conferences, young and forming, need the presence and counsel of our Episcopacy most. They are small, and have not as much strength in their delegations. Therefore, it may be, that this General Conference will adjourn with fewer Bishops than we need. The Episcopal Address is delayed for reasons already given.

Gathering as much as one can from the complexion of memorials, I am pleased to see a prevailing satisfaction throughout the borders of Southern Methodism. The structure of our Missionary Society may be subjected to material changes. It is susceptible of improvement.

The debate on the Book Concern opened yesterday, as order of the day. The galleries were well filled (as they are frequently) by a respectful audience and much interested. Rev. Mr. Ralston, of Kentucky, was for a Concern proper, located in the South. He was argumentative, and in his peroration impassioned. A stirring appeal was made to—southern feelings, prejudices some would say. The galleries came down several times! On the other side rose up Dr. Early, who gave us no figures of speech, but many stubborn ones of fact. He is au fait in this line. Dr. Early goes for no brick and mortar establishment, with printer's tools, presses, binderies, &c., ycleept Book Concern. We have no manufacturing cities among us—not yet prepared to locate it anywhere within our bounds to advantage of the Church; and not at liberty to outlay the money of the Church for the advantage of any place. He would have depositories supplied by an Agency. The champions on both sides are strong; the issue doubtful.

There are many new members in this body; hence a great deal of suppressed and pent-up speechifying. But they begin to pluck up courage and draw out pencil and paper, taking notes. Like Elihu, after years and wisdom have been heard, they are going to show their opinion also.

The committee raised specially to consider it, the Ninth Section will not stand in the Discipline at the adjournment of this General Conference.

Preaching is kept up through the week, at night. The congregations are very large and serious: the tone of the pulpit earnest, evangelical, and, without any special display of oratory, eloquent.

The Conference is entertained by the citizens of Columbus and the suburban village, Winton, with genuine Georgia hospitality.

Yours, H. N. M.

SHOUTING.

We commend the following incident, taken from the California Advocate, to those who are over fastidious about that religious vulgarism called "shouting." Some people are willing to tolerate this demonstration upon occasions of good fortune; or, even of trivial successes in worldly business, but would stop the mouth of him who finds the "pearl of great price." The case is now fresh in mind of an unlucky Methodist, who in an evil hour ventured into one of those straight-jacket churches, to be found in New England, and in parts not so far off, and was arrested for a vigorous Amen!

Another case in point. It happened on a time that a Methodist church in the Crescent was blessed with a revival of more than usual power and extent, for this latitude. The church stood in one of the most public thoroughfares, and large crowds were attracted by the novelty and extraordinary character of the proceedings. The people were all agog—the creoles and many others who had never seen things after this fashion; and, as is too often the case under such circumstances, there were amongst them "lewd fellows of the baser sort." To prevent interruption, the attendance of certain "Charlies," alias policemen, was secured. Now, it fell out one night, when mourners were plenty, and the singing run high, that one of the penitents, a good honest Teuton, passed from death unto life. A fact which he took no pains to conceal, but indulged more than the usual quantum of demonstration—he rose up and shouted; whereupon the vigilant guardians of the peace took him to the "lockup" for disturbing the meeting!

In the vicinity of a mining village in Eldorado county, during the present week, a circumstance occurred which is beautiful from the fact that the finger of God is so manifest.

Three men were mining together—a professor of religion and two non-professors. In the course of conversation the subject of religion came up, and one of them asked the professor a few trying questions about shouting, taking opportunity every now and then to say that he thought it was foolish, or it seemed so to him. The good Brother vindicated himself as best he could, but by the aid of the third in favor of his opponent, was rather losing ground. He felt stung, as many Christians would, for he could not make him feel fully why men shout when they are happy. But still the opponent would have his way, and say that it looked foolish.

Pretty soon this man was so lucky as to find on his claim a very pretty specimen of pure gold, and he immediately gave three shouts, which rang through the woods far away, and with every mark of joy waved his hand in triumph through the air. All at once his eye met that of the professor, and conviction, or a sudden awakening, seemed to have seized him, and the Brother's case was fully vindicated, far more so than he could have done it himself.

On motion of Dr. Early, of the Virginia Conference, it was unanimously

Resolved, That a special committee be appointed to recommend the best mode of organising a Tract Society, and the best method of raising funds for carrying the plan into operation.

The chair called for petitions, memorials and appeals.

Mr. Ralston presented a paper from the Kentucky Conference, instructing the delegates from that Conference to vote for a change in the discipline allowing a Bishop to appoint a preacher to the same circuit or station for a longer period than two years, when, in his judgment, it might be necessary. Referred to committee on Revisals.

Mr. Huston offered a petition from the quarterly meeting Conference, of Covington, Ky., praying that changes be made in the discipline, abolishing the office of Presiding Elder in the Church—allowing a lay delegation in our Conferences, and making a Bishop for each Conference.

This petition elicited considerable discussion; but was finally disposed of as the other Referred to the committee on Revisals.

Dr. Patton presented a memorial from the Holston Conference, asking an appropriation from this Conference to aid in establishing the Holston Christian Advocate on an independent basis, which was referred to the Book Committee.

Dr. Hamilton offered a memorial from D. Pratt, Esq., Prattville, Ala., in reference to the location of a Book Concern at that place, tendering two large brick buildings, with sufficient number of lots for residences, etc., for that purpose.

This communication was, on motion, referred to the committee on Book Concern.

Bishop Soule presented a petition of Joel Sanders, asking for himself and others, that a new Conference be formed in North Louisiana and part of Arkansas; which was read and referred to the committee on Boundaries.

Mr. Smith presented a memorial from the Florida Conference, asking that all in the Discipline referring to the subject of slavery, be expunged.

Dr. Boring presented a paper from the Pacific Conference, praying the establishment of a Book Depository in San Francisco; which was referred to the Book Committee.

Bishop Soule presented a paper from G. L. L. Davis, of Maryland, preferring claims against the Church for legal services claimed to have been rendered in the Church suit; which was read.

And pending its consideration, the Conference adjourned, with the benediction by Bishop Soule.

[Sundry other memorials were presented and referred; which will be noticed when called up for action in the reports of the committees to which they have been referred.]

FOURTH DAY—MAY 4.

Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., agreeably to adjournment, and was opened with religious exercises, conducted by Dr. L. Pierce, Bishop Soule presiding.

Bishop Paine then took the chair, and called for the reading of the journals of the preceding day; which were read and approved.

The chair announced the following committees:

On the Ninth Section: W. A. Smith, Wm. Winans, Whiteford Smith, Jefferson Hamilton, Wm. Patton, H. H. Kavanaugh, Thomas Johnson, S. Kelley.

On Tract Society: Thos. O. Summers, L. M. Lee, J. C. Keener, C. F. Deems, F. A. Owen.

Memorial of Stoval: L. Pierce, J. Boring, J. W. Hanner.

Bishop Soule then took the chair.

The memorial of G. L. L. Davis, pending the consideration of which the Conference adjourned yesterday, was taken up and referred to a committee of examination.

The question which had been made the order of the day, was then taken up, viz: the following resolution of Mr. Ralston, that it is expedient for this General Conference to establish a Book Concern proper, embracing a publishing house; and that the committee on books and periodicals be instructed to prepare their report accordingly.

Mr. Ralston remarked, that he did not intend making a set speech, but wished to offer some statements in reference to the principles involved. The question is as to the propriety of erecting a publishing house proper, or a continuance of the agency. He took the affirmative, referred to the General Conference at Petersburg—the common conviction of the members—the universal desire and expectation of the people. The argument against a Book Concern proper, was the want of funds; this argument exists no longer; and now the opponents of the measure must take other grounds; what, he knew not. He affirmed that to publish, had been the policy of the Church from the beginning—had succeeded admirably. He referred to the Bible Society and American Tract Society as examples to sustain his views. The importance of circulating religious knowledge was obvious. All are agreed upon this. The real question is, what plan will best promote the diffusion of books, and not so much the comparative cost of books: the multiplication and circulation of them was the main question. The purchase of the books in certain places might awaken prejudices which would restrict the circulation. The natural order is first to procure books, then circulate. To procure books they must first be printed: to print, we must do it ourselves or get others to do it for us. The friends of hiring the work done, must prove that it is cheaper to buy than to make, or that to purchase is better than to publish in the South. How can they prove this? They must assume the imbecility of the ministers and members of the Southern people at large. Will this be affirmed? Or will they say the circumstances are unfavorable, our climate bad, soil poor?

The speaker enlarged very forcibly on the positive advantages of this class, possessed by the South: and expatiated on the great prospects in the future lying before the Southern country.

Dr. Early then took the floor, saying that he had no appeals to make to public prejudices. He meant to present facts and figures. He was with Mr. Ralston in principle, but not in prejudices. He had taken this subject closely under review, and was prepared to speak and act advisedly. With him, economy was first, and he felt it his duty to give such facts as he possessed, whatever might be the result. The question was—"was it most discreet and proper to establish a publishing house?" He had sought for information at the best sources, and obtained it. He maintained that few publishers were printers, and many of the most extensive publishers had no printing establishments. Such was the case with the American Tract Society, the American Sunday School Society, and others. He stated that there was a distinction between printing and publishing: we might publish without printing, and gave instances of this. Seventy or eighty thousand dollars must be necessarily used in buildings and fixtures—the interest and insurance on which would be heavy, and proportionately subtract from the active capital. He remarked that the New York Book Concern, with all its advantages, had yielded not more than 3 per cent. per annum. Another question, "where should it be?" must be considered. He held that it must be in a manufacturing city; and showed the difficulty of attempting the work in any other sort of place. As a Virginian, he had the right to use his own means to build up manufactories in any city he pleased; but did not claim the same right to use the funds of the Church. He regretted that local prejudices should have been appealed to, and begged they should have no place in the discussion. Manufacturing was coming South, and the prospects were increasing. He maintained that trade will seek its level, and the law of commerce must rule in this as well as in other cases. By reference to various instances, Dr. E. showed that, by a division of labor, printing could be hired at prices lower than we can do such work: spoke of the difficulties and expense of importing raw materials to and products from divers points named, with a view of showing that a great commercial city possessed advantages for transportation which none others could have. He repudiated the idea that books would not be bought simply because they were printed in the North; believed that all our capital should be active; advocated the policy of establishing depositories at principal points, such as Richmond, Charleston, New Orleans, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville and Memphis; and thus equalize the benefits of the book interests, and insisted that the constantly growing character of the country embraced within the bounds of the Church, was such as to render it more than probable that a publishing house located now would not be the proper place a few years hence. He insisted that great care should be taken in the first step in this matter, and closed by remarking that he had more to say at another time.

On motion of Dr. Green, Conference adjourned, with the benediction of Bishop Soule.

FIFTH DAY—MAY 5.

Conference met according to adjournment, Bishop Soule in the chair; religious exercises were conducted by Dr. Winans.

Bishop Paine then took the chair, and the minutes of the preceding day were read and approved.

J. B. McFerrin, of the Tennessee Conference; J. Cowls, of the Arkansas Conference; reserve, vice T. Johnson, and D. A. Leeper, of the St. Louis Conference, appeared and took their seats.

Reports were called for, from Standing Committees.

Dr. Early, Chairman of the Committee on Episcopacy, submitted the following report, which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

DEATH OF BISHOP BASCOM.

The Committee on Episcopacy, in their review of the Episcopal administration of the last four years, have had their attention turned to the painful fact of the death, during that period, of one of the Bishops. They deem it highly appropriate, in making a report of this fact to the General Conference, to present for adoption the following resolutions:

Whereas, in the providence of the God of all wisdom and grace, the M. E. Church, South, has been called on to mourn the loss, during the first year of his ministry as a Bishop, and in the ripe maturity of his faculties, influence and usefulness, of Henry B. Bascom.

Be it therefore Resolved, That while we bow with profound submission to the will of God in the solemn visitation by which Bishop Bascom was removed from the Church, by death, on the 8th September, A. D. 1850, and within a few months only of the time of his election and ordination to the Episcopal office, we feel, most sensibly, the loss to the Church, occasioned by that unexpected and mournful event.

Resolved, That the eminent services of Dr. Bascom during the eventful period of the organization of the M. E. Church, South, a crisis which called forth in full strength his giant powers in defence of Southern Methodism, and placed him in the foremost ranks of her able and loyal supporters, are entitled to this expression of grateful remembrance on the part of the General Conference, and embalm his memory in the affections of his surviving cotemporaries, and of the Church at large.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered upon the journal of the General Conference, and a copy of them be furnished by the Secretary to the family of the departed Bishop.

The chairman of the same committee made a second report, approving the Episcopal administration; and recommending that the character of the Bishops pass; which was adopted.

Petitions, memorials, &c., were called for.

These having been received and disposed of, the Conference proceeded to the unfinished business of yesterday. The discussion of Dr. Ralston's resolution was resumed.

Dr. Green being entitled to the floor, called for the reading of the resolution, after which he proceeded. He would direct the Conference to the points made by Dr. Early. He thought the Dr. had made important points which deserve consideration.

He had no quarrel with the North; he once had, but the cause thereof had been removed. He had no opposition to any people or place North, but would not ask them what course he should pursue in this matter, as he might not get an impartial answer. He reviewed Dr. E.'s argument in reference to publishers not printing their own books. He would go right into the middle of the question. He granted that as a general truth, the division of labor tended to cheapen the product; admitted that when the value of a product was not equal to the labor and cost of production in any given case, the product should be bought, not made; he illustrated: to build one house, it were better to buy the prepared material; but to build a thousand houses, it were cheaper to prepare the material than to buy; so of other things. Where publishers do not print, it is because of smallness of capital; still such publishers must of necessity bear their proportionate part in all the expense of publishing; and maintained that if the expense ultimately exceeded the amount necessary for an outfit, it were better to commence manufacturing at once.

The point to which he would refer, would be the cost of building. He could build a house, let it stand ten years, charge year by year the interest on cost with the yearly insurance, and at the end of that time sell for a profit—could do this easily in any one of ten cities which might be named in the South. On the subject of depositories, there would be such establishments with publishing or printing house, as well as without it. The American Tract Society operated on the running system from year to year, but that was not analogous to this. One was to be a permanent place. In reference to the argument drawn from the fact that large printing houses hired work done, it did not apply, as it was incidental rather than otherwise. The question of transportation he regarded as unimportant in the argument. Look at our wants—at the demand on us—the expectation in reference to this subject. We continued, as a Church, nearly half of the whole number of Methodists in the United States, more than half the territory of the same. We have all requisite material, and noble people. The West, he thought, would soon feed and dictate to the world. Three of the four millions of people looked to us for books of various kinds; and he was ashamed for us to take the lead in matters of this kind in the South. We had all that was necessary to make books, and we ought to do it. The South made railroads, steam-engines, brown domestics, etc., cheaper than the North could do it. In all that the South had to make, taking all things into account, she had best the North. But why was there no large printing house in the South? Because no one could control the market in the South. We could control that market for our own people, because here the product was wanted and here it ought to be made. A publishing house proper, would develop home talent and improve the literature of the South. He said that on a different principle we could only command a fraction of the labor usually employed in printing, and catch it up here and there as we could. Further he stated we were not committed so the world as on this subject. We were able to do the work ourselves; the people expected it of us, and it ought to be done. Were we ever to do this work? If not, when should we commence? We see no better than we can ever do it. Why not employ our own people? there are enough of them; they were ready and willing to work. He felt like sitting down at once. The present system might continue, but arrangements for manufacturing were incomplete. Let the committee on books be instructed to appropriate a definite amount for investment—carry on the present system until better can be made, then work for ourselves henceforth and forever.

Mr. Ferguson in the course of his remarks said he had been in favor of a Book Concern eight years ago—was in favor of it now. He would discuss the question on its merits. He was not influenced by local considerations. The consumer, he said, must pay for the cost of production: and if the South used more books, the South must pay her proportion. The people of Alabama expected us to establish a Book Concern, and would be disappointed if it were not done.

Mr. Dorman hoped that the sentiments of Mr. Ferguson would not be taken as the sentiments of Alabama generally. There were other and different sentiments from what had just been heard, to be hereafter expressed.

Dr. Boring moved that the discussion of the question of a Book Concern, be resumed each day at 10 o'clock until disposed of, which prevailed.

NOW AND THEN.

THE PROHIBITORY LAW—HOW IT WORKS.

The Editor of one of our best exchanges, the Caddo Gazette—notices the results of License in Shreveport. We knew something of the state of things there sometime since. The workings of the law there is demonstrable proof of what it would do every where if enforced. We believe that this measure would do more for morals and religion in any community where it could be adopted, than everything else put together. Liquor selling and liquor houses stand in the way of political, social, and religious reform. Take the political movement which, above all others, we believe in and advocate. Not opposing, nor excluding other reforms movements, we say, attempt and establish this, others will be then more easily accomplished. Drink and grogshops have been the most potent means by which demagoguery has corrupted our foreign population, and controlled the ballot box. We shall think the country safe when it becomes sober.

In December last the good citizens of Shreveport met at the ballot box and voted away the privilege of vending spirituous liquors to the drink. Prior to that time our town had acquired, and very deservedly, the unenviable reputation of being one of the most dissolute and dissipated places in the South. Intemperance was carried to an excess; the coffee houses tolerated by law and proved a snare by which it was difficult to pass; hot punches before and the exhilarating julep and refreshing cobbler in summer, were baits too alluring not to entrap many a victim. These establishments were thronged with visitors from morning till night; around their doors the idle loafer hung continually, letting no opportunity escape to swill his beverage; here the country gentleman met his city friend, and over the social glass discussed the events of the season; and here was the favored resort of all who had a leisure hour or a few dollars to spend.

The consequence of this universal vice was constant tumult and breaches of law. Ladies could scarce promenade the streets, without being shocked by the most obscene and profane language, intimidated and often insulted by the drunkard or rowdy; disgraceful fights, frequently terminating in bloody death, occurred almost daily in our streets; our Mayor's docket was filled with prosecutions, our jail crowded with offenders. Night was hideous with the revels of bacchanalians; in a word, the laws of good citizenship and good order were violated with impunity, and our town presented a perpetual scene of saturnalian festivity.

Such scenes becoming intolerable, the better portion of our community, awakened to a true sense of propriety and morality, and with their might, repealed the odious license law. Upon the first day of January last, the repeal law took effect; upon that day the dram establishments were closed, and upon that day a reaction took place in the popular mind, and ever since our town has been improving in its moral phase.

It was said by the advocates of the license law, that its repeal would not effect the desired end; that the people would drink, if the bar-room doors were closed, they would buy liquor by the bottle and use it at home. That a few of our most esteemed citizens make this a practice, is very true. But is not the question. Has the prevention of selling liquor by the small been accompanied by beneficial results? One of the prime objects of the anti-license law was to remove temptation, and cut off the inducements to drink. Has this been effected?

Look at our streets upon the Sabbath; parade them at night; examine the records of our city courts; mark the quiet and tranquility that pervade our town at all hours, and the conclusion is forced irrisistibly upon the mind, even of the most skeptical, that the veto of the liquor traffic has done more to extirpate vice and crime from our midst, more to invest our town with a dignity of bearing, and give it an air of peace and order, than all the stringent police regulations, sermonizing and moral sunsion combined, could ever possibly accomplish.

This leads us to the consideration of another point, which is now agitating a good portion of our country, viz: Is legislation the legitimate and proper mode to prohibit, in toto, the sale of ardent spirits?

Recent developments, educed by the action of the corporate authorities of Shreveport, having materially weakened our faith in the "mesterly inactivity" of moral sunsion, and, in an inverse ratio, enhanced our confidence in the efficacy of legislation, we answer without hesitation, that if so desirable an end can be attained at all, it must be under the supreme majesty of the law.

For many long years the world has tried the potency of moral sunsion; temperance associations have been organized, good and gifted men have pleaded with all the energy and eloquence that their cause inspired, yet they have not been successful. We all grant that they have done much to remove the burning curse from our land, much to restore the inebriate to his lost position, but the ultima Thule of their hopes—the total prevention of the traffic—has not been consummated. Why is this? Because we are met by inducements at every step; the misguided hospitality of friends spreads the entangling web in our path; our own erring disposition leads us into temptation, and the consequence is—resolution is disarmed, moral courage yields to the appetite, and we are plunged in the vortex of dissipation. We have sought for remedies in vain; all have proved inadequate to the end. Let us now try the virtue of legal enactments. Pass laws prohibiting, not only the sale, but the manufacture of the poison, and the consumption must necessarily cease. Let the law be rigidly enforced and the penalty certain; and thus, by striking at the root of the disease, and drying up the fountains whence flow the tide of evil, we will entertain the hope of subjugating the demon that has desolated the hearth-stone and the heart, and filled the world with mourning and tears.

PREACHING FOR ETERNITY.

BY REV. H. BONAR, D. D.

"When do you intend to stop?" was the question once put by a friend to Rowland Hill. "Not till we have carried all before us," was the prompt reply. Such is our answer, too. The fields are vast, the grain whitens, the harvest waves; and through grace we shall go forth with our sickles, never to rest till we shall lie down where the Lamb himself shall lead us, by the living fountains of water, and where God shall wipe off the sweat of toil from our weary foreheads, and dry up all the tears of earth from our weeping eyes. Some of us are young and fresh; many days may yet be, in the providence of God, before us. These must be days of strenuous, censeless persevering, and if God bless us, successful toil. We shall labor till we are worn out and said to rest.

Many of our readers have seen, we doubt not, a small work of Vincent, the non-conformist minister, respecting the great plague and fire in London. Its title is, "God's terrible Voice in the City." In it there is a description of the manner in which the faithful ministers who remained amid the dangers discharged their solemn duties to the dying inhabitants, and of the manner in which the terror-stricken multitudes hung with breathless eagerness upon their lips, to drink in salvation ere the dreaded pestilence had swept them away to the tomb. The churches were not long open, but the pulpits were silent, for there was none to occupy them—the hireling had fled. Then did God's faithful band of persecuted ones come forth from hiding places to fill the forsaken pulpits. Then did they stand up in the midst of the dying and the dead, to proclaim eternal life to men who were expecting death before the morrow. They preached in season and out of season. Week day or Sabbath was the same to them. One hour might be canonical or uncanonical; it mattered not; they did not stand upon nice points of ecclesiastical regularity or irregularity; they lifted up their voices like a trumpet, and spared not. Every sermon might be their last. Graves were lying open around them; life seemed now not merely a handbreadth, but a hair-breadth; death was nearer now than ever; eternity stood out in all its vast reality; souls were felt to be precious; opportunities were no longer to be trifled away; every hour possessed value beyond the wealth of kingdoms; the world was now a passing, vanishing shadow, and man's days on earth had been cut down from three-score years and ten into the twinkling of an eye! Ah, how they preached! No polished periods, no learned arguments, no labored paragraphs chilled their appeals or rendered their discourses unintelligible. No fear of man, no love of popular applause, no over-scrupulous dread of strong expressions, no fear of excitement or enthusiasm prevented them from pouring out the whole fervor of their hearts. That yearned with tenderness unutterable over dying souls. "Old Time," says Vincent, seemed to stand at the head of the pulpit, with his great scythe, saying, with a hoarse voice, 'Work while it is called to-day, at night I will mow thee down.' Grim Death seemed to stand at the side of the pulpit, with a sharp arrow, saying, 'Do thou shoot God's arrows, and I will shoot mine.' The grave seemed to lie open at the foot of the pulpit, with dust in her bosom, saying—

"Louder the cry
To God,
To men,
And now fulfil thy trust;
Here thou must lie—
Mouth stopped,
Breath gone,
And silent in the dust."

THOUGHTS BY THE WAY.

WASHINGTON CITY, April 20, 1854.

MR. EDITOR: We left Charleston under the blazing glow of a conflagration that had illuminated our chamber and roused us from sleep; and, as we swept along our iron path, the triumphant flames were waving their long hands to Heaven, emulous of towering above the top-loftiest church-steeples, and like them pointing to that only land where hoarded gains are insured in the oath of Heaven, and bankruptcy cannot follow the "fullness of God."

Many suffered, and some were losing very much by the fire; and it was painful to see some, who had been generous with their means and personal attentions in entertaining the late Commercial Convention, among the chief losers. But, alas! for human weakness; we know not when we or our friends are best off. Calamity is commonly the road to comfort. And many a house has been burned to ashes that the outcast ones might find their way to the Kingdom of God in the light of the devouring flames. Suffering is indispensable to success. The agate needs polishing; the diamond must be cut and set before it is honored or useful. Misfortune's iron arms often throw us into the bosom of Divine mercy. The loss of Earth often proves the gain of Heaven.

"No traveler ever reached that blessed abode
Who found not thorns and briars on the road."

May God give the sufferers of Charleston a thousand-fold more than they they lost, in the things that never perish.

The wheel-hoofed horse fled like a meteor, and bore us along through the Carolinas, and over as much poor country as is generally found in a Western Territory, all told; and brought us to Richmond, the music of whose roaring rapids, like the strains of Orpheus, is raising it to a high commercial and manufacturing centre in the lap of this goodly Mother of Statesmen and of States. Here we paused. After spending the evening at our hotel in the company of several friends, we retired to rest, still listening to the enchanting murmur of these magnificent Falls, and smiling at the recurrence of the question the country lady put to her husband at Niagara, when she asked him if the water run all night? We slept, and waked—the Falls were awake first, or the stream ran all night. The ascending sun found us rolling away on a descent towards the North Pole; for philosophers tell us the equatorial regions bulge up by reason of the centrifugal force, and it is evidently true. What a curiosity it presents of water running up hill; for the mouth of the Mississippi river is nearly four miles above its source. Speaking of a river reminds us that we are now ascending the Potomac.

The questions are going round among the passengers: "Where is Mount Vernon!" "Have we yet got in sight of Washington's grave!" To which the general reply given was that the boats always toll their bells as they pass that place. In a short time we found ourselves approaching the object of our regards, and the conversation turned upon as then stated, that the Southern ladies, led by the ladies of Georgia, had resolved on purchasing the grounds, and dedicating them to their country and the public enjoyment. With heads uncovered we stood and mused over the past, the present, and the future. One of our company, Rev. C. K. Marshall, of Mississippi, silently drew from his pocket an old letter, and as is his wont, began to scribble on the top of his hat. I am allowed to send you the pencillings of that moment. Here they are:

IMPROMPTU:

Respectfully inscribed to the Ladies of Georgia who had arranged for the purchase of the homestead of Washington, and devoting it to the public use.

Hark! hark! 'tis the sound of a summons to pause,
And the tribute of homage to pay;
We're passing the Mecca of millions of hearts;
At this shrine let us worship to-day.

Toll the bell! toll the bell! let the funeral note,
Like an echo that never can die,
Peal over these waves like a spirit's sad wail;
Here the ashes of Washington lie.

The urn holds his dust under Death's regal seat;
But his heart, like a sone of the sky,
Engirts us; then, why should Humanity weep?
For our Washington never can die.

The Soul of the Patriot loos'd from dust,
Walks o'er Earth on his mission for God;
While oppressors, and tyrants and despots enthron'd,
Are blanched and appalled at his nod.

Then, joyful in sorrow, our tribute we'll pay,
To his death-like life of labors resigned;
For his grave is a throne of more power to-day
Than the thrones of all monarchs combined.

Then come from the South, ye fair daughter of God,
And redeem from the shambles this shrine;
Make vocal its hills, vales and streams with his fame;
God bless you! your work is Divine!

We believe in positives; and, if that is not poetry this is Washington City; we cannot be mistaken here. But, what a looking place! though not our first view of it. It looks like a congress of continental villages assembled together to keep the distinguished saints in perpetual memory of "the hole of the pit whence they were digged."

The public buildings are grand and beautiful, but strangely out of place for convenience or sightliness. It looks as if the nightmare of the dark ages in a storm of architectural passion had whirled the city through a kaleidoscopic camera obscura, when in a fright, the Government houses in "squatter sovereignty" seized upon the first vacant lots they could reach, without regard to the uses for which they were designed. But let us go into some of them. This is Mr. Secretary Davis's. How courtly, yet genial; how polished and manly, yet affable and permeating. He wears the red mantle of Mars, yet seems as gentle, urbane and kind tempered as if the only other place in the world suited to his noble powers, had been the pulpit. He is a preacher as it is; and if occasion requires, can publish a few discourses, of the Missionary class, containing globular arguments of the most convincing character. He has been tried, and can be trusted. War is a great evil—but not the greatest. Col. Davis is a man for an emergency.

Here is Mr. Secretary Marcy. Very dignified, very gracious—very sedate. Our companions said he rarely allowed himself the indulgence of mirth. No wonder, with such responsibilities on his shoulders; yet we had the pleasure of shortening his face for a minute, and provoking him to a hearty laugh, which no doubt will add at least a few minutes to his laborious life.

Now for the White House. Cards. All right. The President holding a conference with Miss Dix. We little thought the President would, in any particular, resemble the patriarch Jacob; yet here he is, at an early hour, wrestling with an Angel! Not that he is so much in earnest to be blest—though none can be in her presence without feeling purer and better,—and I reckon Frank needs a benediction; but she is here to plead against the veto of the bill appropriating 10,000,000 of acres of the public lands for the benefit of the insane. What a mission! What a woman! the Howardess of the age. We had heard of the greatness of a United States President: but lo! a greater than the President is here. Let us leave the modern Jacob and the mighty Angel, and call another day. If we outlive her, we intend to try and enthrone her among the stars: for we believe the present names and figures on celestial maps and globes, most barbarous and blundering. We shall try and get them reformed; and while we would install Washington in the constellation Orion, we assign to Miss Dix the beautiful chair of Cassiopea. We had the pleasure of meeting her in the Congressional Library, and saw her eye moisten at the narration of an incident which took place recently at Charleston, where a mother, after being twenty-two years in the Asylum, walked out on the green, and coming up to a band of musicians playing for the insane, called one of them, her son. He was amused, then amazed—had always thought his mother dead! She had not seen him since he was five years of age; but how like a mother, whose eyes are in her heart, she knew her boy! Investigation proved her correct. He claimed her, and the trustees delivered the mother to the care of the noble son.

But we pause before the majesty of that grand poetic conception, suggested by the disinthralling enchantment of heaven-born Music.

We are reminded here of a curious incident that took place awhile since in the Lunatic Asylum at Lexington, Kentucky. Rev. L. D. Houston, of the Methodist Church, was preaching to the unfortunate inmates. When the discourse was ended, one of the most intellectual men who was confined there, came up to him and taking him by the hand, said that sermon had restored him—that he was in his right mind; and he wept with emotion. It proved true; and he was allowed in a shorter time than is usual after the restoration of reason, to take his departure for his home.

Now for a rest. Sabbath is coming, and we shall hear W. H. Milburn, the chaplain, preach, and then send you another line.

Yours, SALATHIEL.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER—Both in regard to the item itself, and the time of its insertion. It will be seen that the M. E. Church, South, is in a fair way of having justice done:

Decision in the Methodist Church Case.—The opinion of the United States Supreme Court in the case involving a partition of the Methodist Book Concern interests in Cincinnati, between the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was given on Tuesday, upon all the points in favor of the Church South, thus reversing the decision of the Circuit Court of Ohio. The National Intelligencer says that this decision not only establishes the right of the Church, South, to a proportionate share of the common funds and property, but also declares a division of the Church to be a valid act, and that the two divisions, South and North, are equally legitimate. Judge McLean did not sit in this case.

GETTING ON TOO FAST.—A pious old slave had a wicked master. This master had much confidence, however, in the slave's piety. He believed he was a Christian. Sometimes the master would be serious and thoughtful about religion. One day he came to the old slave, with the New Testament in his hand, and asked if he would explain a passage to him. The slave was willing to try, and asked what it was.

"It is here in Romans," said the master.

"Have you done all it tells you in Matthew, Mark, Luke and John?" inquired the slave, seriously, fixing his eyes upon his master.

"No, I haven't," said he.

"Then, you are getting on too fast—too fast, master. Go back to the beginning of the book. Do all it tells you until you get to Romans, and you will understand it easy enough then; for the good book says: 'If any man will do My will, he will know the doctrine.'"

If any of our readers ever hear anybody arguing about a hard text in Romans, or somewhere else, and worrying to know what it means, just tell them this story about "getting on too fast." [Juvenile Instructor.

LONGFELLOW POETRY.—An inquiry has for some time been carried on as to the English genealogy of Professor Longfellow, the American poet. In its course, the following lines have been produced by some kind investigator in Wales, certainly not very flattering to their subject. They are copied from a window shutter of an inn at Brecon, called the Golden Lion, kept by one Thomas Longfellow, about half a century ago:

Tom Longfellow's name is most justly his due,
Long his neck, long his bill, which is very long too;
Long the time ere your horses to the stable is led,
Long before his rubbed down, and much longer till fed;
Long indeed may you sit in a comfortless room,
Till from kitchen, long dirty, your dinner shall come.
Long the often told tale that your host will relate,
Long his face while complaining how long people eat;
Long may Longfellow long ere he see me again—
Long 'twill be ere I long for Tom Longfellow's inn.

NEW BRAUNFELS.—This is an interesting colony of some 3000 Germans, near San Antonio, Texas. The first settlement was made in 1844, by Prince Solms' Braunfels and about 1000 of his countrymen. In 1846 an additional number united; after enduring the most frightful hardships; in consequence, not less than 60 orphans were, at one time, under the care of an asylum, which the inhabitants erected for the purpose. They subsequently, as they become older, mostly provided for themselves. The town is represented as a neat thriving place, with schools, churches, stores, manufacturing establishment, etc. The citizens have a number of benevolent and social organizations; among which, are an Agricultural Society, a Mechanic's Institute, a Harmonic Society, of Political Debates, and a Farmer's Society.

ARAB GALLANTRY.—A Frenchman, while residing in one of the Oriental cities, was once watering some flowers in a window, and accidentally filled the pots too profusely, so that a quantity of water happened to fall on an Arab, who was below basking in the sun. The man started up, shook his clothes, and thus gave vent to his feelings respecting the offender: "If it is an old man who has done this, I despise him; if it is an old woman, I forgive her; if it is a young man, I curse him; but if it is a young woman, I thank her." The young Frenchman, who had managed to keep out of sight, laughed heartily on hearing the malediction that fell to his share for his carelessness. In the Arab's gradation, the reader will not fail to be struck by his tone of gallantry, a qualification for which the "true believers" are not remarkably notorious.

Gold three dollar pieces will shortly be issued from the Philadelphia mint.

OBITUARY:

DIED—In Eutaw, Ala., on the 20th of April, 1854, MARY LOUISA, daughter of Rev. Wm. M. and Mary A. Lovelady, aged 4 years, 5 months and 22 days.

Little Lou was an interesting child—the hope and comfort of her afflicted father. During the prevalence of the recent epidemic in Mobile, her mother was taken from her—her little brother also died, and she and an only sister were left to soothe the sorrows of a bereaved father. Now she is gone to join that mother and brother in the kingdom. Her pure spirit is saved from the world's rude touch, secure in the presence of Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not."

Her last illness was painful and protracted. She was emphatically a little sufferer, and a patient one, too. At no time did she murmur, fret, or repine; but bore her afflictions with a degree of patience and fortitude worthy of one advanced in age and experienced in grace. But her sufferings are ended. Her father watched by her bed-side until her sweet spirit took its flight from earth. And "here," said he, "we part." Yes, my brother, but not always. You part to meet again. Your dear ones are fast crossing the flood and entering the haven of perfect rest. God gave, He took, He doeth all things well." And now, farewell, dear Lou, farewell.

"We would not call the back again
To this cold world of ours,
Where all that's fair and bright must fade,
As summer's sweetest flowers."

JAS. M. PATTON.

Departed this life, on the 17th of last March, Sister SARAH ANN, consort of Michael Hooter, in Yazoo county, Miss. Sister H. had not the advantage of early religious training, though she was the subject of very early religious impressions. She was converted when but fourteen years old, joined the M. E. Church, and lived a worthy and exemplary member for thirty-nine years, when death closed her earthly career.

The writer visited her several times during her late protracted illness, and always found her happy and rejoicing in the Lord. When spoken to with regard to her prospects beyond the grave, she spoke with great assurance that all was well.

Thus lived and died the pious Christian, the devoted wife, and affectionate mother—exhorting her family and attending friends to meet her in heaven. The last words that fell from her sainted lips were—Glory! glory! glory!—those most befitting the departing (not the dying) Christian.

The contract for carrying the mail between this city and Mobile, for the next four years, from the 1st of July, has been awarded to Messrs. Jas L. Day & Co.

D. C. Jenkins, Esq., editor of the Democratic Advocate at Baton Rouge, has been appointed, by the Governor, Commissioner of the First Swamp Land District, vice Hugh Grant resigned.

Mr. V. D. Terrebonne has been re-elected Mayor of Thibodaux. The vote on the question of "License," or "No License," was extremely close—the first having carried the day by four votes majority.

It is not what we possess, which makes us happy, but what we enjoy. It is not what we have not, which gives us pain, but what we desire. [Lord Kaimes.

Some one having lavishly lauded "Longfellow's aphorism," "Suffer, and be strong," a matter-of-fact man observed that it was merely a variation of the old English adage, "Grin and bear it.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—Under the rule of Barnum, the tickets of admission to the Crystal Palace will be only 25 cents.

A MISER.—It is said there is a Madame De L. in New York who is taxed for $14,000 of real estate and $1100 personal, and altogether is worth $50,000, who begs in the street and lives in the greatest destitution in the garret of her own house!

WHAT IS ARISTOCRACY?—In reply to this question, Gen. Foy, a distinguished orator in the French Chambers, gave the following answer: "Aristocracy in this 19th century is the league, the condition of those who would consume without producing, live without working, know without learning, carry all honors without deserving them, and occupy all the places of government without being able to fill them."

SMART LAD.—A negro boy being sent by his master to borrow a pound of lard from a neighbor, thus delivered his message:

"Missus Thomson, mussa sent me over to borry or beg a pound of hog tallow; he say he got de old sow up in de pen, fatten', he gwine to kill her day before yesterday, and he cum over week 'fore last, and pay all you owe us!"

THE NEBRASKA BILL IN CALIFORNIA.—Considerable debate has recently occurred in the California Legislature relative to the Nebraska bill. It seems to meet with little more favor in California than that with which it was received in the Northern States. Many of the California papers are violent in their denunciation of the bill and its originator.

Arrival of the Daniel Webster and El Dorado.

CALIFORNIA.

By the Webster we have received files of California papers to the 15th. We extract from the San Francisco Chronicle of April 15, the following summary of the events of the fortnight:

The incidents of the past fortnight are neither numerous nor startling. The interior newspapers continue to give encouraging accounts of mining operations, and we must believe that the working man has never been more liberally rewarded for his toil. Business continues to improve, and all agree that the State was never more prosperous. Every steamer comes loaded with immigrants, and although many citizens are leaving for the East, yet not one in twenty but contemplates returning.

The cultivation of the soil keeps pace with the increase of population, and sufficient breadstuffs will be raised this season to supply the entire State. Forty thousand acres of wheat are growing in San Joaquin county.

Col. H. P. Watkins, recently convicted of "filibustering," has been sentenced by Judge Hoffman to pay a fine of $1,500.

Major Emory, who pleaded guilty to a similar indictment as that against Watkins, was also sentenced to pay a fine of $1 500.

The ship Challenge, with the troops enlisted by the Mexican Consul, sailed for Guaymas on the 2d inst. She was libeled by the U. S. Marshal, but was released upon giving the proper bonds.

The sloop-of war Portsmouth sailed from San Diego, April 4, for the Gulf of California, to look after the filibusters. The steamer Columbus returned to San Francisco on Sunday last.

A new pass through the Sierra Nevada, to Carson Valley, is reported.

A quicksilver mine has been recently discovered in the coast range of mountains, about seventy miles south of Pacheco's Pass, and said to be equal in richness to the New Almaden mines.

An address, highly interesting and instructive, was delivered on Monday evening last, in the Musical Hall, by Gov. Stevens, of Washington territory. Subject: The Survey and Exploration of the Northern Route for the Pacific Railroad. The Governor departs in the steamer of the 15th inst., to place the results of his explorations before Congress.

Two slight shocks of an earthquake were felt in this city on Monday, 10th inst.

The San Francisco Mint is in operation, the first deposit being made by Adams & Co. The new coin is not yet in circulation.

Arrivals from Oregon and the Sandwich Islands bring no important news.

A Methodist Church for colored people was dedicated in this city, on the 22d inst. It is forty feet by eighty, and contains a lecture-room and a school-room.

The municipal election in Sacramento, on the 24 inst., resulted in the success of the whig ticket, by an average majority of 280.

New discoveries of gold have been made in the tributaries of Russian river. Several hundred people are now at work there.

The "Fugitive Slave Law" has passed the Senate by a very large majority. It had been previously passed in the Assembly.

The suit of Thorne et als vs. The City of San Francisco, has been decided by the Supreme Court of this State in favor of the plaintiffs, and confirming to them all the city lands, valued at several millions of dollars.

A lump of pure gold, weighing twenty-seven pounds, has been found at Yankee Hill, near Columbia, by a poor Italian, who, the day before the finding of the prize, begged a dollar to purchase a breakfast.

STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION AT SAN FRANCISCO. Great Loss of Life.—The following account of a dreadful steamboat explosion, which occurred in the bay of San Francisco on the 15th, was published in an extra of the Commercial Advertiser, immediately previous to the sailing of the steamship John L. Stephens for Panama.

San Francisco, April 15, 4 P M.—This morning, about 10 o'clock, the steamers Secretary and Nevada left from Pacific Wharf, bound for Petaluma. At twelve o'clock precisely, while crossing San Pablo bay the Secretary burst her boiler, carrying death and destruction in every part of the boat to the passengers, of whom a large number were on board. So great was the force of the explosion that the boat was literally torn to pieces. The Nevada happened to be near, and immediately rendered every possible assistance. She immediately put about after caring for the survivors and attending to the dead. Many persons were blown overboard and their bodies not recovered. The Nevada arrived at San Francisco at three o'clock with the survivors and the bodies of those recovered. We learn from Capt. Travers, of the Secretary, that the scene on board after the explosion was awful, the groans of the dying and wounded, and the cries of those whose friends were lost being heart-rending.

LOWER CALIFORNIA.

Col. Walker and his band left San Vincent on the 16th of March, bound for the Rio Colorado, from whence they intend to go, as some say, to Texas, and according to others, to the town of Altar, in Senora. Their force consists of about 70 men, and they took with them a brass field piece, (a four pounder,) fifty extra stands of arms, fifteen mule-loads of ammunition; provisions, such as corn, beans, etc., sufficient to last them a month, about sixty head of cattle, and about four hundred horses and mules, belonging to the Rancheros in that neighborhood. Six mule-loads of dry goods, the property of Don Man'l Retes, and all the gold and silver vases and ornaments, images, etc., of the Church of St. Thomas, they likewise took with them, with the intention, it is said, to dispose of these articles to the Yuma, Apache and Papago Indians, in barter for cattle, horses and provisions.

Dates had been received at Panama from Sydney to the 21st February. The commercial news was flattering, and the gold receipts encouraging. In political matters everything was quiet and of a satisfactory character.

On the 23d ult., H. B. M. steam-sloop Virago, Com. Marshall, arrived from the Gulf of San Miguel, having on board Lieut J. G. Strain and the rest (fifteen) of the U. S. Darien exploring expedition. Mr. Andrew Hogue, Civil Engineer, of Springfield, Ohio, attached to the expedition, died from debility and exhaustion in about twelve hours after being landed at Panama. He was buried next evening. Lieut. Strain having remained in Panama after he had forwarded the balance of the party across the Isthmus, to receive his friend's dying wishes, and make proper arrangements for his interment. The U. S. sloop-of-war Cyane, Capt. Hollins, being at Aspinwall ready to receive them, sailed for New York on Monday night, the 24th, as soon as the party got on board.

The news from Bogota, the federal seat of government, is to the effect that a revolution had broken out in that city, and an attempt had been made to assassinate President Obando, which, however, was frustrated. One of the revolutionists, a General, whose name we have not learned, summoned the troops to the Grand Plaza, where he made an address to them, declaring for a change of government. What favor his ideas met with, we are unable to state. In the meantime, however, Obando's Government had called upon the adjoining provinces for assistance to put down the revolutionists. There is but little doubt that the call will be responded to, and peace and order speedily restored.

From Peru we have later dates, being from Lima and Callao to the 12th April. The news is not very definite or interesting. There had been no more horse throat-cutting battles, but all accounts agree in stating that President Echinique was on his last legs; and there is scarcely a doubt that the next arrival from Peru will bring intelligence of his overthrow and flight from the country. It does not follow that Peru will be any better or more honestly governed when it falls into possession of the revolutionists.

An immense emigration from Australia to Peru is taking place, owing to the stories which have gone to the former country as to the great riches of the Amazon gold washings. On their arrival at Callao, the poor deluded miners first find out how sad is to be their disappointment, as nothing of an encouraging and definite nature has yet "turned up" to give the least encouragement to further efforts to seek gold in Peru. The consequence is, that hundreds of these miners come to Panama to procure passage to California, where they will take a fresh start in toiloing, hoping for "better luck" hereafter.

FROM ACAPULCO.—The purser of the El Dorado, Mr. Jno. Hamo, has kindly furnished us the following memorandum:

On the night of the 28th ult., the mail steamship John L. Stephens arrived at Panama from San Francisco, with 550 passengers and $1,000,000 in treasure. By this arrival we learn that Acapulco was in a state of siege and blockade. The John L. Stephens, in attempting to enter that port for her usual supply of coal and provisions, was fired at by the blockading squadron, and brought to. The particulars of this affair seem to be these: In approaching the harbor of Acapulco, a ship (or bark) and a schooner were discovered ahead, drawing out from under the land. An unshotted gun was fired by the Mexican Commodore, who, at the same time, lowered his boat to communicate with the Stephens, but the signal not being heeded by the commander of the steamer, who showed every disposition to run the blockade, a depressed shot was fired, when the engines were stopped, but, after losing headway, the steamer commenced drifting in towards the shore, when the engines were again started, whereupon a shot was again fired by the Mexican at just sufficient elevation not to hit the steamer. This ball, whistling over the steamer, had the desired effect, and the engine bell was promptly rung to "stop her," which being done, Capt. Pierson immediately lowered his boat and communicated with the Mexican commander, and requested permission to enter the harbor—basing his request very justly upon the ground that he required both coal and provisions to pursue his voyage. The Mexican, with exceeding politeness, declined acceding to his request, stating that his orders were imperative to allow no vessel to enter or depart from the harbor, and if the Stephens attempted to enter he would sink her if he could. But, to show his consideration, he offered to send a boat ashore to communicate with Santa Anna, who was encamped about three miles above the fort of Acapulco, with from 300 to 500 men, to ascertain his wishes—premising, however, that the request would meet with a decided refusal. Believing the same thing, and not willing to consume more time and what little of coal was on board, Capt. Pierson wisely concluded to push on for Panama, where he arrived as stated above, on the night of the 28th, after a passage of about thirteen days from San Francisco, with about three bushels of coal on board.

It may be interesting to our readers to know that the Mexican Commodore was smart enough in communicating with the Stephens, to get that vessel between his little fleet and the fort, which is in possession of the revolutionists, under Alvarez. As the Stephens got from between the belligerents, a brisk cannonade commenced on both sides, which was being carried on with much spirit when the Stephens left.

Santa Anna with his troops had a large force of the revolutionary party in his rear, and the insurgent city of Acapulco in his front. Alvarez had let him get into the province of Guerrero, by apparently abandoning the only mountain pass through which an entrance could be effected—but after Santa Anna had got fairly in, the pass was again occupied, and he had no other alternative but to push for the sea coast, where he was encamped near the sea shore, in sight of passing vessels.

European News by the Pacific.

The intelligence brought by the Pacific yesterday, says the New York Herald, May 24, although it announces no new or striking episode in the sanguinary drama which is now being enacted, is still of a highly interesting character. Its principal feature of importance is the statement that the Russians have entered Servia.

From the Baltic, we learn by way of Copenhagen, that one of the divisions of the allied fleets, under Rear Admiral Plumridge, had captured five Russian merchant vessels laden with salt. The main body of the fleet had passed Bonholm Island on the 13th, and as a heavy cannonading had been heard in that direction on the night of the 15th and 16th, it was conjectured that operations had already commenced in the Gulf of Finland.

No naval engagement has as yet taken place in the Black Sea. There had been a report that Odessa had surrendered to the combined squadron; but it turns out not to have been true. The allied fleet was still in Kavarna Bay, and the main force of the Russian fleet was anchored in the harbor of Sebastopol. Some Russian vessels had, however, been signalled off Basonia, so that it is not improbable that we may soon hear of the capture of such portions of the fleet as venture upon these isolated movements.

The Journal de St. Petersburg publishes a long report of the Emperor from Prince Gortschakoff, giving the details of the occupation of the right bank of the Danube by the Russian troops. According to his account the Russian loss in forcing the passage below Brailow was only six men killed and sixty wounded; but in crossing at the arm of Somovo, they had upwards of 400 killed and wounded, including amongst the latter three colonels and five subaltern officers. Another account states that at Matschin three Russian and three Egyptian battalions remained dead upon the field.

The new protocol, signed by the Four Powers at Vienna, appears from the account given of it in the Austrian Lloyd, to be of a highly important character. It guarantees that the unity of the Four Powers shall endure until the aim they all have in view shall have been attained by one common line of action; and furthermore, that no one of the contracting powers shall enter into any negotiations with Russia for regulating the chief points of dispute in the Eastern question, without the joint knowledge and approbation of the three other Powers. If this description of the treaty be correct, Prussia is at length committed to a decided co-operation with the Western Powers. We must, however, wait for some more authentic confirmation of its accuracy, before we can speculate with safety on its probable results. The difficulty between Austria and Prussia, in the negotiation of their separate treaty, is said to have had reference to the occupation of the Polish frontier by Russia.

The treaties of England and France have exchanged ratifications. The offensive and defensive—which has been concluded between them. It appears that notwithstanding the evident understanding which exists between the two governments, the preliminaries of the treaty were not arranged without some difficulty. France was desirous of having a treaty which would embrace objects beyond those of the present war, but England refused to enter into engagements that would bind her to any course of policy not legitimately arising out of the present crisis. This difference did not, however, oppose any serious obstacles to the execution of the treaty.

The Russian system of defence appears to be now gradually developing itself. The Island of Aland has not only been evacuated by the Russian troops, but orders have also been issued by the Emperor to all the pilots and men capable of bearing arms, to emigrate to Finland, and when vessels cannot be removed, to sink and destroy them. This system is to be pursued not only along the whole extent of the Russian shores in the Baltic, from Helsingfors to Cronstadt, but also in the Black Sea, from Odessa to Sebastopol. One mode of defending the entrance of Cronstadt is new and dangerous. Strong iron chests, charged with powder and other combustible materials, are sunk in the channel, and connected by wires to a galvanic battery. Above the chests is some machinery, which, on being touched by the keel of a passing vessel, completes the galvanic circuit, and explodes the mine. A hundred of these dangerous inventions are sunk in the narrow entrance to Cronstadt. All the posts that had been established between Ghelemdjik and Gagri for the suppression of the traffic in slaves, which forms the principle article of commerce between the mountaineers of the Caucasus and the Turks, have been demolished and the garrisons withdrawn.

The authorities of the Hanse Towns have issued a notification prohibiting the exportation of all articles deemed contraband of war. No Bremen ship is permitted to carry two sets of ship's papers or a foreign flag. The British Government has formally demanded of Spain that she close her ports against Russian privateers if Russia issues letters of marque.

A Russian Secretary of Embassy is reported to have arrived at Athens with a communication from the Cabinet of St. Petersburg to the Greek Government. It is stated that the Greek firms in London, Liverpool and Manchester, have contributed funds in aid of the insurrection against Turkey. The expulsion of all the Greeks from Constantinople is confirmed.

The funeral of Professor Wilson took place in Edinburgh on the 7th April, in the presence of a large number of mourners. The leading public bodies were present to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of the departed. The students of the University headed the funeral cortege.

Mr Hiram Hutchieson, President of the Bank of Hamburg, (S. C.,) has given five thousand dollars to the South Carolina College, for the purpose of founding a scholarship to aid in the education of indigent young men of merit.

ARRIVAL OF THE AFRICA.

New York, May 5.—The Cunard steamer Africa has arrived, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 22d ult., three days later than by the Pacific. The quotations for Cotton show an advance of about ½d. for Middling, though the market did not close as active as it opened. We append Milligan & Co's commercial summary.

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.—Liverpool, April 22.—The cotton market opened at the commencement of the week with a good demand, but fell off considerably towards the close. The sales of the week reach 40,000 bales, of which speculators took 6,000, and exporters 2,000 bales. Fair Orleans is quoted at 6¼, middling Orleans 5¾, fair uplands 6¼, and middling uplands 5¼d. per lb. There has been a good demand for flour from the trade, and the demand has been freely met by holders, though prices have advanced during the week about 1s. Western Canal is quoted at 38s 6d., and Ohio 39s. Wheat has also been in good demand, and holders have freely responded. An advance of 3d. has taken place. It is quoted at 12s 3d. to 12s. 6d. Corn is quiet, and white is quoted at 42s. In lard there has been a fair demand from the trade, which has been freely met by holders, and no improvement has taken place. The quotation is 62s. per cwt. Beef and pork are dull. Bacon is more active, and is quoted at 42s. The weather is fine, with refreshing rains.

LONDON MARKETS.—London, April 22.—Sugar of all qualities has been in good demand during the week, and prices are firmer. All qualities of rice have declined. Coffee is dull.

MONEY MARKET.—The rates of interest are lower, and consols are now quoted at 87¼ to 87⅞. The transactions in American securities have been small.

EASTERN AFFAIRS.—It was rumored at Paris and Vienna that a treaty offensive and defensive had been signed between Austria and Prussia.

SWEDEN AND RUSSIA.—Sweden is said to have entered into a positive engagement with Russia, to the effect that she will not at one time permit more than four ve-sels belonging to the allied powers to enter her harbors. The arrangement includes Norway.

There is nothing new from the seat of war.

SUCCESS OF THE TURKS.—A dispatch received at Paris confirms the previous accounts that the Turks had in three battles at the mouth of the Danube been successful against superior forces. In

THE DEAD.

Dead are everywhere!
In mountain's side, the plain, the wood profound;
All the wide earth—the fertile and the bare—
Is one great hospital ground!

Within the populous streets,
In solitary houses, in palace domes, where pomp and luxury meet,
Alike how the mandates he.

The old man of his chair;
The sports-child murmuring its wordless song;
The bridegroom and the fair, the rich, the poor,
All—all to death belong!

The sunlight glide the walls
Of kingly sepulchres overwrought with brass;
And the long shadows of the cypresstalls
Athwart the crimson grass.

Strong of name time,
Builded their glorious cities by the sea;
And yet all in their greatness sat sublime,
As if no change could be.

Oh no was the eloquent tongue!
The poet's heart, the sage's soul was there;
And living echoes with their children young
The faithful and the fair.

They were, but they are not;
Some rise and set, and earth put on her holiness,
Whilst man, submitted to the common lot,
Went down into the brash.

And still, amid the wrecks
Of mighty generations passed away,
Earth's fairest growth, the fragrant wild flower, decks
The tomb of yesterday.

And to the twilight dews,
The bathed evening forth, as he who went,
In hope of morning; to the grave to weep,
To breathe in low laments.

Thus God are everywhere;
With voice in love, or tenderness, or faith;
Wherever is pleasure, pomp, or pride, where'er
Life is or was, is death!

OPENING OF JAPAN.—The Overland China Mail, of Feb 25, contains very important intelligence from Japan, to the effect that the country will shortly be opened to the commerce of all the world. The visit of Commodore Perry in July last, has no doubt hastened the event, which his return would probably have accomplished; but the actual achievement is due to the Russians, not to the Americans.

While Commodore Perry deemed it the wisest course, after delivering the letter of the President of the United States in due form at Uraga, to allow six months to elapse before requiring an answer; Admiral Poutiatine, without dictating the place where he should hold intercourse with the Japanese authorities, went as directed to Nangasaki, and has succeeded in negotiating, apparently without any sacrifice of national dignity, and with the sort of success which the world was more prepared to expect from the practical republic than from the Russian autocracy.

According to the information we have received from an authentic source, some time after the Russian Admiral intimated his presence and objects at Nangasaki, two high officers arrived, and after entertaining him at a feast ashore, entered upon the objects of the visit in a friendly and even cordial manner. In substance, they stated very candidly that the Japanese government, seeing the earnest desire of foreign nations to hold intercourse with them, and their own people being anxious to trade, it had been resolved to open the commerce of Japan to all nations. In this spirit, all the ports of Japan might at once be considered as open to foreign vessels requiring to refit or take in supplies of wood and water; but, to avoid disturbances, the crews must not be allowed to land. This, however, is only confirming what foreigners have already enjoyed, without always fairly acknowledging. With regard to commercial intercourse, the Japanese officers stated, that after centuries of seclusion, some preparation was necessary, and a year must therefore elapse before any treaty or privileges to trade would come into operation.

We have no doubt as to the accuracy of this information, and are farther inclined to believe that a similar result might have been effected long ago by Great Britain, if she had ever been fortunate enough to have entrusted her interests in this part of the globe to any one who did not look steadily and exclusively to his own fortune, and how to obtain honors without deserving them. Sir Bowring may not be insensible to either, but he is less likely than any of his predecessors, or any Admiral we have seen on the station, to overlook the opportunity of achieving a lasting reputation for himself.

Seven years ago an expedition on a large scale was projected under Sir John Davis, but was considered of so little importance that Sir Thomas Cochrane preferred removing the squadron to narn head money in Borneo; and the scheme was never resumed. Subsequently a sloop-of-war has visited Japan, but without any important purpose in view, or any one likely to accomplish it. Our intercourse, in short, since 1808, the then Captain Pellew, in the Phaeton, "excited a fierce hatred in the minds of the Japanese," having had a tendency to confirm rather than remove prejudices against our country. Now, however, that Japan is likely to be opened without aid, whether or not England may be excluded from the arrangements, we trust those upon whom they devolve will enter into such stipulations as shall best secure the true and enlarged interests of commerce with the least chance of creating misunderstandings with the Japanese; and to that end many of the one-sided and selfishly abused provisions of the China treaties ought to be avoided.

MR. HARRISON AINSWORTH.—Adverting to the very minute details often related of the peculiarities of literary men, Diogenes says:

"Mr Harrison Ainsworth is a great historical student, as all who have read his works must be aware. He is thoroughly up in English history, from the time of Brutus and his three sons down to the gentle reign of our present Queen; and knows every body who has lived in any period, whether it be William the Conqueror, or Jack Sheppard. It is said, he can repeat the history of every nook or corner of the Tower of London on the darkest night. In his house is fitted up a museum of articles used by burglars, thieves, pickpockets and highwaymen, which he takes a simple pride in showing to visitors. In his back yard, which is surrounded by high walls, is a miniature gibbet, for the amusement of his children and those of his neighbors, who play at hanging each other by way of childish sport. He has a pet jet popy, which he calls his 'Bonny Black Bess;' and his will bequeaths the proceeds of his literary labors to the erection of an asylum for all young convicts who will acknowledge they drew their first breath of vice from his novels. His will also expresses a desire to be laid side by side with Dick Turpin—provided the resting place of that popular individual be correctly ascertained."

A CALIFORNIA LAKE.—The Placerville Herald says that Lake Bigler is one of the curiosities of California. It is a lake fifty miles long and from ten to twenty miles in width, situated between two distinct ridges of the Sierra Nevada, and but one and a half miles north of the road to Carson's valley. According to the Herald it is a perfect paragon of a lake, a miniature paradise among the mountains. Its wildly beautiful and romantic shores are lined with forests, and its waters, which never freeze, although surrounded by snow during a great part of the year, abound in many varieties of fish, among which the salmon and speckled trout predominate. So clear are its waters that the objects on the bottom are distinctly visible at a depth of thirty or forty feet. Upon the eastern side of the lake is a vast cavern extending to an unknown distance into the heart of the mountain. The entrance is arched in a peculiar manner, and the place, which has never been explored, is believed by the Indians to be the abode of the evil spirits of the mountains.

KISSING.—Hardly any two females kiss alike There is as much variety in the manner of doing it, as in the faces and manners of the sex. Some delicate little creatures merely give a slight touch of the lip. This is a sad aggravation. We seem to be about to "have a good time," but actually get nothing. Others go into us like a hungry man to a beef-steak, and seem to chew up our countenance. This is disgusting, and soon drives away a delicate lover. Others struggle like hens when burying themselves in the dry dirt. The kiss is won by great exertions, and is not worth as much as the trouble it costs. Now, we are in favor of a certain shyness when a kiss is proposed, but it should not be continued too long; and, when the fair one "gives in," let her administer the kiss with warmth and energy. Let there be soul in it. If she close her eyes, and sigh deeply immediately after it, the effect is greater. She should be careful not to "slobber" a kiss, but give it as a humming-bird sends his bill into a honey-suckle, deep, but delicately. There is much virtue in a kiss, when well delivered. We have had the memory of one we received in our youth last us many years; and we believe it will be the last thing we shall think of when we die.

SOME ABSURDITIES OF FASHION.—A late traveller, in descending the Danube, was struck with the crowd of new carriages on board the steamboat, and, on making inquiry, learned that they were destined for Bucharest. He was told that every Wallachian gentleman, able to keep a carriage at all, considered it indispensable to have a new one annually, whether the old one was worn out or not; and that no carriage would answer unless it was made at Vienna, and transported by steamboat, that being the costliest method of taking it to Bucharest.

We naturally laugh at the absurdity of such a fashion, and ask, with the traveler, why coaches made at Bucharest, by mannfactnrers from Vienna, would not answer the purposes of the Wallachians? Yet are not we Americans, though far superior to the Wallachians generally in civilization, guilty of fashionable follies quite as ridiculous? Is not Paris to us what Vienna is to them! We have actually seen coaches from the French capital sold for prices far above their worth, simply because the purchaser imagined they must be better than American ones, though it is notorious to all familiar with mannfactnres of this description, that no coach-makers in the world equal our own, in the combined lightness and stability of their vehicles of all varieties.

So also in matters of dress. A French bonnet will sell for twenty five dollars, when one made here, upon the same pattern, and with similar materials, will not bring half that sum. French fashions are all the rage, no matter how absurd.

A few months ago, Louis Napoleon re-established trains at court, and already our would-be aristocracy are wearing trains too. Frequently, in imitating Parisian styles, we exaggerate them, or apply them where they are entirely unsuitable, and thus ont-Herod Herod. The lady of Louisville, Kentucky, who appeared in the muddy streets there, the other day, wearing an enormous train, which a little black page supported, furnished an illnstration of this. Instead of copying the court fashion she only oscricatured it. The Empress Engenia would no more think of wearing her court mantle in the street, than she would of going up and down the Boulevards, with her crown on her head, like the queen in the story-book. Another frequent example of the absurd manner in which French fashions are applied here, is the wearieg of carriage dresses or ostriage bonnets for promenade, or the going out a-shopping, in the morning, in rich silks and dinner costume. The attire of the Parisian lady is, at worst, suitable for the occasion; but American ladies copy indiscriminately their foreign models.

Throughout our whole social life may be seen similar absurd imitations of European customs, which being totally inapplicable to our condition, make us the laughing stock of intelligent Frenchmen. Our fashionable people eat, sleep, and rise up, at hours suitable to an idle aristocracy, and not at those indispensable to men in active business, as most of the heads of rich and fashionable families are. Their amusements are those of ennuied drones, not those appropriate for over-tasked merchants, manufacturers, or professional men. To dance half the night; to flirt with other men's wives; and to go the round of fashionable social follies generally, may answer for a class of hereditary nobles, whose chief object in life is to kill time, but not for working republicans, who have no leisure for such child's play. Yet we continue to practice these modes of so called recreation, denominated parties, merely because they are of foreign origin, though actually they furnish no recreation at all to grown up men or women, but are, to speak plainly, positive bores.

We might follow up the subject, and show that, in scores of things, Americans are as absurd in their fashions as the Wallachians, who will eot have a new coach, unless it is brought from Vienna by steamboat. While we laugh at others, it is as well to look at ourselves, and see if there may not fairly be laughter raised at our expense also. [Philadelphia Ledger.

TURKISH WOMEN.—The cure with which the Ottomans have always kept their wives and daughters apart, still prevails in Constantinople. To ask a Turkish gentleman after his wife or his daughters, is to give him a mortal offense. If he alludes to them, he calls them "the home" or "the house." He will tell you that the house is well. Also when he announces to his friends the birth of a daughter, he says, "a veiled one," or "a stranger has been given to me." He is taught by the Koran to honor his wife, and to believe that she will be, equally with himself, a participator in heavenly felicity. The teaching effectually displaces the vulgar error that declares Mahometans to believe that women have no souls. Polygamy is allowed to this day in Turkey, but it is so surrounded with social and religious difficulties, that it is rarely practiced. The Koran allows a Musulman to marry four legitimate wives, but tells him expressly that it is meritorious to marry only one. In Constantinople, the ulemas, the great bodies of government officials, the naval and military officers, the tradesmen and the workmen, have generally only one wife.

In the provinces, one wife is even more generally the rule. And now, all the great officers of State make a merit of wedding one wife only, to show a good example to their countrymen. Nor is the wife a slave entirely. In her own apartment she is supreme mistress. She may receive her female friends and her male relations; she may go ont in the day time, veiled and attended; and her husband consults her on all his affairs. She is not the painted doll we have read of. She is thoroughly domestic and is effectually protected by the State from cruel treatment. The Mussulman is bound by law to maintain her according to his rank, if he fails in this, she may claim a divorce. When he marries her, he gives a present to her relatives, instead of expecting a dower as with us. She has the earn of the household, and if he be poor she employs her leisure time in spinning. She children—the girls until they are married, and the boys until they enter one of the public schools. If the Ottomans have one tender chord in their bosoms, it is that which is always awakened within them, at the sound of the maternal name. Women may even perform the functions of the Iman, recite prayers, and, under extraordinary circumstances, they may be vested with political powers. Yet, undoubtedly, the Turkish woman is not yet free. The law allows her to see her distant relatives only once in each year, if her husband objects to more frequent visiting; her relatives are also subjected to legal interference. [Household Words.

LUDICROUS MISTAKE.—A Frenchman, newly arrived in London, impatient to see the town, but fearful of not finding his way back to the hotel, carefully copied upon a card the name pointed upon the wall at the corner of the street in which it was situated. This done, he felt himself safe, and set out for a ramble, much upon the principal vulgarly known as "following one's nose." The whole day long he strolled and stared to his heart's content; wearied at last he jumped into a cab, and with the easy confident air of a man who felt at home, he read from the card he had prudently preserved, the name of the street he dwelt in. The cabman grinned horribly. "This English pronunciation is sadly difficult," said the Frenchman to himself, "he does not understand me." And he placed the card before the man's eye. Cabby grinned more than ever, gazed in his fare's astonished face, and nnded by sticking his hands in his pockets, and roaring with laughter. Indignation on the part of the foreigner; he appealed to the passers-by who gravely listened to him at first, but upon beholding his card joined one in all in chorus with the coachman. The Frenchman now got furious, swore, stamped, gesticulated like a candidate for Bedlam lie went so far as to threaten the laughers; a crowd assembled; everybody sympathized with him till they learned the circumstances of the case, when they joined in the infectious hilarity. Up came the police, those guardian angels of bewildered foreigners in London's labyrinth. The aggrieved Gaul felt sure of sympathy, succor and revenge. He was never more mistaken.

The gentlemen in blue roared like the rest. They evidently could not help it. Compunction mingled with their mirth, but they nevertheless guffawed exceedingly. To what extremities the desperate Frenchman might have proceeded it is impossible to say, had not a gentleman acquainted with his language appeared upon the scene. He too laughed violently on beholding the card, and when he had spoken a few words to the Frenchman, the Frenchman laughed likewise, which was a signal for a recommencement of the general hilarity. The address, so carefully copied by the foreigner at the corner of his street, was the following: "Commit no nuisance." [Blackwood.

A person who undertakes to raise himself by scandalizing others, might as well sit down on a wheelbarrow and undertake to wheel himself.

THE TRUE WAY TO RISE IN THE WORLD.—It is only by plodding, active habits of industry, that we can hope to win our way through life. The race may be arduous, but it is one which will repay the competitor. Barrow justly says: "A noble heart will disdain to subsist like a drone upon honey gathered by others' labors, like a vermin, to filch its food out of the public granary; or like a shark to prey upon the lesser fry; but will rather outdo his private obligations to other men's care and toil by considerations to other men's care and toil by considerations to other men's care and toil by consider

WHAT SHALL BE DONE TO REVIVE CLASS-MEETINGS?

Mr. Editor—Much has been said on the ject of Class-meetings, and a great deal remote from the subject. That Class- etings, when conducted properly, are a at means of grace, cannot be denied; the tory of the militant Church proves it; our n observation and short experience prove And I really believe, that unless Class- etings are revived soon, that we will lose spirit of religion. Other denominations get on well without them, but without Methodism is a mere cypher. These ecular people, neither are we zealous of works; and yet there are those who op- them. It is not astonishing that they ld be opposed by other denominations, especially by the world; but to be op- d by those who are among us, is astonish- and ridiculous. It is intimated by some ough the columns of the religious periodi- , that Class-meetings should only be ed as a privilege, and not a duty—that bers should not be expelled from the rch for non-attendance. And the reason gned is, that their neglect is not a sin suf- nt to exclude a person from the kingdom eaven. Now, in regard to their neglect g a sin sufficient to exclude a person from ven, we have nothing to say; but we do that a willful neglect of Class is a viola- of the Discipline (page 93, Sec. 111,) believe that if this rule was enforced tly, yet mildly, and with prudence and tion, that Class-meetings might and ld be revived. But I believe that it may less, with a few exceptions, without this. course which we allude to is this: let all the bishops and presiding elders hold s-meetings whenever they can, and preach its importance occasionally. It is true, re is no Discipline imposing this duty upon hops and elders, yet they ought to do it en practicable; for it would certainly have ood effect. The time was when they did end to this duty, and then the thing worked l. But now it is a rare thing to hear of a hop, or even a presiding elder, holding a s-meeting. But the bishop recommends m, and the elder charges the preacher in rge to attend to it. And here is a defi- cy right at the fountain head; and you w, if the stream is weak at the head or se, that it can but be weak all the way m. 2d. Let every circuit and station acher hold Class-meetings on every occa- when there is no Church business to at- d to to prevent. We regret that this class the clergy have neglected this very impor- duty, as well as bishops and elders, ls at the same time they are the very per- upon whom this duty more particularly olves. Now as long as this is the case, gs will be in no better condition. The was when circuit preachers did their y, or a charge was brought against them; now-a-days, it seems, a preacher can go circuit and not perform more than half duties made obligatory upon him, and hing is said about it at Conference, merely use he is a pretty good fellow, and no wishes to wound his feelings. I believe every preacher who has charge of a cir- or station, and neglects his Class-meet- ought to be charged at the Annual Con- nce. The truth is, it is a cross to hold , and therefore the preacher nearly al- has some excuse for not holding class. times it is too cold, sometimes too warm; sometimes he is not very well, and a mul- e of just such excuses—and thus down Class-meetings. Now this compromising the devil will ruin the Church if some- g is not done. 3d. Let every preacher ch frequently on the subject and defend use of Methodism, both by precept and ple. Let them make it a subject upon h to converse around the fireside in their ral visits. Let them spare no pains in ng their flock to feel interested on the ct. Let them instruct their leaders to their Class-books; and let him take zance of the Class-book every round on rcuit, and those who are marked absent, m go immediately to his brother, or sis- nd ascertain the reason of his or her ab- 4th. Let all the local preachers hold as well as the preacher in charge, and the Class-book. 5th. Let the leaders unctual in the attendance of all their -meetings, and let them have their ex- tions, and quotations suitable to the l conditions, avoiding everything like lity, that the meeting may be rendered and interesting. And let them be holy pright in all their department, for the nsibility resting upon them is great. Let the preacher who has charge of the its and stations bring all who will not d, when the foregoing course is pursued, al; and if they are determined to persist, em he expelled.

this course be pursued for twelve months, will venture to say that very few would ; but on the other hand, all this ado t Class-meetings would be hushed, and ould have a flourishing Church.

ethren, "let us all come up to the help s Lord against the mighty," in this re- , and make a desperate effort to revive s-meetings.

A NEEDY CHURCH.

R. Editor—Permit me through your mn to speak to the Christian philanthro- I address them as the children of our enly Father. "The earth is the Lords, the fullness thereof." Cast your eyes the map of Texas, and you see a large ct of country west of the San Antonio This tract of country is settling up human creatures, destitute in a great e of the Gospel and Gospel privileges.

Corpus Christi is the principal port for all emigrants coming by water to this country. The town is situated on the Bay bearing the same name. In this town there is not a house dedicated to the worship of Almighty God. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has had a missionary here for nearly two years, and, to say nothing of the hardships and embarrassments of the missionary with regard to the comforts and accommodations of himself and family, the great struggle has been to erect a house of worship. Col. Kinny donated two lots for the use of the church. The army family have been liberal, and Mrs. Major Chapman has rendered important services; some of the citizens have done well, and yet the walls of the church have stood without a cover for more than four months, for want of means. I ask the lovers of Christ to think and pray on this subject. Brethren and sisters, will you not take stock in the glorious enterprise of building the first church in the beautiful bay city. I do believe it will be laying up treasure in heaven. Can you sit contented in your own well-furnished churches, and pastors, and know at the same time the destitution of those so nearly allied to you? Small sums from a few benevolent friends will be all sufficient. God will not despise the day of small things. We, as a christian community and as a nation, must feel a mutual care for each other and for the entire body. Again I say, my christian friends, and you that feel interested in the extension of Christ's kingdom, pray on this subject. Lord what wouldst thou have me to do? and see if God will not put it into your hearts to send us over a little aid in some shape or other. Mr. Phelps, of New York, sent us fifty dollars, and the "Southern Aid Society" one hundred. God grant that others may go and do likewise.

CHINA MISSION.

The following letter we take from the N. & L. Christian Advocate:

To the Rev. E. W. Sehon, D.D., Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dear Brother—A little more than twelve months have passed away since we landed on the shores of China. This brief period has been full of change. We found brother Jenkins in the act of leaving for the U. States. Sister Taylor had left some months before we sailed. Dr. Taylor left on the 28th of September last, in the ship "Torrent," Captain Copp, via London, to join his afflicted family. Thus the mission has been suddenly reduced to one man and his wife. We hope, however, for better things in the future, when brothers Taylor and Jenkins shall return, accompanied by several new recruits, and the money to build churches, &c. I see good reports from brother Jenkins, and signs of increasing interest for China, not only among the masses whom he addresses, but on the part of our Missionary Board, and the public journals generally. The Lord bless all who think of us.

The peace and quiet which we found on our arrival here, have given place to the horrors of civil war. For more than three months, Shanghai has been a scene of bloodshed and suffering. Thousands of the poor have been burned out of house and home; some of them consumed in their burning houses; others murdered in cold blood, and all manner of outrages committed upon the helpless and unoffending women and children! And all this perpetrated by the hands of the imperial officers and soldiers, sent here to protect the persons and property of the Emperor's "dear children," as he is wont to call the people. The city is still closely besieged, but no nearer a surrender than the day after its capture. All business is suspended—trade stopped, and general disorder reigns through every department of society. At the beginning of the troubles, our schools were broken up, and the children scattered in all directions. Nothing can be done except in boarding schools. Preaching is not practicable, except to the servants, and those connected with the family. The city gates are closed, and all ingress and egress forbidden, so that the church houses in the city are not accessible. Dr. Medhurst, of the London mission, has succeeded in getting in two or three times. On the occasion of his last visit, one of the insurgents interrupted him in the midst of his sermon, by commencing a warm and ranting exhortation to the people, approving what the Doctor had said, and telling them if they did not repent of their sins, and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, they would most certainly be damned. He declaimed against opium, tobacco, gambling, and kindred vices, with a violent emphasis, showing rather more vengeance than love. No public preaching will be at all practicable until the war ends.

The mission property has been considerably injured. Brother Jenkins' house has suffered less than Dr. Taylor's, because farther from the city wall; yet it has received several balls. The fence has been broken, and some fruit trees he had planted out, destroyed. Rev. Mr. Culbertson, of the American Board, was living in the house at the time the troubles commenced, but he was obliged to abandon it. I had the doors and windows closed, and fastened as strongly as I could. I also employed an old man to watch it. The day before the first battle, Mrs. C. retired to Rev. Mr. Nelson's, of the Protestant Episcopal Mission, who lives some distance from the city. I remained to take care of our little property for a month, surrounded on all sides by belligerent forces. I witnessed several severe battles, and narrowly escaped with my life two or three times. The house stands only a few hundred yards from the city, and in fair range of the cannon on the wall. Not less than thirty balls have pierced it, some passing entirely through it, others tearing up the roof, splitting the doors, and shattering the windows. I thought it unsafe to remain any longer, and chose rather to give up my little property, than risk my life. We are now boarding with Mr. Nelson. I cannot speak too highly of these dear friends. They are from Virginia. Mrs. N. is the daughter of your old friend, Col. Points.

The last advices from the North represent Peking as in a state of siege; the insurgents had gained possession of two of the gates of the outer wall. The Emperor had fled to his native place, Ny-le. The last Peking Gazette speaks in very discouraging language of the state of public affairs. The imperial treasury has been empty for months, and the soldiers feeding upon the people, robbing and abusing them shamefully. This has increased the disaffection, and greatly augmented the success of the rebel army. The empire is, in fact, in the hands of the invaders. I see some of our Church papers are copying some foolish articles on the subject of the rebellion. One states that the rebels are Confucianists in disguise! A man must have precious little knowledge of China, and be wonderfully behind the times, who can give credit to such stuff. Confucianists in disguise! Editors of public journals ought to be well enough informed to guard their columns against such anonymous nonsense. Who are the Confucianists? It might just as well be said of the Emperor, that he is in disguise fighting against himself! Some people are amazingly "slow of heart to believe" a good report, but always quick enough to take up and circulate an evil one. The insurgents are Christians, though as yet but imperfectly acquainted with the minutia of the gospel. They have a part of the Old Testament, and perhaps, by this time, all the New. The Ten Commandments constitute the basis of their present system; and though they retain many absurd notions, they adhere strictly to the letter of every Commandment. We should hope for the best, and at least give them credit for sinning at the truth, until we have proof to the contrary. I am not surprised that opium dealers and other wicked men should abuse the rebels. Their craft is in danger. Tae-ping-wang will cut short the abominable traffic, and he ought to do it; as a good prince, he must do it. There are many men here who have made immense wealth by the contraband trade, whom they go home will look as devout and godly as if they had never committed a sin.

The British and Foreign Bible Society authorized, at its last meeting, the printing of one million of New Testaments, for circulation among the Chinese. The London Mission, and those agreeing with them as to the terms for God and Spirit, will receive this donation. The Shin committee have completed a translation of the Pentateuch, and have commenced the translation of the New Testament. The controversy seems no nearer an end than it was a year ago. The Bishop of Victoria took occasion, in his address to the clergy of his diocese, to argue the Shanghai side of the question. Somebody has written a pamphlet on the other side. So it goes. Doctors will differ, and, I fear, sometimes without sufficient grounds. I hope the controversy will come to an end before the country is thrown open, so that we may have a version of the Holy Scriptures, which all can willingly circulate. If, as we confidently anticipate, the whole country is opened to the missionaries, millions of Bibles will be wanted for distribution. These cannot be sent from home, they must be manufactured here. Your appropriation for a printing press was very opportune. We shall need it, I hope, as soon as it can get here, to print Bibles and Tracts for the new dynasty.

I am working away at the language, visiting and talking to the people, as well as I am able. I distribute books as I have opportunity, which, I trust, will do some good. Mrs. C. is studying and preparing herself to enter into the work of schools and private instruction so soon as peace is restored. At present her labors are principally confined to the servants whom she catechises and instructs. We wish to fulfill the object of our mission—to finish our work with joy. We often think of the dear friends we left behind us, and it is a great comfort to believe they think of, and pray for us.

May I not ask you to write more frequently? The Secretaries of every Board represented here, with the exception of one, I believe, write regularly once a month to their missionaries. Present my kind regards to the Board, and accept for yourself the best wishes of your brother in Christ.

W. G. E. Cunningham.

The Pure Heart.—In a discourse, on the words, "Blessed are the Pure in Heart," Mr. Caughay once remarked that it was impossible to sully a sunbeam. "And while that sunbeam," said he, "may dart down into the darkest hole of filth and illuminate it, it will soil nothing, and yet not be soiled itself. So the ray of heavenly life and love existing in the perfect believer's heart, goes into and comes out into contact with the dark dwelling-places of iniquity and filth, and cheers, and enlivens, and encourages by its presence, but is always kept unspotted from the stains of the world. It is God that gives to the pure heart this great gift and distinction. It is He who can keep the heart in perfect peace. Suppose a white-robed female were walking along some turnpike road, where the mud was flying, and where the horses and wagons as they hurried and splashed along, at every turn and step increased the confusion, hemmed up the footpath, and threw the water and dirt. Suppose that white-robed female should find at her journey's end her white dress as spotless as when she was first robed? Would not this be a miracle? Most surely it would. But a miracle it is that the Christian, in waging his course through this world, in fighting through trials and temptations, and in struggling with the fiery adversary, does not have some stain or mark of conflict on his garments. He cries out, 'Glory to God! free and unspotted, too.' It is a miracle of grace—of the grace of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Praises be unto his precious name!" [Western Advocate.

THOUGHTS BY THE WAY.

New York, April 24.

Mr. Editor—When we bade you good night, we told you we were going to hear Mr. Milburn preach. We went accordingly. On our way to the Capitol the wind blew cold, and the rain drops threatened us with a coming storm. Notwithstanding, the Representative Hall was well filled—not crowded, as on fair days. We found, however, an intelligent an assembly as it is customary to find anywhere. Nearly all the departments of public and private interest were represented there, from the Supreme Bench downward.

The hymn was well read. How rare are good readers. The prayer was simple, earnest, subdued, hearty, solemn. A death-like silence reigned in the Hall, and on the words of that prayer our hearts climbed up to God; and blessings descended;—and that ladder of faith-born words, burdened with the ascending offering, of love and gratitude, and praise, piercing the skies, opened fresh visions of good angels, and of our good Father, and we, reverently kneeling, with a moistened eye, and a throbing breast, said, with the hoary Patriarch, "It is good to be here." The discourse was uttered and finished in the spirit foreshadowed by the prayer. The sermon was directed to the judgment, to the conscience, to the heart. It was bold, manly, outright, faithful, without affectation; he spoke like one having authority—the authority of truth, love, God.

We left the city of Washington. And as we departed, whirling away at forty miles an hour, we could but hope the day might come when, among other grand improvements and useful reforms going on in the Federal City, they would change the miserable names of their streets and avenues, and call them after the great statesmen and patriots who have passed away.

A night train brought us through, and the morning finds us here. And here is Broadway, the Gulf Stream of New York running in the midst of this surrounding sea of humanity, through which its strong current incessantly pours. And no one, after being in this city for one day, can much wonder at the Western man who stood for an hour on the steps of the Astor House, patiently waiting for the procession to go by before he could get into the street. On they rush, thousands upon thousands, countless as the waves of the sea—we wonder if one in ten could tell what they are after, if asked—and like the sea, full of all sorts of animated creatures and curious things. We saw a few doll-fues (dolphins) floating gracefully along the elastic waves; and many a sturdy specimen of the shark-genus glided stealthily here and there among the shoals. Here fortunes are made and lost—character acquired and forfeited—a world of sin committed, and some, aye! many good deeds done.

The streets are so crooked one would almost think the business of the night watch is to set up with the winds for fear they would get lost in their endless labyrinths; and yet they say the doings of many of its Wall street worshippers, corporations, and commercial orisis makers, are more serpentine and sinuous than the streets. At any rate, while the oracle of wisdom says, "make straight paths for your feet, they cannot deny the charge we make, that they walk in very crooked ways.

Our time is cut off at both ends, and therefore we spend but seven hours in this city. We must see Dr. D. M. Reese. 'Tis done. He looks as young as he did ten years ago, though he has plied the archimedian goose quill day and night, till book upon book, and medical quarterlies not a few, can testify that he has not lived in vain. When last we met, the lamented Buscom was one of us. Oh! may we meet again! Our thoughts and words turned on that noble spirit and christian hero. I learned from Dr. Reese that his manuscript lectures on Infidelity were destroyed in the conflagration that burned up the Harper's establishment. The friends of Buscom and of genius will regret to learn this fact.

We discussed the certainty of obtaining a decision for the South by the Supreme Court; and we had been parted but a few hours when the fact was so announced. The Southern Church gets justice, and the Court virtually says the true designation of the Churches is Northern and Southern—both being alike legitimate.

Dr. Gilbert, of Memphis and New Orleans memory, is here, thronged day and night with the lame, the maimed, the blind, the cancerated, and the ulcerated; and some of the leading medical men of the city inform us that he has rendered humanity a noble service. We called at his infirmary; he was not in, but confined with ill health at home. The room was full of sufferers sitting all about a spacious hall, awaiting each his or her turn for treatment by the Doctor's assistants.

We passed a charming half hour with the best natured, most gentlemanly and urbane man in the metropolis, the eldest of the Harpers; and may the fiery calamity which reduced the labor of years to ruins in an hour, like the flaming chariot of the olden prophet, waft his immortal nature towards the everduring city of God.

Nor must I fail to mention that I saw our young brother, Lambeth, of Mississippi, and his companion, brother Bell, on. They were at a passable boarding house near the Battery; and though cheerful and patient, looked to me to be in the wrong port. Northern Methodism is only human nature slightly mended with a little homœopathic grace. And to hail from slave territory, is enough to wheel the cold shoulder into one's very bosom. Can't our Missionaries be all from Southern ports? Let them go to England and sail from thence; not now, but her latter. God bless the little band.

Yours, Salathiel.

COAST CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Ocean Springs, May 18, 1854.

I have seen enough of this renowned watering place, since my last letter, to express my hearty acquiescence in the praises that have been bestowed upon it. The position is beautiful and commanding. A water prospect, dotted with little islets, and looming out into the "deep blue sea," "far as the breeze can bear, the billows foam." In the back ground stands the great pine forest of Mississippi; those evergreen Titans that have "braved the battle and the storm" for ages, and now fling their hoary shadows and shed their balsamic dews over this charming retreat. A beautiful river, fringed with verdure, winds like a thread of silver round the town, and gigantic live oaks, that no elemental strife can shake, gracefully stoop to kiss the sparkling waters. On an amphitheatre, rising boldly from the ocean, the town has been located, and its progress has been rapid, but not at all too much so, considering the advantages it presents. These consist in its proximity to New Orleans and Mobile—on the water high-way between the two,—in the surpassing beauty and salubrity of its site; in the fine back country in the rear, ensuring abundant supplies for the table; in a fishery almost unrivaled; in the moral, industrious, intelligent and opulent population located in and about it, giving a tone to manners and society that will compare with the oldest and most refined communities; and last, but not least, in its wonderful fountains which almost realize the fabled waters of Arethusa, and the dream of Ponce de Leon—waters long known to the mysterious races that have occupied this country, and whose curative powers, handed down by authentic tradition for more than two hundred years, have been demonstrated to the satisfaction of both the skeptical and scientific.

To the penetration and sagacity of your friend and fellow-citizen, Dr. William G. Austin, originally of Maryland, then of Mississippi, and now a distinguished practitioner of New Orleans, our country is, mainly, indebted for the introduction of these wonderful mineral waters. The Doctor satisfied himself, by positive testimony, and minute analysis, of their character; he traced the tradition that had given them celebrity among the French and Indians many years ago; he selected desperate cases from the Infirmaries of the city, and from his own private practice, and from the patients of other physicians, and brought them here, and the results satisfied him that, if there bubbla up from the earth a panacea for numerous "ills that flesh is heir to," here it is. Known every where as a man of high personal character, far above deception or chicanery, and as an eminent physician, incorrigibly opposed to quackything unprofessional or empirical, he refused to recommend these waters until he had thoroughly tested them, and his recommendation has carried with it great weight. By his advice, hundreds whom medicine and regimen had failed to relieve, hundreds who had tried other watering places in vain, and were "dragging their slow lengths along," in hopeless convalescence or rapid decline, have been induced to try these waters, and by a proper perseverance, have been radically cured or greatly ameliorated. The cases on record are too numerous to mention. Persons coming here liberated from head to foot; cutaneous affections of every kind; syphilitic taints; interrupted secretions; dyspepsia and indigestion, debility, and derangement of the liver and bowels; dropsy, in its most aggravated shape; want of appetite; jaundice and pallid complexion; sterility, and its auxiliary evils; sick headaches, scrofula, and many other complaints and complications have been effectually cured by the judicious use of these waters, in combination with the sea air and salt bath, and a proper regimen; for it is not contended that even Ocean Springs, wonderful as they are in remedial properties, will cure patients who commit every excess in diet and dissipation. But I do believe that if those who are afflicted, or who are suffering from the sequel of almost any of the diseases common to this climate, will repair to Ocean Springs and use the waters with a reasonable degree of patience, under the advice of a physician, and live with a reasonable degree of prudence, they have a better chance for recovery than at any other watering place in this country. Let invalids come and try it for three days—or for a week—and there are few cases indeed where the effect will not be evident to the patient and his friends.

The analysis of the water you have seen. It holds in solution many powerful ingredients, and one of them, Iodine, more largely than any other known mineral waters. I attribute many of the most remarkable cures accomplished here, to this valuable property, and to illustrate its specific action, I quote from the London Lancet, a medical journal of high authority:

"A recent discovery with respect to the iodine in water, and its influence on the human organization, is of too great an interest to be passed over here, the more so as it may lead our sanitary philosophers to some fresh considerations. The afflictions of goitre and cretinism, painfully familiar to all Alpine travellers, have always been attributed to the water drank by the inhabitants of those districts which are the homes of these cretins. Mr. Chatin many years ago announced, as the result of his investigations, that the absence of iodine from the water was the predisposing cause of the disease. He has recently placed this hypothesis beyond a doubt. Fully and Saillon, two villages on the right bank of the Rhone, although almost touching each other, have long been remarkable; one village, fully, being a notorious cradle of cretinism; the other, Saillon, being as decidedly free from goitre or cretinism. Of late years, however, Saillon has in its turn become infected. And the reason, say the inhabitants, is none other than the sanitary precautions recently taken to purify the water. Formerly the water of the Salente, before reaching the village, was wont to mingle with the streams of a hot spring, named source de fer. To bring purer water into the village, they altered its course, and turned it away from the hot spring. Observers declared that the date of the appearance of goitre in Saillon coincides pretty nearly with that of their being blessed with "pure water." M. Chatin investigated the matter; he analyzed the water of the Salente; the water of the hot spring, and the water where the two streams mingle; the results confirmed his previous publications; he found the Salente water free from iodine, and the water of the hot spring and of the two mingled, strongly impregnated with it. The conclusion is irresistible: wherever the water in these districts is free from iodine, cretinism and goitre are observed among the inhabitants; wherever it is impregnated with iodine, these diseases are absent."

Too much credit cannot be awarded to Dr. Austin for his efforts to bring these mineral waters within the reach of all. He might have made a monopoly of the Springs, and secured unbounded wealth. But he divided the property into lots, and has sold, and still sells, on the most liberal terms. The consequence is, that a beautiful town has sprung up among the Springs; many make it their permanent abode; new comers are flocking in, and the clink of the hammer is constantly heard. Many beautiful lots, fronting the ocean, or the river, and well shaded with live trees, may still be purchased on very reasonable terms; and all the materials for building may be had in the immediate vicinity. The projected railroad from New Orleans to Mobile, passes through the centre of the town. There are several excellent boarding-houses, and the new and magnificent hotel has been confided to Mr. Jennings, a gentleman of energy and experience, of taste and refinement, well known in Mississippi and Louisiana, and whose sole ambition is to please. For his qualifications to conduct a first-class hotel he can refer to the highest authorities in New Orleans, and to the well known Col. Barnum of Barnum's, Baltimore. The rooms, the attendance, the table, the order, and tout ensemble of the establishment, under his supervision, will be unexceptionable, and fully up to the public demand.

The Management of Slaves.

Negro Houses.

Among the first objects that occupy the attention of the planter, in the settlement of a new place, is the selection of a proper location for his buildings. This should always be done with great care and with an especial view to health. Good water is indispensable, and should be obtained at almost any cost, as without it, there can be no permanent health. It should be obtained from wells or springs, if possible; but if that cannot be done, then proper cisterns should be constructed, and placed to receive the rain water from the buildings, by which means a constant supply of healthy water may be kept on hand.

The houses should be placed, if possible, under the shades of the native forest; but where that cannot be done, the elder, or mulberry, or some quick growth should be immediately transplanted, so as to cover the buildings, in some degree, from the rays of the summer's sun. The buildings should be placed about two feet above the ground, so that the air can pass freely under them, and also be well ventilated with doors, and windows. They should be sufficiently large, say about sixteen by twenty feet, and but one family should be put in a house; there is nothing more injurious to health or, demoralizing in feeling, than crowding them together. They find much better sleep in the open air than in crowded tight houses. Each house or family should be furnished with suitable bedding and blankets, for while a proper outfit costs a few dollars in the beginning, they save twice as much in the end,—they add greatly to the comfort and health of the slave, and enable him much better to perform the labor required.

Feeding of Slaves.

In former years the writer tried many ways and expedients to economize in the provision of slaves, by using many of the vegetable and cheap articles of diet, and less of the more costly and substantial—but time and experience have fully proved the error of a misled policy; and for many years, the following uniform mode has been adopted, with much success and satisfaction, both to the owner and to the slave.

The allowance now given per week to each hand—men, women, boys and girls, that are old enough to go in the field to work—is five pounds of good clean bacon, and one quart of molasses, with as much good bread as they require; and in the fall or sickly season of the year, or on sickly places, the addition of one pint of strong coffee, sweetened with sugar, every morning before going to work. These provisions are given out on some designated night of each week; and for families it is put together; but to single hands it is given to each separately, and they then unite in squads or messes, and have their meat cooked for them, by a woman who is detailed for that purpose, or keep it to themselves, as they please. Their bread is baked daily in leaves, by a woman who is kept for that duty. Each house or family should have a garden attached for raising their own vegetables.

This mode of allowancing relieves the owner from much trouble in daily supervising their provisions, and is much more satisfactory to the slave. Under this system of treatment a word of complaint in relation to their living is seldom heard. Some planters, however, differ on this subject, and prefer the plan of cooking and eating at one common table, and it is possible, with a small number of hands, and where the owner is willing to devote a good deal of attention to that matter, that he may save a small amount. But it will not be so satisfactory, and he will probably not gain enough to pay for the trouble. Children, of course, must be fed and attended to as their wants require; they are not likely to be neglected, as they pay a good interest upon the amount of care and expense bestowed upon them.

Negro Clothing.

The proper and usual quantity of clothes for plantation hands, is two suits of cotton for spring and summer, and two suits of woolen for winter; four pair of shoes and three hats, which, with such articles of dress as the negro prefers, and the master chooses to give, is the year's allowance. Neatness in dress is important to the health, comfort and pride of a negro, all of which should be encouraged by the owner. They should be induced to think well of themselves; and the more pride and self-respect you can instill into them, the better they will behave, and the more serviceable they will be; so they should always be aided and encouraged in dressing, and their own peculiar fancies indulged to a reasonable extent.

Hours of Work.

In the winter time, and in the sickly season of the year, all hands should take breakfast before leaving their houses, and by day do and get to work by sunrise, and work one more until 12 o'clock; then rest one hour for dinner, then work until night. In the spring and summer they should go to work by light, and work from 6 o'clock for breakfast, then work until 12 o'clock and stop two hours for dinner, and work from 2 o'clock until night. All hands stop on Saturday at 12 o'clock, and take the afternoon for cleaning their houses and clothes, so as to make a neat appearance on Sunday morning.

Task Work

The usual custom of planters, is to work without tasks during the cultivation of their crop; but in gathering cotton tasks are common, and experience has proved that whenever work is of that kind or character that it is much better to do so. If the overseer has judgment, he will get more work, and the negro will be better satisfied; he will generally make an effort and gain time to devote to his own jobs or pleasures.

Night Duty.

It was at one period, much the custom of planters to give to each hand a small piece of land to cultivate on their own account, if they chose to do so; but this system has not been found to result well. It gives an excuse for stealing, and encourages a trade on their own account, and presents a temptation and opportunity, during the process of gathering, for an unscrupulous fellow to mix a little of his master's produce with his own. It is much better to give each hand, whose conduct has been such as to merit it, an occasional holiday, as a reward, at the end of [illegible] is much less expensive and more satisfactory to all parties.

Discipline.

In regard to the general management, or discipline on plantations or public works, it is of great consequence to have perfect system and regularity, and a strict adherence to the rules that may be adopted for the government of the place. Each hand should know his duty and be required to perform it; but, as before intimated, the owner has nothing to gain by oppressing or over driving, but something to lose; for he cannot, by such means, extort more work. But still, if it becomes necessary to punish the negro for not doing his duty, or the violation of rules, it does not make him revengeful as it would an Indian or white man, but it rather tends to win his attachment and promote his happiness and well being. Slaves have no respect or affection for a master who indulges them over-much, or who, from fear or false humanity, fails to assume that degree of authority necessary to promote industry and enforce good order. At the same time, proper and suitable indulgences and privileges should be granted for the gratification and amusement of the negro; but they should always be exercised by special permission; for they are a people ever ready to practice upon the old maxim of "give an inch and take an ell."

Negroes are by nature tyrannical in their dispositions; and, if allowed, the strongest will abuse the weaker; husbands will often abuse their wives, and mothers their children, so that it becomes a prominent duty of owners and overseers to keep peace and prevent quarreling and disputes among them; and summary punishment should follow any violation of the [illegible]

Slaves are also a people that enjoy religious privileges. Many of them set much value upon it, and to every reasonable extent these advantages should be allowed them. They are never injured by preaching, but thousands become wiser and better people, and more trustworthy servants, by their attendance at church. Religious services should be provided and encouraged on every plantation. A zealous and vehement style, both in doctrine and manner, is best adapted to their temperament: they are good believers in mysteries and miracles, easily converts, and adhere with much constancy to their opinions when formed.

No card playing or gambling of any description should be allowed, under severe penalties. And the Maine liquor law should be rigidly enforced on every estate.

Marrying Among Slaves.

Taking wives and husbands among their fellow servants at home, should be as much encouraged as possible; and although inter-marrying with those belonging to other estates should not be absolutely prohibited, yet it is always likely to lead to difficulties and troubles. They cannot live together as they ought, and are constantly liable to separation, or the changing of property. It is true they usually have but little ceremony in forming these connections; and many of them look upon their obligation to each other very lightly; but in others again, is found a degree of faithfulness, fidelity and affection, which owners admire; and hence, they always seek to separate those manifesting such traits of character.

Sickness.

Proper and prompt attention, in cases of sickness, is a vastly important matter among slaves. Many plantations are inconvenient to medical aid, therefore owners and overseers should always understand the treatment of such common cases as usually occur on places under their charge. This is easily done, and many times a single dose of some mild and well understood medicine, given at the beginning of a complaint, removes the cause and effects a cure at once, when delay or the least neglect render it a serious case. A few common medicines, with plain and proper directions pasted on each bottle, should be kept on all plantations.

A bountiful supply of red pepper should be cultivated and kept on hand, and used freely in damp sections, where sore throats are apt to prevail, and also in all full complaints. It notonly creates a glow over the whole body, without any narcotic effect; it produces general arterial excitement, and prevents in a considerable degree the languor and apathy of the system, which renders it so susceptible to chills and fevers; it may be given in any way or form which taste or fancy may dictate. Recollection of Faces.—Thus writes Sir Thomas Brown? "Another misery there is in affection, that whom we truly love like ourselves we forget their looks, nor can we exactly retain the idea of their faces; and it is no wonder, for they are ourselves, and our affection makes their looks our own." And this is the commentary of Mr. Coleridge? "A thought I have often had, and once expressed it in a line. The fact is certain." Strange delusion! The words should be reversed. Rather say? We forget our own faces in the faces of those whom we love. We disappear in them—have no living, breathing existence, apart from theirs. Our recollection is not limited to the features, the shape of the countenance, the complexion. Nothing has faded. The color of the [illegible] changeableness of passion, sadness or pain, lives before us, as if Time or Death had kept watching them [illegible] No canvas absorbs colors like [illegible] It makes every thing minister to itself. [illegible] path, under trees, a garden-bed, a particular [illegible] recall the posture, the look, even the glow of sunset, or hunter moonshine, that tinged the cheek or hair of a dear companion in some hour of unusual interest. John Newton, Cowper's friend, said, in after life, that the face of the young girl whom he so passionately loved, used to shine upon the lonely heath as he [illegible] at the wheel, steering the ship [illegible] pest. Amid foam and lightning, [illegible] fuller storms of his own troubled spirit, there was she—rebuking, cheering and blessing him.

This reviving influence applies, in a pathetic fullness, to the departed—the lost. Affection has its pure crystal, never stained or broken except by death. The hand and the form fall together. Our this bright surface of love's remembrance, we behold our friends with the clearness of natural faces reflected in a glass; and we see them in connection with the parting scene. That room may have crumbled [illegible] hammer, or the saw; its furniture may [illegible] or destroyed. But for us all things [illegible] they were. Not a chair has been [illegible] a fold of a curtain may have been rumpled [illegible] upon the bed [illegible] for prayer, the faithful page thrust [illegible] by the pillow, the [illegible] ing eye, nurse so dear! Thus, indeed, affection makes the dear faces always present to us; and instead of their looks being effaced, we forget our own.

SATURDAY, MAY 20, 1854.

To Correspondents.—Our columns are under rather a heavy pressure at the present time with General Conference Proceedings. Several communications on this account are necessarily laid over. We are made correct by the same rule. The doings of the Conference are of more interest to our readers just now, than anything else. All shall have a place after awhile.

We'd little longer.—We hope there is a better time coming. We speak of the mails. Continued complaints reach us from agents and subscribers respecting irregularities and failures. If we were at the head of [illegible] we would correct these things or should be [illegible]

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Columbus, Ga., May 11, 1854.

Dear Brother—If you have received the published proceedings of the General Conference as sent, there is little use of my correspondence, in order to keep the readers of the Advocate advised of its doings. But I may advise of out-door proceedings and some talk and speculations that do not go to record; and these are not always insignificant.

Bishop Andrew arrived Tuesday. His detention was caused by sickness in family. Bishop Soule is absent from Conference-room to-day on account of feeble health. The Bishops, informally, have given opinion that at least three effective men should be added to the Episcopacy. They are of course very conservative on this subject, and when they say "at least three," others may take the figure of five or six. The matter is still, by reference to the committee. Bishop Soule is 74 years old, and 30 years in office; Bishop Andrew 58 years old, and 22 years in office; Bishop Capers 64, and Bishop Paine 54 years old, and each 8 years in office. Episcopal [illegible] may be discussed, with some [illegible] hardly adopted.

The [illegible] on the Book Concern was disposed of yesterday, by referring the Compromise Resolutions introduced by Dr. W. A. Smith, to committee. This discussion had waxed warm. It elicited many speeches, which were marked with the most refreshing Christian courtesy on either side. Much of the speaking, however, was wide of the mark: a [illegible] printer, with paper-cap on head, and inked to the elbows, could have knocked most of the arguments into pi. So men will always speak on a foreign subject.

I may be excused at this distance and in this humble [illegible] for not only dissenting from the general style of argumentation, but demurring to the position assigned this subject in the deliberations of the Conference. It has taken precedence. The first attention of the body and its vigorous strength have been laid out on it. And what is its nature? Purely secular and political. More than one eminent debater has called it "the question of this General Conference"—"the most important that can come before it," &c. It seems to me of lower importance and lower propriety in an ecclesiastical assembly than many others. I saw in hands of a member the other day a resolution that will likely be offered (removing the expulsion penalty from class-meetings); it covered [illegible] small space on paper—makes no noise on the streets; but its discussion would better suit the character of this assembly, and its settlement be vastly more important to spiritual welfare. So it is: money is the root of all sorts of evils in the Church. We get hold of a little, and let go of everything else to invest it to profit. How would it have looked or sounded in the synods and councils of the first Christian centuries, wherein infant baptism, creeds and the conditions of membership and such like subjects were considered, if the venerable fathers had laid themselves out on a subject like this, engaging on its superior importance! Settling per cent. questions; the price of flour and bacon in the west; revamping [illegible] of publishing economy; the profit of paper-making, and manufactures in the East; the independent independence of the South against the North. [illegible] more in these than obscurations will allow. But [illegible] strike me as out of line.

It is at least of incidental importance; and as it devolved upon this spiritual body to dispose of this secular question somehow or other, perhaps it was well done. The debate [illegible] by a misapprehension be[illegible] Compromise was unanimously and cordially accepted. The location will be somewhere in the valley of the Mississippi, as the East and extreme South put in no urgent claims. A few places in the West are prepared to offer a considerable bonus.

Last Sabbath was a day of large spiritual privilege. In the morning, Dr. [illegible] preached at the Methodist church a [illegible] ing and eloquent sermon; after which the holy communion was administered to a large body of ministers and [illegible] time of intense joy and [illegible]. At the Baptist and Presbyterian churches religious services were held by our ministry, not for getting the negro church, which has several hundred members and a large congregation. The committee appointments had more applications for this one than they could meet for the several services on Sabbath; so a week night of [illegible] has been devoted to the negro Church.

Among visitors who receive much attention is Dr. Taylor, one of our missionaries to China. Dr. T. is a pleasant-faced, good-headed, warm-hearted man, short of stature, not wanting in flesh, and younger than I looked for. He will spring the Church, from his centre of influence, to generous devisings and doings for his great cause.

There are those who think seriously of another name for us than the M. E. Church, South. The present one is regarded as too local for an organization claiming universal adaptation. They would eschew geography in the nomenclature of a Church that desires to preach the Gospel in all the earth. Among the substitutes proposed are—Episcopal Methodist Church; Methodist Episcopal Church, in America. This is all out of doors as yet, and may not get in.

Looking upon this representative assembly of our traveling ministry—considering their talents and high and practical order of education, their Christian spirit as evidenced in their associations and debates, their conservative yet sufficiently liberal views, their love of Methodism, their industry, hopefulness and ability—I am most agreeably and gratefully impressed with the condition and prospects of our Zion. God will bless us, and that right early, God has blessed us already.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Sixth Day—May 6.

Conference met at 9 o'clock, Bishop Soule in the chair; and was opened with divine service by Dr. Early.

Bishop Paine took the chair, and after the reading of the journal, called for reports from standing committees.

Dr. Hamilton, chairman of the committee on Revisals, made a report in part.

A motion was made to recommit the report with instructions to the committee to report at once the unfinished business of the last General Conference, as found upon the journal. Pending the discussion, the hour for regular business having arrived, the motion lies over.

The order of the day was taken up, and Mr. McAnally being entitled to the floor, yielded it to Dr. Winans, who proceeded to express his gratification for the courtesy thus extended to him, which he would not have accepted but for the apprehension that his precarious health might not allow him the opportunity to express his views on this subject hereafter.

He was Southern in his views, feelings and interests, fully so; but on this question, his feelings and interests were not local in their character—they were all for the Church, and the Church only. He claimed nothing for himself on account of age, Southern position, or anything else. He only insisted to be heard for his cause. He took the position that the South was too rich, its soil too fertile, its climate too genial, to allow of book-making competing successfully with a poorer country and a poorer population. He took ground directly opposite to that of Messrs. Ralston and Green; we were not dependent on the North; we fed them, and afforded the capital which called out their labor. Laborers could not be employed here as cheaply as in the North. There, they labored for a mere support, here they would not do so. This met the argument drawn from the fact that books must be paid for. The operations of labor were carried on more cheaply than in the South, which would of course lessen the aggregate cost, inasmuch as those who were compelled to labor for a mere subsistence would labor cheaper than those where avenues of trade, profit and speculation were numerous. Dr. Early, he said, had proved that the capital invested in book-making in the New York Methodist Book Concern had yielded only three per cent. per annum, and Southern capitalists would not, and ought not, to invest at such rates. He alluded to Dr. Green's argument on house building, and showed in what respects he considered it as fallacious. He maintained that a printing house was not necessary to develop Southern intellect or scarcely an encouragement. Some of the largest publications of Methodists had been issued from houses not connected with the Church—as, for instance, the works of Olin and Durbin. He expected to be an author himself perhaps; if he should be, he expected to publish where he thought the publication would be most useful and profitable. So would any one else, and Dr. Green himself was too good a financier not to do it. He thought that a book concern was highly important so far as the unity of the connection was concerned, but not a printing house. A centre of union could be found at our mission rooms, or the place of the annual meeting of the Bishops. He repudiated the idea that Southern people would spurn books simply because they were made in the North. Methodists were not so stultified. The matter he believed was gotten up for effect, not perhaps by the speakers who had preceded him, but by some one. The Southern people were not so easily gulled as to reject books published by an Agent of the South, merely because such books were printed elsewhere than in the South. The whole question resolved itself into one of economy, where could we get books cheapest, and be able to procure most of them? This was the question. Though we may have had a million of members, and three millions of adherents, still our field was a restricted one. We would not publish all sorts of books, nor even the most saleable books; hence we should have to compete with publishers less restricted in character and amount of books; consequently they could publish for less than we. Such publishers having a wider field, and more extensive sale, could publish particular books cheaper than we.

Our borders might not remain where they now are, and a location very suitable at the present, might, in future, subject us to such evils as had been witnessed since 1844; and he was decidedly opposed to establishing, against economy, and without more certainty of permanency than was offered at present, a concern so important.

Dr. McFerrin took the floor, and stated that he did not often enter the discussion of a grave question of this character, but would speak to some points made by Dr. Winans. What did Dr. Winans mean by disavowing all local interest? Did he mean to implicate others? For himself, he would like to see a large publishing house somewhere in the South, and Drs. Winans and Green the agents. The position that the South was too rich to manufacture, was the latest news. New York has more vested and actual capital, than any five cities of the South. If some people at the South were too rich to work, others were not, as the skinned pine trees, tar and turpentine barrels of the South would prove. We have people willing and anxious to work, who would work cheaply. In Tennessee and Georgia factories, there were more applicants than places. We could obtain labor at lower rates than were given at Lowell, because the means of living were cheaper at the West than at the East. He here referred to several articles of food, and showed that they were cheaper at the West than at the East. The argument of Dr. Winans, as to the cost of living, proved too much. As it cost less to live at the West than at the East, operatives could afford to live cheaper there. He understood Dr. Winans to say, that an investment in brick and mortar, at the South, would be bad policy. Dr. Green attempted to show that the increase in the value of property would justify such an investment. He could show that if the General Conference of 1846 had invested twenty thousand dollars in real estate, the increase in value up to date would have enabled us now to build all the houses necessary for the book concern. If the New York Book Concern has yielded only three per cent., it had been very badly managed. The reason why the Methodist Book Concern had not published for all the Methodist writers, was, that there was a rule governing them, which required them to publish no book unless they could acquire control of the manuscript. The policy was a bad one, but such was the rule.

Dr. Early stated that the speaker was mistaken in this, as it was known that now that concern published for others.

The speaker admitted the correction, and was glad of it, as it would infuse new life into the business there. But this was destructive to the argument of Dr. W. Some rather playful remarks here passed between the speaker and several members, in which the speaker suffered nothing. The works of Drs. Durbin, Olin, etc., were published by others than the New York Book Concern, because the rule already referred to was then in existence, whatever may be the case now. Dr. W. had stated that it was a bugbear that Southern people would not buy books unless made in the South. Dr. Mc. thought otherwise. There were hundreds of people who would not buy books as cheerfully from us as if they were made at home. He encouraged home manufactures, because they were the best. The question of economy was irrelevant, as the feeling was such that people in the South would buy home manufactures even at higher prices; but home manufactures were not dearer than Northern; instance the article of paper. Tennessee paper was cheaper than paper of equal quality in New York or Boston. The West sent paper to the East, and, after paying freight and insurance, made a handsome profit. But what were the facts? House-rent, fuel, breadstuffs, clothing, &c., were cheaper in the West than in the East; and why could we not manufacture cheaper in the South than the North? We have all the facilities, and ought to avail ourselves of them. The West was to be the great centre of the commercial operations of this country. It was cheaper to do the work ourselves than to do it by contract. The argument for hiring ran through all printing operations, and would apply to our weekly papers; and if the principle were correct, presses for weekly papers ought to be sold, and the work hired out. Rather than this, let the power now at our command be extended so as to embrace all we need as occasion might require. This was his doctrine. He had been too long in the service of the Church to have local prejudices now. Let the Church go forward in this matter, and, if at the end of a given number of years it proved to be unsuccessful, we could sell at an advance. While he believed it could be done cheaper and better at the South than at the North, he would not vote for publishing elsewhere than at home. We had been mistaken already in some hired work, and might be again. He argued that hired work was rarely ever so good as that done by one's self. He referred to several books published at the South, by private enterprise, because there was no Methodist Book Concern to publish them. The speaker then closed by stating that if a majority of the Conference decided against him, he would submit with the best grace he could command. Locate the Book Concern anywhere, and he was for it. Our money would be safer in every sense of the word. Do not, he insisted, risk the capital in anything else than real estate and fixtures. He would only add, that he believed before the close of May a Book Concern would be located.

After some remarks by Drs. Early, Lee, and Pierce, the further consideration of this subject was suspended until Monday at 10 o'clock.

A call for petitions and memorials was resumed. Several were offered and referred; after which the Conference adjourned.

Seventh Day—May 8.

Conference met at 9 o'clock, and was opened by Bishop Capers.

The journal of Saturday was read.

Reports of standing committees were called for; several received and laid on the table by the rule.

A number of petitions and memorials were offered and referred.

The order of the day was then taken up, Bishop Capers in the chair.

Mr. McAnally had the floor. After some preliminary observations he took up the subject proper. He said—

What is the question? What can we do? That was not the question. It is what we ought to do, not in the future, but at the present. A large number of this body admit that a publishing house ought ultimately to be erected; but the question narrowed down, is aught we to do it now? This ought to be considered in its relations; he was not much of an abstractionist, but in all such questions he must look at all the connections of this subject. Much has been said in reference to the demand for books in the South. His observation for the past few years had satisfied him that never a period in the history of the Methodist Church in the Southern country had occurred when there existed such a demand for a Church literature. How is this demand to be met most readily, promptly, and cheaply? He did not want a book concern nor depositories. What is our true interest? He dwelt upon the importance of individual responsibility. Much has been said about three hundred thousand dollars that could be applied to meet the demand for books. He wished to know precisely how the case stood. He asked Dr. Early how much cash he had in hand as the result of the settlement with the North.

Dr. Early replied that it was in cash $70,051, and in available funds, that might easily be cashed.

Mr. McAnelly resumed: In view of the demand for books, where shall we get them? In New York? No sir. We are not shut up to that. We must get the supply from the point affording most facilities for distribution. There are rules in political economy governing the subject of distribution, as important as any other. Wherever is the centre of commerce, there the Book Concern should be located. It should be in the midst of manufacturing facilities where an abundance of artizans could be found, machinery could be repaired easily, etc. He could make a showing by which it would appear that we at the South could make books as cheaply as in New York; without investing a dollar, we could publish what is wanting. He wished that the experience of the next four years might determine where the centre of trade, and the most available point for establishing such a publishing house. After enlarging on this point, he concluded.

Dr. Lee, of Virginia, considered the importance of the question at issue, to the Church of the present day, and of the future. Two plans of operation are presented for consideration; a book concern, and a book agency. The one proposes a local establishment, with all the implements and fixtures necessary for the printing and binding of books. The other excludes all these, and proposes instead of an establishment, a man, who is to contract for these things here and there; and then transport them, by whatever route he may, and whatever cost he can, to the place of sale. The one gives the Church a great centre of operations, the other deprives us of a central source of interest and power, generalizes the whole system, and weakens it, in proportion as it is diffused. We are to decide between them. We compare them, and set the one over against the other.

The speaker then took up the argument of Dr. Winans, replying to it at length. He then considered the merits respectively of an Agency and of a Book Concern.

1st. As to an Agency.—This, I think, will be the more expensive mode of procuring and supplying the Church with books.

2d. The agency is additionally expensive to an amount equal to the whole cost of transportation from the place of printing to the place of sale.

3d. The agency is additionally expensive to the full amount of the difference between the prices of composition and press work when done by ourselves, and when contracted for with others.

These several positions were ably set forth and argued, with an elaborate collection of facts and figures.

2d. As to the Book Concern.—I shall attempt to show that for economy of management, cheapness of books, and whatever else in this direction, or from this source, tends to the growth and grandeur of Methodism will be found related to, if not identical with a Book Concern proper. On this subject, up to this date of the discussion, Dr. Early is the only occupant of the field in controversy who comes professing to be armed with "facts and figures." I propose, with all respect, but with entire confidence in the rectitude of my positions, to meet him on his own chosen ground. This is the Waterloo of the controversy.

1st. As to his "Facts."—An analysis of his facts compress the five following: First—"All publishers are not printers." A fact, but not an argument against the Book Concern. The fact may be owing to the want of capital. It is not because of anything antagonistical in the combination. It is not because the combination is not profitable, and a source of fortune. Second: Many publishers have failed in business. A fact, but not an argument. The combination was not the cause of failure—mismanagement—trading beyond their capital, etc., may have caused failures. Third: "Publishers owning printing establishments often hire their printing." A fact that only shows they sometimes have more work than they can do themselves; and under the pressure of an exigency they employ others. As an argument it proves the sound policy and wisdom of the doctrine, that publishers ought to do their own printing. Fourth: "The American Sunday School Union sells him books cheaper than he can print them; unless he had their facilities." A fact, but not an argument against a Book Concern. Their facilities are voluntary contributions. They are the almoners of a large Christian benevolence. Their capital is Christian charity. They but fulfill their agency of charity when they make him, or others its recipients. Fifth: "The Northern Book Concern has not made more than three per cent. per annum, on its capital." A fact, and a very singular one. But it is a reflection on their management rather than an argument against our engaging in the enterprise. They had a large market and the monopoly of its trade; abundant capital, numerous agents, and ever increasing facilities. The failure cannot be justly ascribed to the system, but to its management. Its policy has been to save, not to multiply its capital.

So much for the facts presented by Dr. Early. They are numerous enough, but unfortunately they are defective in application. They do not disprove the affirmation of the resolution under discussion. They establish nothing against the doctrine it maintains. They rather support the policy of establishing a Book Concern.

2d. As to his "Figures."—There are not many of these, but they are large; and are intended to be appalling. Let us examine them. First: The buildings. These are put down at $40,000. More might be spent on them. The cost will depend on their size and style. Suitable buildings may be purchased or erected for a great deal less. Two rooms twenty feet square will serve for all the purposes of stereotyping for the next twenty years, perhaps for the next fifty, and $600 or $700 will furnish them with everything necessary for that department of labor. A room fifty feet long and twenty feet wide will be ample for all the purposes of type setting. And one of the same size will be sufficient for all the presses we may need for some years to come; and one sixteen feet square will be enough for an engine; more space will be required for sheet and bound stock, and for the purposes of trade. But all might be procured for a less sum than $40,000. But even if it went beyond this, a small addition to the price of books, two or three cents on a volume, would pay for them in a few years. The saving in the expense of transportation would soon pay for them. Besides, the increased value of real estate would ultimately equalize, perhaps surpass the original cost and interest. Second: The fixtures. These are put down at $40,000. This is a very large estimate. Comparatively small quantities of type are needed where stereotyping is done. A few presses can do a vast deal of work. Third: The amount of "interest." This is put down at six per cent. on $80,000. The amount of interest will depend on the cost of the establishment. We can settle one when we know the other. It need not frighten us. The traveling expenses of an agent and editor will pay a part, and the saving on transportation will do the rest, and leave a large balance. Fourth: Amount of "insurance." This is put down at $2000. It will be amply covered by the saving in transportation.

He closed by a sketch of the New York Book Concern, which in fifty years had made $900,000, besides what is paid to the Annual Conferences in dividends; and of Harper's establishment, in which he showed that, in thirty-five years, it had made wealth enough to lose $1,200,000 by fire without stopping their business, or divesting them of capital enough to carry it on, on as large a scale as ever.

Eighth Day—May 9.

Conference met at 9 o'clock, Bishop Soule in the chair.

The journal of the preceding day was read and approved. Bishop Paine took the chair and called for reports from standing committees.

Mr. Evans, from the special committee on the memorial of G. L. L. Davis, Esq., submitted the facts in the case, and reported the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Dr. Wm. A. Smith be, and he is hereby empowered and instructed to settle the question of claim presented by Mr. Davis, in the following manner:

1st. To have an interview with Mr. Davis, examine the evidence to which he alluded, and do him full justice, as the facts may determine.

2d. If they cannot agree and settle the dispute themselves, then Dr. Smith is authorized to take such measures for its settlement as he may deem most expedient.

Resolved, That Dr. Smith is hereby authorized to draw upon the book agent for the amount (if any) fixed upon in the settlement.

The order of the day was taken up, and Mr. Keener took the floor, and proceeded to remark that he spoke with so much trepidation before the Conference, that he should esteem it a special favor not to be interrupted. It was, as he thought, by a full and free interchange of opinion from every part of the country, that wise measures were most likely to be adopted. In matters of this kind we might be confused by figures as well as by general statements. He never knew a sanguine man who could not figure up a fortune; but such figuring might mislead us. He reviewed the positions of Dr. Green, in reference to house-making; thought his conclusions did not legitimately follow; maintained that while ever one pursuit would occupy the capital, it were better not to multiply the business, as division of labor referred to both capital and mind. Dr. Lee's argument in reference to money being made by Northern printers, which we ought to make, he thought incorrect, as the transportation of products add value to the product. He illustrated by reference to producing, transporting, manufacturing and selling cotton, in which England and America were both engaged. The one party in this case was not "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to the other. Because there were certain places where men could live cheaply, it did not follow that books could be made cheaply there. He knew of places where oysters could be bought for a dime a bushel, and fish thrown on the land for manure; men could live cheaply there, but there was, he thought, a difference between catching oysters and fish, and printing books. The argument drawn by Dr. Lee, from the success of the New York Concern, did not hold, because of the difference between New York as a city, and these places where it was proposed to build a concern in the South. He referred to the great fact, that with all our love of gain, as a people in the South, no large book-making establishment had up to this day been erected among us; and he wanted it distinctly understood that such an establishment among us would be an experiment, and he wanted the word experiment underscored. He referred to sundry factories in the neighborhood of Columbus, and showed that while some had succeeded, others had failed, and one, in five years, had sunk just one hundred thousand dollars. From all this, he would only say that there was much risk; it was an experiment, and a dangerous one. We wanted to do business as well as anybody else, make as good books in every sense of the word, because we had to contend with, and to the same extent, displace other publications, many of them of highly finished character. The Southernism which had been thrown into this question, was out of place.

Dr. Lee explained.

The speaker continued: he wanted a publishing house, but not a printing house; wherever the work could be done cheapest, there let it be done. It mattered little where or how money be expended, so that it yielded a profit. Whatever, in matters of this kind, was the interest of one, was the interest of all. Commercial tides laughed at theories; they could not be ruled by conventions or resolutions. There was a love of gain in the American character that would lead them soon to see into every plan which would be likely to enrich them. They had not tried this plan in the South, which they would have done had it been profitable. It was now unfashionable to commit suicide out of spite. Southernism was not to object to a book simply because it was made in the North. Our business was not to guard the manufactures, but the literature, the Christianity of the South. We wanted large sales and small profits. All our capital should be employed in the book trade proper. The success climbed for a printing establishment was not equal to the success which, up to the present, had attended our publishing system. He hoped the subject would be considered calmly; the demands upon us were great and growing, and ought to be met; and then closed with a general view of the whole subject.

Mr. McMahon took the floor, and remarked that one of the first things thought of, when it was apparent that division must come in 1844, was that of a Southern Book Concern proper. He was glad that the speeches of 1844 had been published, as they set forth the opinions then prevailing. Next, at the Louisville Convention, the question was considered. Then, at Petersburg, for seven days it was discussed, and the prevailing sentiment was for a Book Concern proper; but we adopted the Depository system only because of the want of means. Then, at St. Louis, this subject was prominent until the ghost of the cholera scared them off. He was sorry they scampered off as they did; but it was so; but when they left, it was with a feeling in favor of a Book Concern. Now we had run a ten years' race on the question—two years longer than our fathers followed Washington in the revolution; and he hoped we would go forward. He referred to Dr. Winan's speech in General Conference of 1844, as a great one, but he thought he fell short of himself in his speech on this question; it was the question which beat him. In 1844 there was a settled feeling to divide the Church, irrespective of the question which was made the occasion to divide it on a question of policy; it was too unwieldly, but he had not expected to find a division of opinion at this Conference on this subject. The wants of the Church, public interests and feeling, required a Book Concern in the South. The people of the South were not easily gulled; spiritual rappingism, and kindred follies, did not find favor in the South. He had outlived fourteen generations of heretics. The South wanted a Book Concern, and ought to have it. It might be an experiment, but so was almost everything else at some time or other. A Book Concern would be a strong bond of union among us. He spoke of the extent of population and prospects of the Mississippi valley, as a reason which called for such an establishment. All the people of the South were with us. Our funds should not be expatriated, nor the public expectation disappointed. He bought Southern fabrics, but had no quarrel with the North; he loved the brethren there, none to hurt, perhaps, but he did love them, still he wanted us to act for ourselves. If it were not fashionable to publish books in the South, we would make it fashionable, and after a characteristic and refreshing speech, closed by thanking the chair and conference for the indulgence given him.

Dr. Parsons obtained the floor, and stated that just at this stage of the proceedings he would respectfully offer a few remarks. He regretted many things which had been brought into this debate. To his mind the question presented a great moral phase, besides involving a question of mere finance. He would state a proposition, to wit: we cannot, consistently, with our obligations to the Church, decline to establish a Book Concern. He believed we were the only fair representatives of Wesleyan Methodism to be found on this side of the water. Methodism had given an example to the world on this subject. Every other Christian community were seeking to adopt the same principle. He had no sympathy with any plan that proposed anything else than a Book Concern proper. Leave this out, and Methodism in its true character was wounded. The position of the South, in reference to other Christian communities, required that we send forth literature, not from the North, but from our own centre. He was proud that such was our position. Our Church relations also required this course. Beyond our own boundaries we had but little sympathy. The sentence of non-fraternization was still resting upon us from certain quarters, and while he could be courteous and kind to others, he would go no further, but would stand upon the principle which the Church originally assumed. He would allude to another point, public opinion; and if every other consideration were adverse to a Book Concern, this alone would be sufficient reason for him to act. The will of the people was the substratum on which we stood politically and ecclesiastically. He knew both North and South, and gloried that he did know the South. The feeling of the people on this subject ought not to be regarded as prejudice. Was it prejudice that woke our fathers to the work of revolution? No, it was principle, not prejudice. So in the present case. Had our fathers not done as they did, they would have been helots. The cases are analagous. If the United States were to propose to establish its exchequer in London, opposition to the measure would not be prejudice, but principle; and as on his coin he wanted the impress of the eagle, so on our books he wanted a Southern impress. He liked the doctrine, that the South should do all its own work in every respect; and if we did not establish a Book Concern, we would, in his judgment, be unfaithful to our trust. The speaker then closed with the expression of a hope that a Book Concern would be at once established.

Dr. L. Pierce took the floor and remarked that he feared much time would be consumed in discussing a question which must necessarily come before the Conference by the report of the Book Committee. He suggested whether it would not be best to bring the question to a vote as soon as possible, and let the details come on as soon as possible, as the difficulty would be with the details rather than the general question. He hoped, therefore, the question before the Conference would soon be settled, that we might proceed to the details.

Mr. Dorman then addressed the Conference. He appreciated the views of Dr. Pierce, but was not ready for the vote. He had been born and reared in the South; hoped to die, and be buried in the South. He had noticed that those who had least early affinities for the South, were often most apt to run off into what others regard as ultraism. The views of Dr. Parsons, he said, would attach to a publishing house as much as to a printing establishment. The South had been arrayed against the North unnecessarily. The practice of those who did this did not correspond with their theory, they bought where they could buy cheapest.

Much of the printing which had been done for us had been done in the South, and might be. We were, under no necessity of going to the North, and the constant influence to the North by speakers was out of place. Our success, under the present system, had been equal to that of any publishing house, and greater. He had figures, and would present a few.

Fifty thousand dollars was the least that would be likely to be appropriated. Interest and insurance on this must be put into consideration, while to clear the house of incidental expenses, would require at least five per cent. Fewer employees would be necessary, and the estimate of the agent would show a large balance in favor of publishing rather than a printing house. This was not a question about which to feel sectional feeling, and he hoped there would be no more of it. Our market was not to be confined to our own territory, and to be [illegible] a peculiar character. He would vote for a publishing house, rather than a printing establishment, because of its greater cheapness.

As to the will of the people, he regarded it, but believed it variant. Some were on this side, some on the other. The people did not seek to instruct us on subjects of this character, and would be satisfied with our decision.

Dr. W. A. Smith rose to suggest that the Conference now come to a vote; each one wished to cut off debate, but thought a little light could be given.

Dr. Early hoped that the question would not be taken until he had an opportunity to set himself right in reference to statements which had been made by speakers regarding the views which he had expressed at an early period in this discussion.

Dr. Smith did not urge the suggestion.

And, on motion of Dr. Henkle, Conference adjourned.

Ninth Day—May 10.

Conference met at the usual hour, and was opened with divine service by Bishop Andrew.

Bishop Andrew then took the chair, and after the reading of the journal of yesterday made a statement of the causes which led to his detention.

After the disposal of reports, petitions, memorials, the Bishop introduced to the Conference the Rev. Dr. Schon, Missionary Secretary, Dr. Taylor, from China, and Mr. Stiles, who, on motion, were requested to take seats within the bar.

The order of the day was then taken up. Dr. Henkle being entitled to the floor, spoke at length in favor of a Concern.

He intended all his remarks to be of a suggestive character; had tried hard to avoid speaking, but felt it a duty. Explained the operation of stereotyping; maintained that all that was necessary for an outfit for stereotyping was one thousand dollars, at farthest. The most important and expensive material used in book-making, is paper. Could it be had in the South? Rags were cheaper in the South than in the North, or East; consequently, he maintained that paper could be made at least thirty per cent. cheaper in the South. Cost of living was cheaper, and underworkmen could be had at less price. The poor people of the South were so separated, that the girls of the poor could only work in factories. He thought that the distance between the rich and the poor was greater in the South than at the North. In the former the rich were richer, the poor poorer.

He wanted no speculation, no vague theories, but facts; and facts alone, he had given them, but would not present the half of what was on hand. He thought that reference to public opinion was not improper. Publishing houses had not been established in the South, because individuals could not do it, but we could, as we had both the capital and the patronage. Let us do it, and others would follow. He thought we were bound to do this. Not on a large scale, but go at once immediately. He thought that we would be supported, in this measure, beyond what had ever been known in similar matters. He referred to the New York Book Concern. He thought we could do even better than they had done, and concluded by expressing the hope that the resolution would prevail.

Mr. Dibrill next obtained the floor. He expressed himself rather unfavorably towards the Concern. He hoped the matter would be acted on calmly, and cautiously considered.

Dr. W. A. Smith stated that he had thought of offering a substitute, but supposed it would be unnecessary now. The substitute was asked for by several members and was read by him, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Book and Periodicals be and they are hereby instructed to report a judicious system for the early commencement and ultimate permanent establishment of a Book Concern proper for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

1. The Book Concern shall consist of a publishing house at ———.

2. Of a manufacturing establishment or Books in connection with said house.

3. Of an agent or agents to whom shall be committed, under the advice and approbation of a Book Committee appointed by the General Conference, the control of the funds of the Church, known as the Book fund, and the conduct of the business for the next four years.

4. The agent or agents shall be required by law to provide, by and with the advice and approbation of said committee, in buildings and other fixtures and materials, for publishing and manufacturing all the books, etc., necessary to meet the demands of the Southern people on strictly business principles, that is,

1st. Such books, as from the accidents of their publication, can be published as cheaply in the city of their location as elsewhere. The Agents shall manufacture at their own establishment.

2d. Such books, as from the accidents of their publication, can be published cheaper at some other manufactory of the country, shall be published by contract at such manufactory.

This substitute, after having been explained by Dr. Smith, was agreed to as an amendment by the movers of the original resolution, and after some discussion by Drs. Lee, Winans, Doggett and others, Dr. Summers called out an expression of opinion from the various points which he feared might suffer from the effect of sectional rivalries. This was highly satisfactory. The vote was then taken, and the resolution unanimously adopted.

Conference adjourned with the benediction by Bishop Andrew.

FRANKLIN, La., May 9, 1854.

Through your excellent sheet permit me to say that God has very graciously and powerfully revived his work at another appointment (Pattersonville). On the Franklin and Pattersonville Circuit, Louisiana Conference, we have just closed a meeting, which was continued fifteen days. I believe I never witnessed a season of greater profit in my life in proportion to the population. Many heads of families, men and women advanced in life, as well as young people, were the subjects of this work. Sixty-three, in addition to the twelve previously reported, joined the Church during the meeting, and more than forty professed Religion. Many persons of wealth and influence, mind and enterprise, have consecrated themselves to God during this wonderful religious movement. And I trust the end is not yet. N. A. CRAVENS.

HYMENEAL:

MARRIED—On Tuesday, May 9th, by the Rev. W. H. Crenshaw, at the residence of Mr. Wm. Matthowe, in Pointe Coupee parish, Rev. H. A. MORSE, of the Louisiana Conference, to Miss MALVINA J. MATTHEWS.

On the 9th inst., by Rev. R. M. Saunders, Mr. DEMOSTHENES R. HAYLEY, of Auburn, Ala., to Miss SARAH A. F. BASS, daughter of Lewie Bass, Esq., of Troup county, Ga.

OBITUARY:

DIED—In this city, Sunday, May 7th, in the 23d year of his age, THOMAS F. JONES.

Brother Jones was a native of North Alabama. He was a graduate of Centenary College, Louisiana.

It has rarely fallen to our lot to record a more regretted death. Brother Jones was a young man of more than common mental gifts, of generous ambition and untiring application. He had just entered upon the practice of the law in the courts of this city, with the most encouraging prospects of a successful and brilliant career. His acknowledged ability—his devotion to his profession, combined with the gracious affability of his manners, could not have failed to win for him a most honorable and enviable position. His residence in our midst had only been for a few months, yet he had won many most excellent friends; for to know Brother Jones, was sympathy with esteeming and loving him.

But the best of all, Brother Jones, as a Christian, was a bright and shining light. Truly he adorned, by "the beauty of holiness," the doctrine of God our Saviour. For one of his age, his attainments in Christian experience were most mature and satisfactory. He was ever punctual in his attendance upon the means of grace; his seat was rarely vacant at Church, Class-meeting, Sabbath School, or his Bible-class. I scarce need to add, that he died with an unclouded hope of glorious immortality.

His death will be a sad blow to his widowed mother and other loved ones; but they sorrow not even as others which have no hope," for as he "sleeps in Jesus" he sleeps well.

As he died away from all connected with him by kindred ties, it may be a consolation for them to know that all was done for him that the best skill and the kindest attention could do, to alleviate his sufferings and restore him to health. He died of that most fatal disease, typhoid fever. A numerous company in the funeral solemnities paid the last sad respects they could to his memory. May they our last end be like his.

J. B. WALKER, his Pastor.

General Intelligence.

MEMPHIS AND OHIO RAILROAD.—At a meeting of the Directors of the Memphis and Ohio Railroad, at Memphis on the 20th of April, it was determined to make contracts for the construction and equipment of the road twenty-six miles eastwardly of Memphis. A proposition is now under consideration for the equipment of the first 30 miles, by the first of May, 1855; a second section of 20 miles, by the first of October, 1855; and a third section, to the junction of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, (about 35 miles,) by the first of May, 1856.

THE CALORIC SHIP.—Capt. Ericsson writes to the New York Evening Post that on the late trial of the caloric ship, and previously to her being down, the motive power had proved completely successful. The engine, he says, had not been put to anything like maximum work, and yet she attained a speed of more than seven miles an hour, with a consumption of fuel which promises to render ocean navigation, in point of economy, what it has already proved in point of celerity.

THE DRAIN OF POPULATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.—The discovery of gold at the Cape of Good Hope will probably lead to another heavy drain on the laboring population of England, already greatly thinned by the exodus to this country and to Australia. The war will also contribute to diminish its numbers, so that, with all these causes at work, we should not be surprised if, in the course of a few years, the scarcity of hands were severely felt in all branches of her commercial and agricultural operations.

BELLIGERENT.—The Cunard steamship Africa, which arrived at New York on the 5th, was heavily armed, with port holes opened, ready for attack from the Russians. During the present "state of war," passengers on the Atlantic ferry will find themselves safest under the American flag.

A volume of new poetry from the pen of the Rev. Charles Kingsley, author of "Alton Locke," will be shortly published in London.

The small pox is raging violently at Jacksonville, Fla.

SENSIBLE LAW.—The following has been passed by the Massachusetts Legislature, with view to the preservation of public health: If any person shall kill, for the purpose of sale, any calf less than four weeks old, or shall knowingly sell the meat of any calf killed when less than four weeks old, such persons shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $200."

SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH TO EUROPE.—At the late meeting of the American Scientific Association, in Washington, Lieut. Maury, in referring to the deep sea soundings obtained by Lieut. Berrymau, U. S. N., appeared to give the presence to a higher Northern latitude for the purpose of a submarine telegraph. North of the banks of Newfoundland the depth is said not to exceed two miles, while to the Southward and Eastward of these banks bottom is not reached under five thousand fathome, or nearly six miles.

NEW YORK NEWS BOYS.—The project, originating with some benevolent individuals, of providing a home for the ragged news boys in New York, seems to work very well. About forty-five voluntarily sought lodging (six cents a night) in the establishment when first opened by Mr. Tracy, the Superintendent, gave he could hardly get them quiet enough to sleep. They refused to luxuriate in the beds, and were constantly jumping out to shake one another, with "Hey! did yn nivir see a bed afore?" "What you call this?" etc. They were rather inclined at first to oversleep in the morning, until Mr. T. stirred them up to their business. One of the boys said he knew how to wake 'em up well, how?". "Just go in airly and tell 'em the steamer's in."

Later from Texas.

ANOTHER INDIAN MASSACRE—Six Men Killed and Scalped.—By the arrival of the steamship Charles Morgan, Captain J. Lawless, from Galveston, we are in receipt of later intelligence from Texas. An extra from the office of the San Antonio Western Texan, dated the 8th inst., gives the following account of another Indian massacre:

By one of our citizens, John Crawford, who just arrived in our city from Fort Ewell, we learn the following painful intelligence. On Tuesday last, May 2d, a Government Train, consisting of fourteen wagons and about one hundred mules, horses, etc., left Fort Ewell for El Paso, and had proceeded about five or eight miles from the Fort, when they were attacked by about twenty Indians who were well mounted, and armed with bows and arrows, knives, lances and two rifles. At the time of the attack, the wagon master, Mr. McIntosh, was a short distance from the train in pursuit of a horse and unarmed, and there was only one weapon of defence among the whole train, and that was an old rifle and unloaded. The Indians made a charge upon them and killed the wagon master and scalped him, and also killed five others, some few escaped and two are still missing; they are supposed to have been taken prisoners and are now with the Indians, and no doubt undergo the most horrible tortures. All the mules and horses connected with the train were taken, and the wagons destroyed completely with their contents, amounting in all to some twenty or thirty thousand dollars. One of the wounded men from whom our informant gathered the particulars of this horrible outrage, arrived in camp at 11 o'clock A. M., two hours after the massacre. The Lieutenant in command, notwithstanding he was at the time sick in bed, within one hour had four companies armed and equipped and in hot pursuit, and it is to be hoped that they will overtake these savages, and hold an inquest over their dead bodies.

How can they possibly escape with such a number of mules and so small a distance the start.

We now give warning to our citizens on the frontiers having families, to immediately leave their abodes, and come to our city where they may be protected, for there is no longer safety on our borders.

How much longer will our citizens continue in their quiet homes and see their fellow-beings slaughtered around them by these savages? Have they no longer any of the spirit of their forefathers?

Has there yet been no action taken in this matter by our State authorities? We say, and too, fearless of contradiction, it is a disgrace to the citizens of Western Texas, who are capable of bearing arms to have the news of such horrible massacres by these savages around us, go forth to the world!

Let a petition be circulated immediately calling upon the Governor for aid!

The Galveston News of the 12th says:

Nearly all our country exchanges, speak of having had the benefit of a late heavy rain, greatly improving the prospects of the crops which never looked better.

Most of our State papers give notice of the organization of Lodges, of the Lone Star Order, in many parts of Texas, and we are given to understand that very large numbers of the most respectable of our citizens are joining them From present indications this Order must soon become very numerous in the Lone Star State.

THE STEAMER CITY OF GLASGOW.—In an article on the missing steamer City of Glasgow, the N. Y. Courier expresses the conviction that she has foundered among the ice. The Courier thinks the Glasgow, with 447 souls on board, must have encountered the same field of ice with which the Collins steamer Baltic had on her outward passage so fearful a struggle about the 9th of March, in lat. 46, lon. 47. The editor says:

"The City of Glasgow sailed from Liverpool on the 1st of March. * * * On the evening of the 11th, a terrific gale commenced from W. S. W. to N. N. W., which lasted until late the next day. Nautical men on board the Baltic agreed that they had never seen a more violent gale, and express the conviction that no ship hemmied in by the ice could have outlived that storm. Making a fair calculation of time and distance, there can be little doubt that the City of Glasgow was in the vicinity of that ice field, and exposed to that gale. It is a belief in this state of facts which, with us, extinguishes hope. Strength, nor courage, nor skill, could avail anything in such a case. Those crushing mountains of ice would, when tossed by such a gale, grind to powder man's stoutest structure."

The number of icebergs seen from the deck of the Baltic on that voyage, was from nine to twelve hundred, varying in dimensions, to use the language employed by the captain of another ship "from the size of an omnibus to that of the Astor House."

A SAD STORY.—Referring to the executions for desertion at the camp of the Lower California filibusters, the San Francisco Sun says:

Arthur Morrison, one of the victims of whom we speak, had a young and fondly-attached wife and a child five years old in Illinois, the place of his birth. He had written to her to come out, and sent her the necessary means to do so; and about two months since this devoted woman left her home and friends with a heart buoyant with hope to meet the object of her love and loalty.

About one month ago she arrived with her child on our shores, and then for the first time learned that her husband had been enticed to join the filibusters. She immediately wrote to him informing him of her arrival, and begging him to come to her and abandon his unjustifiable enterprise. Morrison received this letter, and instantly set about fulfilling his duties as a man and a citizen, by abandoning the camp of the filibusters and starting for San Francisco.

But he "counted without his host," for Mr. Walker immediately dispatched a party in pursuit, which overtook Morrison near San Diego and compelled him to return with them. A second letter from his wife soon after reached him, and the unhappy man determined to leave Lower California and at all hazards return to his family, which needed his presence.

In order to effect this, Morrison entered into a combination with ten others to desert at the first opportunity. This determination was carried into execution with as little delay as possible; but again the omissaries of Mr Walker tracked the ill-fated refugee, and, making him a prisoner, returned with him to the camp. Then a court-martial was held; the self-constituted officers sat in judgment over their victim; the forms and ceremonies of a trial were gone through with, according to the most received rules for such cases made and provided; a verdict of guilty is brought in, sentence of death is unhesitatingly brought in by his superiors, and Morrison is shot like a dog in cold blood for obeying the first laws of God and man, and refusing any longer to do evil.

Tongue cannot tell or language depict the sufferings of that devoted wife and mother, who now stands on our cold homeless, friendless, cheerless, fur from the scenes of her birth and the friends of her existence, unknown to all around her, and her helpless orphan dependant on her for support.

THE PERILS OF THE DEEP.—The danger to which those are exposed who go down to the great deep in ships was illustrated at the anniversary of the American Seamen's Friend Society, held in New York, by the following passage in the annual report:

"Seventy ships, sixty-one barks, one hundred and seven brigs, two hundred and thirty-two schooners, and eleven steamers—in all, four hundred and eighty-one vessels—are reported as lost, most of them total wrecks. Of five ships, five barks, nine brigs, thirteen schooners, and one steamer, the record is, 'sailed at a certain date, and have not been heard of since.' In these wrecks nearly eight hundred and fifty lives are known to have been lost. There could not have been less than seven hundred on board the thirty-two missing vessels."

THINGS TO BE DESIRED.—A method to make truth as agreeable as falsehood; a recipe for praising a pretty girl without giving offence to her older sisters; some way of collecting a small debt without having to earn the money a second time in the attempt; "how to induce a "constant reader" of a newspaper to become a constant subscriber; a plan of editing a paper without being considered dull by the giddy, frivolous by the "serious minded," unappreciated by three-fourths, and cheated by the other quarter. Mem.—"When found, to make note of."

CONVENTION BETWEEN FRANCE AND ENGLAND.

Their Majesties, the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the Emperor of the French, having been compelled, in spite of sincere and persevering efforts for the maintenance of peace, to undertake an active part in a war which would otherwise have threatened the balance of Europe and the interests of their own dominions, have agreed upon and signed the following articles:

Art 1. The high contracting parties engage to do what depends upon them to bring about a re-establishment of peace between Russia and the Sublime Porte, on a solid and durable basis, and to guarantee Europe against the return of those lamentable complications which have just troubled so unfortunately the general peace.

Art. 2. The integrity of the Ottoman Empire being violated by the occupation of Moldavia and Wallachia, and other movements of the Russian troops, their Majesties of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Emperor of the French, will receive (accepteront) into their alliance, for the sake of co-operating in the proposed object, any of the other powers who may wish to join it.

Art. 3. Whatever event may ensue in consequence of the extension of the present convention, the high contracting powers oblige themselves not to accept any overture or proposition tending to a cessation of hostilities, and not to enter into any arrangement with the Imperial Court of Russia, without having previously deliberated upon it in common.

Art. 4. Animated by the desire of maintaining the equilibrium of Europe, and not pursuing any interested purpose, the high contracting powers renounce, in advance, any particular advantage from the events which may result.

Art. 5. Their Majesties, the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the Emperor of the French, have concerted, and will continue to concert upon the means most proper to free the territory of the Sultan from foreign invasion, and to attain the object specified in Article 1. They engage, for this effect, to supply, according to the necessities of the war, determined by a common agreement, land and sea forces sufficient to meet them; the quality, the number and the destination of which subsequent arrangements will determine.

Art. 6. The present convention will be ratified and the ratifications exchanged in London in the space of eight days.

In pledge of which the respective plenipotentiaries have signed it, and attached their seals of office.

IMPORTANT RUSSIAN MANIFESTOES

The Czar's Reply to the War Declaration of the Western Powers—The Occupation of the Principalities Defended.

The St. Petersburg Gazette of the 13th of April contains a declaration to the following effect:

"That after the summons by which England and France have left their system of disguised hostility toward Russia, and in presence of the pretension by which they demand the evacuation of the Danubian provinces without exacting any thing from the other belligerent power, silence was the only reply compatible with the dignity of the Emperor, and that it only remains for him to accept the situation that has been made him, and to defend himself with energy and determination.

"The imperial Government deems it, moreover, superfluous to renew a discussion relative to the motives alleged before parliament by the English Government to justify their taking up arms. It refers to its recent memorandum of the 18th of February, which suffices to demonstrate that the initiative of the provocations belongs to the two powers."

The declaration concludes by stating that the real motive of the war is to destroy the influence of Russia, and that the responsibility of the evils that may result therefrom must fall upon those who declare war, and not upon him who was compelled to accept it.

The following "Declaration" is contained in the St Petersburg Journal of the 31st of March (13th of April):

France and Great Britain have now at last undisguisedly departed from the system of concealed hostility which they had previously adopted against Russia, particularly by ordering their fleets to enter the Black Sea.

The tenor of the explanations given by those powers in reference to that proceeding was such that the cessation of the mutual relations existing between them and the Imperial Cabinet became a matter of course.

The latter result was shortly followed by a communication in which the two Cabinets, through the medium of their respective consuls, invited the Imperial Government to evacuate the Danubian Principalities within a given term, which England fixed at the 30th of April, and France still more peremptorily at the 15th of that month.

By what right did the two Powers thus pretend to exact everything from one of the two belligerent parties, without demanding anything from the other? This is what they have not thought fit to explain to the Imperial Cabinet. To evacuate the Principalities, without even the shadow of a fulfillment by the Ottoman Government of the conditions to which the Emperor made the cessation of that temporary occupation subordinate—to evacuate them from the fear of a war which the latter was the first to declare, while it is actively carrying on offensive operations, when its own troops occupy a fortified point of Russian territory—was in itself a condition inadmissible in substance. The two Powers placed the condition in such a shape that it became still more unacceptable. They fixed a term of six days for the adhesion of the Imperial Cabinet, at the expiration of which a refusal, or the absence of any reply whatever was to be by them regarded as equivalent to a declaration of war.

The summons so partial in its tenor, as practically inexcusable as it was insulting in its terms, silence was the only reply compatible with the dignity of the Emperor.

The consequence, however, is, that the two governments leave just publicly made it known that Russia, by her refusal to accede to their demand, has constituted herself towards them in a state of war, the entire responsibility of which will rest upon her.

In the presence of such declaration, it only remains for the Emperor to accept the position which has been assigned to him reserving to himself to employ all the means which Providence has placed in his hands to defend with energy and constancy the honor, the independence, and the security of his empire.

Independently of the message by which the Cabinet of London announces its resolution to the two houses of Parliament, it has in a supplementary declaration explained the motives which induce it to take up arms, and has recapitulated the origin and the incidents of the question. The Imperial Government thinks it superfluous to return to a discussion on this subject. All its preceding documents seem to it to have exhausted the question. The recent memorandum of the 18th of February, published on the occasion of the rupture of diplomatic relations, and which contains up to that point the whole historical exposition of the question, will have sufficed to demonstrate to whom—whether to Russia or to the two maritime Powers—belongs the initiative of the provocations, and by what fatal chain of circumstances the false position in which their first steps placed the two Cabinets, led them on, step by step, to take others still more provoking. Unprejudiced minds will have been able to discover there all the successions made by Russia for the maintenance of peace, before as well as after the Vienna note, while the increasing exactions of the two Courts engaged them daily more and more still further in the path of a war with us.

The occupation of the Principalities, which is taken now, after the fact, as a pretext for this war, did not prevent the renewal of negotiations. Nor would it any more have prevented their continuation, or rather these negotiations would have led to some result long since, if the Powers had not suddenly, without any good reason, completely changed the basis which they themselves had laid down in the first note concerted at Vienna. The objections made by the Porte to certain passages of that note were not sufficient to nullify the rest. The essential substance remained intact, and the Imperial Government had the right to regard all the points which the Ottoman Porte had not contested as agreed to previously to any ultimate proposition. Such was not the case. An attempt was made to impose entirely new conditions upon us; what had hitherto been admitted was declared inadmissible; the complaints of Russia were ignored, as well as also any claim on its part to an equitable separation; and all its counter propositions rejected without discussion. At the same time, measures contrary to its rights as a belligerent Power coincident to the Black Sea with the conditions transmitted from Vienna were adopted, as if to impress a character of compulsion to any adhesion on its part. Finally, all honorable retreat was peremptorily cut off from it by an imperious summons, such as Russia never before received within the whole period of its history, even at the time when a conqueror, at the head of armed Europe, invaded its territory.

Not being able to blind themselves to the insufficiency of the motives for a disastrous war, and upon the want of proportion which exists between its effects and its cause, the two Powers are obliged to exaggerate its object, by bringing the most vague accusations against Russia.

They allege that their honor and material interests have been attacked; projects, on our side, of aggrandizement and conquest in Turkey; the independence of the Porte, and even that of other States; finally, the balance of power in Europe, which, according to them, is threatened by our excessive preponderance.

All these general imputations rest upon no foundation whatever.

We have never attacked the honor of the two Courts. If that honor has been endangered it has been done by themselves. From the very outset they adopted a system of intimidation, which failed as a matter of course. They made it a point of honor to oblige Russia to bend to them; and because Russia would not consent to her own humiliation, they say that they are hurt in their moral dignity.

Materially, their interests have not been attacked by us either. They can only be so by the war which they wish gratuitously to wage against us. On the contrary, it is they who endanger our interests much more seriously by attacking us in the North and in the South, in our ports, and on different points of our coasts.

The policy of aggrandizement and conquest which they attribute to Russia has been refuted by all her acts since 1815. Of her neighbors in Germany and in the North is there one who, during the last forty years, has had to complain of an attack, or even of an attempt at an attack, upon the integrity of his possessions?

With respect to Turkey, although we have been at war with her, the peace of Adrianople exists to attest the moderation we have made of our success; and since then, at two intervals, the Ottoman Empire has been saved by us from imminent ruin.

The desire of possessing Constantinople, if that Empire should fall, and the intention of forming a permanent establishment there, have been too publicly, too solemnly disavowed, for any doubts to be entertained on that subject that do not originate in a distrust which nothing can cure.

The results will shortly show whether the Powers or Russia have struck the most fatal blow, not only against the independence, but against the very existence of Turkey. As a price for the interested services given to her, she has already renounced by treaty the distinguished privilege of every independent Power—that of making peace or declaring war, at its own free will, at the moment, and on the conditions it may itself deem most advisable. She will be forced to subscribe to an engagement which will give equality of civil and religious rights to all her subjects. Russia will sincerely applaud so important a guarantee, obtained in favor of all the Christians in Turkey, if the result should be to insure it to them in a really efficacious manner. But in presence of a revolution which would so profoundly alter all the constituent bases of the Ottoman Government, Russia has the right to be surprised that an engagement by which the Sultan confined himself to confirm religious privileges already existing, and emanating from our treaties with him, should have been declared an attempt against his sovereignty and his independence.

It is for Europe—not for the two Powers—to decide if the general equilibrium really to be exposed to the dangers which are attributed to it from the excessive preponderance attributed to Russia. It is for Europe to examine which weighs heaviest at the present time upon the freedom of action of States—Russia left to herself, or a formidable alliance, the pressure of which alarms all the neutral Powers, and uses by turns caresses or threats to compel an adherence to its policy. Europe will also decide if, during the last years, it is from Russia that have come pretensions the most hostile to the rights of sovereignty and to the independence of feeble States; if in Greece, in Sicily, in Naples, in Tuscany, it is for or against those rights that she has declared; whether in Germany, between the great Governments, she has sought to sow discord, or to re-establish union; whether, morally in Lombardy, and materially in Hungary, her efforts have not been consecrated to the maintenance of the balance of power; and whether the blows that are preparing against her, and the isolation in which it is hoped to place her by hauling over the political world to a far different sort of preponderance, will not rather be the annihilation of that equilibrium.

It may thus be seen to what the vague generalities urged against Russia are reduced. But the last especially of these grounds of accusation suffices to explain the true motives of a war which, judged by its apparent grounds, there is no reason; and which it is so contrary to the moral, industrial and commercial interests of the entire world, that it will really necessitate the ruin of the very Empire which it made the pretext to save from an imaginary peril. The true motive was publicly proclaimed by the English Ministers, when they asserted before Parliament that the moment had arrived at last when it was necessary to destroy the influence of Russia.

It is to defend that influence, not less necessary to the Russian nation than it is essential to the maintenance of the order and the security of other States—it is to sustain the independence and territorial integrity which are the bases of it—that the Emperor, obliged in spite of himself to embark in this contest, is about to devote all the means of resistance which are furnished by the devotion and the patriotism of his people. He trusts that God, who has so often protected Russia in the days of trial, will assist him once more in this formidable struggle. He sincerely laments the manifold evils which are about to fall on humanity; but at the same time he feels it to be his duty to protest solemnly against the arbitrary pretensions put forth so proudly by the two Powers, which throw upon him alone all the responsibility of them. They are free, without doubt, to adopt against Russia such measures as they may think expedient; but they are not able to lay the consequences to his charge. The responsibility of the calamities of a war belongs to that Power which declares it, not to the one which limits itself to its acceptance.

IMPORTANT FROM SPAIN.

The correspondent of the London Times, writing from Paris, 18th, says:

My private letters state that the affair of the Black Warrior, so far from being settled, has been urged on with extreme violence by Mr. Soulé, and at the present moment wears a very threatening aspect.

Another letter from Madrid, dated the 13th, contains these words:

It is stated that the American Minister has demanded of this Government the recall of Captain-General Pezuela, and further, that the officer who shall succeed him shall have power to settle upon the spot such disputes as that arising out of the affair of the Black Warrior. A large sum of money is also said to have been demanded, but the amount named is so disproportionately large that we forbear to mention it.

In addition to the English ships of war in the Baltic and the Black Sea, and to those on foreign and colonial stations, here we have in reserve at the four ports of Portsmouth, Devenport, Chatham, and Sheerness not less than 161 vessels of the "effective ships of the Royal Navy," and those estimated to carry not less than 6807 guns. Besides these, too, we have a goodly number of paddle wheels and other small craft. Then we have of vessels building—5 at Portsmouth, 7 at Devenport, 1 at Sheerness, 6 at Chatham, 11 at Pembroke, 4 at Deptford, 4 at Woolwich, and 1 at Millwall—total 39.

The Romance of Making Wills.

Some time ago I had occasion to go to Doctors' Commons to look at the will of a dead man. The hand that signed it was in the grave long before—dust, perhaps. But the record of the will which animated that hand was there amongst those dusty folios, engrossed in an almost undecipherable hand, which tell how all the real property in the country has been disposed of over and over again. I had no difficulty in finding it, for I had a note of the precise day the deceased died on. It is unnecessary to say anything about the contents of that will, however, for they have no relation to what I am writing. It is only the date which I have any business with. The will was dated the day before the man died, i. of course, had often heard of men making their wills when they were just at death's door, without any particular thought being excited; but this time I was surprised, as a single fact very often does surprise us when we have passed by a host of similar ones unnoticed. I knew the man who made that will. He was a shrewd, prudent, sharp lawyer, who had risen from nothing to be a man of immense wealth. If he was distinguished for any qualities in particular, it was for punctuality and promptitude. None of the clerks of his office were ever five minutes too late. That was an offense not to be forgotten. No one ever knew him to be behind at an appointment, or to let business go undone. His housekeeper, who managed his bachelor abode for many years, only kept her place by being exact to time. Yet this man had not made his will till a few hours before his death; and, therefore, the possession of his property formed the subject of a very flourishing lawsuit.

When I went out of that dark, dismal catacomb of dead men's wills, I went on thinking of all the similar cases of procrastination which I knew or had heard of—and they were not a few—for this is a piece of experience of one who was a law clerk before he quarrelled with red tape. What a curious catalogue they were! There was an old lady, a toothless old dowager, who had a reprobate and discarded son, and a pretty genile niece who lived with her. We used to manage all her affairs, and it was pretty well known in the office that the "nice girl with the long curls" was to be the old lady's heir. Our head clerk, a red whiskered dandy, who had no mean opinion of himself, built, I could see, certain speculations on that basis. The old lady never came without Eliza; and when a visit was expected Mr. Catchpole brushed his fiery hair in the most killing curls, and changed the out-at-the-elbows coat for the smart one he wore on holidays, and beautified himself as far as practicable. Well, a message came one day that the old lady was ill—very ill—with an urgent request that some one should get at once and make her will. Off went our Adonis as fast as a promise of something liberal over the fare could urge the cabman.

When he arrived, the old lady was alive—just alive enough to tell him that all her property was to be left to Eliza. She told him that in a hissing whisper which supplied the place of the cracked voice; but when she came to the word "all," so full was the poor old creature of love for the niece, or, perhaps, of determination—let us hope not hate—against her son, that she half rose up in her bed, and clenched her withered hand and shrieked out that word again. It must have been a terrible sight—that of life struggling with death for a will! It was a short matter to write that will down; and Catchpole's pen flew over the paper, and the old eyes that were glazing so fast stared anxiously the while, and the thin finger actually held the pen she had asked for beforehand ready to sign the paper.

In a few moments all was ready; but what a difference that few moments had made! The clerk had risen from his seat and approached the couch, when the surgeon, who stood on the other side, said, with that coolness that medical practice brings, "It is too late!" And it was too late. The dead fingers clenched the unused pen so tightly that they had to be unclasped from it. The son was heir of all, and Eliza a beggar! Death had translated that serene-mannered "old" into none. The sequel is soon told. The property was wasted by the reprobate son, and has long since passed into other hands, and Eliza, instead of possessing some thousands a year, and being wooed by Mr. Catchpole, is a faded daily governess.

Every lawyer's office has plenty such stories as this. One I remember of a miser who had ruined more than one family, and in his last moments wished to make such reparation as bequeathed gold could compass. Poor wretch, when the will was brought, catalepsy had seized him, and he lay there an living corpse—dead in all but mind. He could not move his hand; his tongue refused its office; only his eyes were free to move; and of those eyes I have been told a terrible tale. He was, as misers often are, a man of strong mind and iron nerve. Passive as he was in every other part, the eyes told all that was passing within. You could have seen in them intelligence when the will was read to him; the powerful volition brought to bear, and preserved in, when the written word which was to make it a testament was required, the terror and horror which came over him when he found that the right hand which had so often aided him for evil, would not help him for good; the despair which burst the unseen bonds around him, with a convulsive motion, let out the last of life. It must have been a spectacle of horror, when punishment came in the shape of a prohibition from the one act of mercy, which might have made some amends for a whole lifetime of wrong.

Then there was another legend of a man whose daughter married against his will. He lived somewhere in a retired country-house, far off from any town. This man was subject to a disease of the heart, and one night, feeling the symptoms of an approaching attack, and that strange presentiment which so often comes before death, he roused his household and sent off a messenger on horseback, not for a surgeon, but for a lawyer. He wanted his will made instantly. The messenger could not be expected back for at least two hours, and long before that the spasmodic attack had come on, but still in the intervals of his paroxysms, that determined man wrote as though against time.

When the lawyer did arrive, all that was left of the living will which had been so active and energetic a few hours before, was that last piece of writing. It expressed the deceased's intention, in the strongest terms, utterly to disinherit his rebellious child, and to give his property to some charitable institution. It was complete, even to the signature; only the flourish usually added to the name was wanting, as though there the hand had failed. But that writing was not a will; it was not in proper form, not attested. In the eye of the law it was but an invalid piece of paper, and the daughter took that which her birthright entitled her to.

Wills generally afford a frightful temptation to the worst part of our nature. I really believe that more cunning, more falsehood, more worldly anxiety, and more moral wrong are blended with the subject of "wills" than with the whole mass of law parchments extant. A will should not only be properly made, but properly placed, and more than one should be cognizant of its whereabouts. I have known many cases of gross turpitude in the shape of destroying wills, and can record one rather curious anecdote, affording a vivid illustration of unprincipled greed defeating itself. Two gentlemen in the city, close friends from their school days, were in the decline of life. Mr. Edmonds had a large family, with comparatively small means, while Mr. Raymond was worth two hundred thousand pounds, with no living relatives but a nephew of the most profligate and hopeless character. This nephew had been expensively educated, and had spent unlimited money for the worst purposes, and the uncle at length became weary and disgusted with the young man's depravity. "Edmonds," said Raymond, one day to his friend, as he handed him a roll of paper, "here's my will. I have left my nephew ten thousand pounds, and the rest of my property to you, who, I know, will make good use of it." Edmonds remonstrated and implored, but was eventually compelled to take the will, and lock it up in his private desk.

Within a few months, however, by dint of constant entreaty, Mr. Edmonds prevailed upon his friend to make another will, and just the reverse of the bequest, leaving the nephew the bulk of the property, and Edmonds the ten thousand pounds. This will Edmonds read, and saw safely deposited in Raymond's iron chest at his private residence. Within the following year Raymond died. The nephew found the will, and, as it afterwards appeared, such was his baseness, that to secure in addition to the rest the ten thousand pounds left to Edmonds, he immediately burned the document, knowing that if his uncle died intestate in himself was heir-at-law. On this villainous unannouncement, Edmonds, sinking his conscientious scruples, produced the first will made by Raymond, and claimed the chief of the property, and the unprincipled nephew, after making a full confession, during a fit of delirium tremens, killed himself.

WRITT

How beautiful is night!
A dewy freshness fills the silent air;
No mist obscures, nor cloud, nor speck, nor stain
Breaks the serene of heaven:
In full-orbed glory yonder moon divine
Rolls through the dark blue depths.
Beneath her steady ray
The desert circle spreads,
Like the round ocean, girdled by the sky:
How beautiful is night!

PLEASANT WRITING.—The N. Y. Post is publishing a series of descriptive letters from Hayti, from the pen of one of the editors of that journal. In the last number mention is made of an excellent trait in the character of the Haytians, which might be copied with advantage to some, if not many, in this country. We often have pained at the very abrupt manner of speaking to domestics, especially at table. How much more pleasant would it be for such employees were they addressed with some regard to their feelings instead of dictatorial abruptness. The editor of the Post writes:

It is due to the Haytians of all colors and classes to say, that, so far as their external intercourse with each other is concerned, they are probably the politest people in the world. It is almost the first thing that strikes an American when he lands among them. It pervades all classes and conditions. The humblest peasants in their intercourse with each other, as well as with those in a higher sphere, present, in this respect, an example which might be studied with profit by my own countrymen of every rank. It is a very rare thing for a Haytian to pass a person in the street, whether an acquaintance or not, without saluting him; a woman is always saluted. No Haytian ever enters a shop, however humble, or asks a market woman, whose whole stock may not be worth a single Spanish dollar, the price of her bananas, without the preliminary courtesy of a bow or some courteous word.

Nothing is more common than for a driving man in business in New York to thrust his head into his neighbor's counting-room, an old acquaintance, too, perhaps, and ask, abruptly, "What is four to-day?" or, "How are bills on London?" The person addressed, nothing surprised, responds as abruptly, and parties separate with apparently as little interest in each other as two ships that casually meet each other for a moment in an eddy. Such manners would at once be tabooed in Hayti. No class would tolerate them. I remember some marked rebukes administered to acquaintances of mine who had thoughtlessly overlooked these minor morals which illustrate this feature of the Haytian civilization. One of the delinquents, who was a prominent merchant, went one morning quite early, and in great haste, to a store, and abruptly asked the porter, who was sweeping out, if the proprietor, calling him by name, was in? The porter stopped sweeping, and looking up with an air of mingled astonishment and anger, after a brief pause, broke forth in Créole: "Pourquoi on mande poter M. Auguste, sans dire bonjour?" (Why do you ask for Mr. Augusta without saying good morning!) My friend, whose mind had been very much preoccupied, at once discovered the error he had made, and hastened to make the usual complimentary inquiries about the porter's health and the weather, which soon set everything right, and restored his habitual good nature, after which he gave the information very cheerfully.

Mr. Bird, the faithful Baptist minister in Port au Prince, mentioned to me another case, where he received a still more stern rebuke for his indifference to this small change of social intercourse. He called at the residence of one of his parishioners, and knocked. As he received no answer from within, he turned to some women who were ironing before the door of a little shanty in the vicinity—they were presumed to be washerwomen—and asked if the family he wished to visit (naming them) were out. They gave him no answer. He asked again; they were still silent, though he had his eyes fixed upon them, and was sure that they had heard him, in a reproachful, but still in a courteous manner: "Monsieur, vous n'sommes pas digne d'être salue!" (Are we not worthy, sir, of being saluted?)

We are quite too indifferent in the United States, about this matter, which, to be sure, may be only skin deep, but yet serves almost as important a purpose in our social economy as the skin does in our animal economy. It spares our feelings a great many bruises. I confess, I never felt the characteristic rudeness and bluntness of the American people so effectually relinked, as by the example of the Haytian peasantry.

CAREER OF A POET.—It is seventy years since George Crabbe published his poem of "The Village." His age was twenty-nine. He was then in orders, and was domestic chaplain to the Duke of Rutland. But what a life the young man had passed through, before he had attained that social position? Born in what was then a wretched fishing hamlet, Aldborough, roughly brought up, imperfectly educated, apprenticed to a surgeon, without means to complete his professional studies, lingering hopelessly about his native place, he at last resolved to cast himself upon the wide ocean of London, and tempt the fearful dangers that belong to the career of a literary adventurer. Here he struggled and starved for a year. During the first three months of his London life, his sole manuscript poems in the booksellers, Dodsley and Becket, which they civilly declined. He addressed verses to Lord Chancellor Thurlow, who informed him that his avocations did not leave him leisure to read verses. He sold his clothes and his books, and pawned his watch and his surgical instruments. His one coat was torn, and he moaded it himself. He was reduced at last to eighteenpence; but the brave man never despaired. He had a strong sense of religion, and he was deeply attached to one who became his wife after thirteen years of suffering sometimes. His faith and his love held him up, and kept him out of degradation.

At last he wrote a letter to Edmund Burke. It contained this passage: "In April last I came to London, with three pounds, and flattered myself this would be sufficient to supply me with the common necessaries of life till my abilities should procure me more; of these I had the highest opinion, and a poetical vanity contributed to my delusion." Burke saved Crabbe from the fate of many a one who perished in those days when patronage was dying out; and the various resources for the literary laborer that belong to the extension of reading had scarcely begun to exist. Burke persuaded Dodsley to publish "The Library;" and the Bishop of Norwich to ordain its author, without a degree. His lot in life was fixed. Thurlow invited him to dinner, and telling Article[illegible] Neutrality Laws.

On the 1st inst. in the Senate, Mr. Slidell, of Louisiana, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be requested to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the President of the United States, during any future recess of Congress, to suspend, by proclamation, either wholly or partially, the operation of the act in addition to and amendatory of the punishment of certain crimes against the United States, approved the 20th of April, 1818, and also an act supplementary thereto, approved the 10th of March, 18[illegible]8, should, in his opinion, the public interests require such total or partial suspension, such suspension not to exceed a period of twelve months, and the reasons which shall have induced the President to proclaim it to be communicated to Congress immediately on its first meeting thereafter.

Mr. Slidell said: Some months since, Mr. President, there was skeptical or no notion on this floor concerning the absurd existence of any concerted plan to Africanize Cuba.

Past experience has taught us to be surprised at nothing that England might attempt to prevent the possession of this magnificent island by her great commercial rival, a rival destined to be, in a very few years, if, in fact, she be not already, in a commercial point of view, superior. Still, I could not bring myself to believe that Spain, with all her proverbial obstinacy, would prefer the destruction of a flourishing colony, peopled by her own sons, to the prospect of its [illegible] future, perhaps distant day, by [illegible] and peaceful negotiation, to a [illegible] price that would [illegible] plus [illegible] state now, as briefly as possible, the reasons that have led me to the full conviction of a well understood purpose between Spain and England, in which France is certainly [illegible], and probably a participant, for the Africanization of Cuba.

He then proceeded, at length, to show, by quotations from diplomatic notes and other papers, the deep interest Great Britain has displayed for the consummation of plans in Cuba [illegible] proposition for the tripartite convention abrogating the possession of Cuba by either of the parties having failed, it was to be expected that the desire of Great Britain to prevent Cuba falling into the possession of the great successful rival would lead her to consider at, if not aid in, the Africanization of Cuba of the most deplorable system of apprenticeship. He referred to several declarations, made by Gen. Concha, while Captain-General of Cuba, to the effect that the existence, the very name of Cuba, depended upon a strict obedience to Spain and the officers she sent thither.

Concha's successor, General Pezuela, always in favor of emancipation, one month after his coming into office, by decree authorized wholesale importation of apprenticed laborers from Spain, India, Yucatan, and China. That decree allows these slaves to be imported in vessels, four persons to the ton. The limit to American vessels is two passengers to five tons. The suffering from crowded and infected vessels under our laws is well known; yet with us a ship of a thousand tons can transport four hundred persons; [illegible] vessels in which apprentices are to be brought to Cuba could transport upon one of that size two thousand apprentices. The probable sufferings of these [illegible] on such receiving and the power of [illegible] by their masters, might expose to [illegible] sympathy at the hands of English philanthropy.

The [illegible] appointment of this apprenticeship was shortly followed by [illegible] on the Government paper of [illegible] as to the superiority of African labor in agricultural pursuits; [illegible] on the 15th of January last, the Captain-General issued a circular to his subordinate officers to report to him upon the expediency of importing African apprentices.

To cap the climax [says Mr. S.] of usurpation and oppression, an order has been issued allowing all slaves to hire their time at eight dollars per month. The Spanish law has always favored [illegible] emancipation of the slave; and, to enable him to [illegible] his liberty, a tariff has been placed on the labor according to his convertible value, or the price paid for him.

Meanwhile the slave-trade is going on with increased vigor. The vigilance of British cruisers has been so much relaxed for some time, as to justify the belief that the British Government is conniving at the introduction of slaves into Cuba.

He then continued that Cuba was the only point in this hemisphere to which the perfect understanding mentioned by Lord Clarendon, as existing between England and France, could apply.

Referring to the war now pending in Europe, and to the expected triumph of the allied powers, he said:

It is true that we have just made one short step in the right direction—we have appropriated three millions for half a dozen steam-frigates. * * * But England has now fifty or sixty war steamers [illegible] and France as many more, ready, so soon as their services may be dispensed with in the Baltic and Black Seas, to illustrate, on our shores the happy accord which Lord Clarendon so lauded out of the record so effectively to state existed between the two powers in both hemispheres.

* * * * * * *

I desire no movement on the part of our citizens, until the Cubans shall have put their own shoulders to the wheel. They have been reproached for their pusillanimity; but let it be once understood that if, by their own efforts to vindicate their rights, they show themselves worthy of our sympathies, the arm of the Federal Government will not be interposed on behalf of their oppressors. In less than six months the flag of freedom, the lone star, would wave over the whole island; the More may, perhaps, hold out somewhat longer.

I think it unnecessary to make more than a passing allusion to a matter of recent occurrence, and which has been the subject of a communication from the President to the House of Representatives. I mean the seizure of the United States mail steamer Black Warrior at Havana, and confiscation of her cargo. This is but one, and the most outrageous, indeed, of a long series of insults and [illegible] by which it has been attempted to [illegible] our steamers [illegible]. They serve to complete the proof I [illegible] of an understanding, probably consummated by treaty between [illegible] and England. The Cuban authorities [illegible] never have dared to take so offensive a [illegible] they had not relied on the support of [illegible]. I have no doubt that the policy [illegible] by the President will be energetically [illegible] and that full pecuniary reparation to the owners of the Black Warrior, and apology for the insult to our flag, will ultimately be obtained.

But I regret that there is [illegible] for this at Madrid. I should have preferred to see it redressed in a more summary way by the blockade of Havana and the other principal ports of the island. It is high time that we should have a [illegible] that insults more immediately at [illegible] the Captain-General should be [illegible] use the power [illegible] responsibility at [illegible] for redress or for aggression. I [illegible] the last three months, [illegible] the President. I [illegible] father than I have [illegible] to [illegible] discretionary, to use it [illegible] the session of Congress, but I have been restrained by the belief that the President will only have recourse to the representatives of the people and of the States, that the contingency has arrived, and call for [illegible] The issue must be met [illegible] choose a more proper [illegible]

THE SHIP ERICSSON.

Written by Rev. C. K. Marshall, on receiving from a friend in the North the following note, in a letter: "The Ericsson, sank in the late storm, will be raised in a short time from its watery bed and come up, as perhaps you have predicted, like a young giant, to compete successfully for the sovereignty of the seas."

The beauteous Venus from the deep
Received her regal birth,
And Neptune smiled to see his child,
A goddess, rule the Earth.

Anon the pregnant waves are heard
In deep, prophetic tone,
And Neptune's arms in joy are spread—
He hopes to have a son.

A noble son, proud, brave and good,
With trident sceptred hand,
To rule the seas from shore to shore,
As Venus rules the land.

And in his pride of hope he vows,
Quick as the travell's done;
The ocean born, the ocean king.
He'll call the "Ericsson."

BIOGRAPHICAL.

RECOLLECTIONS OF JOHN BOOTH, Jr.

My acquaintance with him began in 1842. Columbus, Miss., where his parents then resided. He was at that time a little Sunday-school boy, of a kind, gentle spirit, and attractive manners. As he grew up he seemed to promise all that his parents could ask, and to him they fondly looked for comfort and support as they journeyed down the vale of life. But, alas! how uncertain are all our hopes of earthly good. Just as he was ripening into manhood, his sun of life went down behind the dark cloud of Death! His illness was very protracted and severe, and he seemed to familiarize himself with death, and marked every step gained towards the Heavenly Land. "His conversation was in Heaven." He took great delight in speaking of the goodness of God to him, and would look back to the innocent sports of boyhood, and dwell upon the great goodness manifested towards him. Often, in the midst of extreme suffering, he would say: "God is good!" and sometimes he would say: "Father, I pray!" and then, "Father, sing, oh sing to me!" And the voice of prayer and the sweet songs of Zion often soothed and comforted him. The future was all brightness to the eye of his faith, and he longed to depart and be with Christ. Death was robbed of his sting and the grave of its gloom.

I shall not soon forget my interview with him upon his dying bed. He threw his bony arms around my neck, and shouted and received the near approach of death. At last, after many long, weary days and sleepless nights, death came as a kind messenger to release him. I found him free from pain, and in full possession of his mental powers, and his last words were truly remarkable. He said: "How sweet is death! It is the most pleasant sensation I ever felt." Seldom, if ever, in young or old, has the glorious power of our holy religion been more fully and beautifully exemplified.

His grave and memory are all that is left us now; and, while we bedew the former with tears of sorrow for our loss, let us cherish the latter in sure and certain hope of meeting where loved ones are severed no more.

"Oh, may I triumph so,
When all my warfare's past;
And, dying, find my latest foe
Under my feet at last."

THOMAS FEARN JONES.

Died in the city of New Orleans, on the 8th of May, 1854, THOMAS FEARN JONES, aged about twenty-four years.

Mr. Jones was a native of Huntsville, Ala., but, for the last five years, a resident of Louisiana. He left his native town to complete his literary studies at Centenary College, at Jackson, at which institution he graduated in 1850 with distinguished honor. His talents, his application, and his rare scholastic attainments were such, at that early age, that his preceptors predicted for him a high and distinguished career in life which would reflect honor upon his Alma Mater, and spoke of him as one who by his merits would win and wear the rarest honors in whatever profession he embarked.

After he left college, he resided in this village for three years, and by his high-toned sentiments, his noble nature, his upright course, and his social virtues, he endeared himself to all, and those who knew him best loved him dearest. Here he studied law, and prepared himself for the bar, and he was admitted about a year ago, and at which he so fondly hoped to reach distinction; and his friends here looked forward to the future, so full of hope and promise, when they should behold him eminent among men, alike distinguished for his rare virtues and brilliant talents. But, alas! after practicing one short term in New Orleans, the Destroyer came and stilled the beatings of his young and noble heart, and swept all these fair hopes to the cold tomb to sleep for ever there.

"His little life is rounded with a sleep."

Poor Tom! The last and the noblest of his brothers. Felix Jones, full of hope, and in the pride of his early manhood, died here, and the tombstone in yonder graveyard marks the spot where he sleeps. John Jones died at Memphis, Tenn., as he was returning home from Centenary College; at which institution he had just graduated with the first of the highest honors of his class. And Thos. Jones, in the first year of that career from which so much was expected, has fallen. Three brothers, in the prime of life, alike remarkable for their goodness, their virtues, and their talents, within the last four years, have been swept into the tomb.

To one who knew him well and loved him dearly when living, it may be permitted to speak of him, now, that he is dead. Unlike many, whose virtues are unknown while they live, and only eulogized after death, his shone brightly and constantly, not only upon particular occasions, but in his every-day intercourse with the world, and bound to him in the firmest ties of affection many friends who loved him and cheered him on in his bright career, and who are now left to mourn his untimely loss, and pour the unavailing tear for his melancholy fate. Though here a stranger in a strange land, far away from home and from kindred, yet the stranger's death has dimmed many manly eyes with tears, and filled many stout hearts with sorrow. Friendship prompts much, and affection perhaps more in these lines, than many would concede as consistent with propriety, or as due to his memory; but all will concur when it is said he was one of the few, the choice, the noble spirits, which are so seldom met in life, and when once met are never forgotten. One of those that bring a light, a sunshine with them, and dash it upon the murky night of life, and whose characters are ever remembered with pleasure.

Blessed by nature with a powerful mind, and thoroughly educated, he brought to the bar all the elements that command eminent success. His heart kind, generous, and keenly alive to the happiness and enjoyment of others, he won the affection of all with whom he associated. Religious; his life was characterized more by the practice than by the profession of the Christian virtues. He was ambitious; but his ambition was a virtue. His noble breath was filled with high and holy aspirations—such aspirations as prompt men to elevate and ennoble mankind, and tend to increase the happiness of the world. With this ambition in his heart, with these longings for the strife, and with such high hopes, like the young eagle which promised to soar among the clouds and perch upon the mountain-top, he has been struck down in his first flight!

It seems hard that one, with such brilliant talents, with such varied learning, and with such ambition, should be stricken down at the very beginning of that career which promised to be so useful and so glorious. But God, in His mercy, has taken him from us, and we, who thought so much of him, should bend in meek resignation to this severe dispensation of His good Providence, trusting that He will help us to bear it as is most befitting. To many of us his loss is irreparable. The vacant chair in our social circle can never be filled by another. It is not asserting too much to say that our State has lost one of her noblest young men; the bar one of its most promising aspirants; learning one of her most assiduous votaries; the world one who might have been all, and more than all, that was hoped from him, and he whose affection for his worth and goodness pays this small tribute to his memory, a friend whom he loved but too well, and now mourns, perhaps, too bitterly. Tom, thou art gone before; alas, that thou shouldst have gone so soon and left us so desolate! FERGUS.

Clinton, La., May 11, 1854.

WHO THE REBEL EMPEROR IS,

AND HOW HE BECAME A CHRISTIAN.

This seems to be put at rest in the following extract, from a communication of the Baptist Missionary, addressed to Dr. Sehon, and published in the N. and L. Christian Advocate:

HUNG SOW-TSUEN.—The history of this man, who is now called "Tae ping Wang," becomes more and more interesting as we approximate the point where all nations will acknowledge him, and his Court, the de facto Government of China. Many, at a distance, ay, and some in Chian, too, when writing about this man, his rise and progress, make some grand mistakes. Now, as this affair is to be posted up in history, is it not quite desirable that the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, should appear, that the more glory may be ascribed to Him who rules over all? I hope those who have written anonymously will esteem correction a favor; none will suppose error was their intention. We have witnesses with us, and speak and correct advisedly.

One writer from China calls him "a native of Kwangsi." This was a mistake. He is a native of Kwangtung, born about twenty or thirty miles North-west of Canton, in a district called Fa-uen, where his ancestors had lived and died for several generations. One editor at home says: "Sow-tsuen became somewhat interested in the Christian religion several years ago, from reading a tract given him by Mr. Gutzlaff." This is a mistake; the tract was neither written nor given him by Mr. Gutzlaff, but by a native convert.

Another in China says: "To the broadcast seed of the Protestant missionary is the world indebted for the religious zeal, which, infusing a perfect newness of life in all their conduct, more than any other feeling, has so wonderfully aided the patriots in their onward progress." To the teachings of the late Dr. Morrison, in the first place, and to those of Mr. Roberts, at the time that he was conducting the Canton branch of Dr. Gutzlaff's Chinese Union, in the second (according to the admission of the man himself) are all the knowledge of Christianity possessed by the leader of the Nanking army to be ascribed." Two mistakes here. As to this man having been taught, "in the first place, by Dr. Morrison," he never was taught by him, "first" nor last; for, Dr. Morrison had been dead more than ten years before Hung Sow-tsuen was ever introduced to any forsigner as an inquirer! And, as to "Dr. Gutzlaff's Chinese Union, in the second," having any thing to do with his instruction, that is entirely a mistake. Nor was Mr. Roberts at all conducting the Canton branch of the Chinese Union at the time he taught Tae ping Wang the Scriptures. But, justice to the memory of both Morrison and Gutzlaff requires that I should say, that Dr. Morrison taught the man who compiled the tract that became instrumental in this work. And Dr. Gutzlaff's version of the Scriptures was used by the writer when he taught him, and is now used by Tae ping Wang for circulation.

A copy of Matthew and Genesis have just come to hand from Nanking, printed and published under his own directions, without note or comment; and approved for circulation by the stamp of his own seal on the first page. Several hundred block cutters and printers are said to be engaged by him in this good work. I am very happy to be able to report that the word he uses for baptism—immerse—is the right word, according to the judgment of Messrs. Gutzlaff, Goddard and Roberts. I hope he will persevere in using it unto the end. For God he uses both the terms which have been so much contended about. In this I think he is more than half right, and hope he will persevere. Though I lean myself, in preference, to the latter term for daily preaching purposes; yet, I think the former may sometimes be used with great propriety, especially when we allude to God as Supreme Ruler.

I must not pass the favorable opportunity here of alluding to the simple, but beautiful, assemblage of united instrumentalities which it has pleased the Lord to use in the commencement of this work, which now promises so much. "Not by might, nor power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts;" Zec. iv, 6. Whoever may have been the direct instruments, it must be acknowledged that the power is of God, and that He exercises that in answer to prayer. "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much;" hence, as many of the righteous as have prayed thus for China may have been honored instruments with God in this work. But the direct, visible instruments—a native writer and colporteur, a religious tract, and a foreign missionary—were beautifully united, and made efficient in this one instance, which promises results more than equivalent to all the money and missionary labor that have hitherto been expended by all nations and all denominations on China. The Lord's name be praised! And this three-fold instrumentality—foreign missionaries, native assistants and Christian books (each indispensible)—united, will ultimately, with the blessing of God, consummate the work.

China will be revolutionized, Christianized, and a great multitude saved through these means. Let Christians now, of all nations, with a mighty effort, come up to the help of the Lord in this great work. The harvest is great—the laborers few.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

TENTH DAY—MAY 11.

Conference met at the usual hour; Bishop Andrew in the chair: and was opened with religious exercises by Mr. McAnally.

To-day the time was consumed on petitions and memorials.

Mr. Blue presented a resolution respecting a change in the discipline, in regard to the location of a traveling preacher without his consent; which was referred to the committee on Revisals.

Mr. Keener offered a resolution requesting the committee on Missions to inquire into the expediency of adopting some plan by which Chinese youths might be educated in this country, under the auspices of our Missionary Society.

Dr. Taylor, from Shanghai, was requested to address the Conference; and expressed his gratification that the proposition had been submitted. The Chinese, he said, are very ignorant; many parents are too poor to educate their children. One had been offered to him as a gift. The Missionaries will approve the arrangement. It would have a happy reflex action on Sunday Schools. The influence will greatly promote the missionary spirit among the people and the children. He would not consume the time of the Conference, but would be glad, did circumstances allow, to expatiate on the topic embraced in the resolutions.

Resolutions offered by Mr. Fergoson, respecting the chartered fund, were referred to a special committee of five.

Dr. Parsons presented the following paper, which was received as information:

Resolved, That the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, hereby express their sincere thanks to our esteemed Secretary, Rev. E. W. Sehon, D. D., for the faithful and successful manner in which he has discharged all the duties of his responsible office, both at home and abroad, during the period for which he was elected by the General Conference.

The committee on Temperance offered a report, which was laid on the table for the present.

Under the call for petitions and memorials, Mr. Marvin presented petitions from different circuits in the Missouri Conference, praying a change in our rules in reference to the use of ardent spirits, which were laid on the table for the present.

Mr. Keener presented a resolution from the Louisiana Conference, referring to an increase in preachers' salaries, which was referred to the committee on Revisals.

Dr. Wadsworth offered a resolution instructing the committee on Revisals to inquire into the propriety of changing the marriage service of the Church, which was adopted.

Dr. Doggett offered a resolution instructing the committee on Episcopacy to devise some plan for collecting and publishing the Episcopal decisions made from time to time, which was adopted.

Mr. Alexander presented a resolution instructing the committee on Revisals to consider the propriety of so altering the rule in reference to stationing preachers, as to allow those at Galveston and other places named to be exempted from that rule, which was adopted and referred accordingly.

Mr. Shipp offered the following resolution, which was on motion, laid on the table for the present:

Whereas, the General Conference possesses no constitutional right to alter the boundaries of our Annual Conferences without their consent; therefore,

Resolved, That the committee on Boundaries be, and the same is hereby, instructed and required, to reject all applications for the transfer of a district, circuit, station or mission from one conference to another without the consent of the old conference to which it belongs.

Mr. Drake presented a resolution referring to a change in the discipline in reference to the work of the Bishops, and moved that it be made the order of the day for 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. Cowles offered as a substitute, that the subject be referred to the committee on Revisals. The substitute was accepted, and then, on motion, was laid on the table.

The Conference then adjourned with prayer by Mr. Crouch.

ELEVENTH DAY—MAY 12.

Bishop Paine took the chair and called for reports from standing committees.

Dr. Early, chairman of the committee on Episcopacy, made a report, which was read.

Mr. Evans moved the adoption of the resolution appended to the report, recommending the election of three additional Bishops.

Dr. Lee objected, and desired that the report should be published, and made the order of the day for Monday, the 22d inst.

Mr. Evans explained. Some brethren wished to discuss the general question, intimations of which were given on yesterday; he thought it was proper to discuss it now, and more proper at this than any other time.

Dr. Drake hoped the motion would not prevail; he wanted to discuss the general question; others desired the same. The condition of the Church called for a greater number of Bishops than the report contemplated.

Dr. Drake then moved to lay Mr. Evans's motion on the table. This motion was voted down.

Mr. Fisher moved to strike out three as the number of Bishops proposed to be elected, and insert four as the number. This motion he advocated. He was an Episcopal Methodist, loved the Church in all places: but having been sent here from Texas, he felt it his duty to speak for that section. The services of a Bishop were much needed in that section. Local preachers were not ordained, and consequently the ordinances were not administered, and the Church suffered. With great earnestness, he showed that the wants of the vast territory he referred to, demanded enlarged Episcopal operations, and pleaded that the Conference supply these wants.

Mr. Campbell was opposed to an increase of the number, unless the duties were increased. There was no necessity for the one without the other. He believed we might have a Bishop for each Conference with propriety and advantage.

Mr. Whipple was opposed to the resolution.

Mr. Ferguson hoped three more Bishops would be elected, and only three.

Dr. Winans hoped he would have a respectful hearing from all, even those opposed to his views. He had heard it stated that our minds were made up; but a call for the vote was not respectful while brethren wanted to speak. For one to speak under such circumstances was difficult. He was opposed to the resolution of the committee, because it proposed to do either too much or too little. If Bishops were to be mere Presidents of the Conferences, there were enough now; and unless additional work was given them, he would oppose an increase. Those favoring the present resolution, were such as had the advantages of Episcopal resitation, and did not seem to sympathize with the frontier Conferences. He was not opposing a general itinerant superintendency; but was going now for the fifth or sixth time to ask the General Conference of the Church to elect a sufficient number of Bishops to do all the work. He was, in some respects, more favorably situated for pressing this measure now, than he had ever been before. The plan he advocated did not contemplate anything like a diocesan episcopacy, but a more effectual carrying out of our present plan of episcopacy. Upon the condition that no Bishop were fixed down to any one particular field of labor, he saw nothing startling in the idea of having a Bishop for each annual conference. He would not vote the resolution of the committee, and enlarged with great force on the reasons which influenced his mind in forming his conclusions on this important subject.

Dr. S. Patton agreed with Dr. Winans in one thing; he would go for a less number, but not a greater. He would not lecture the conference for making up their minds; still he believed such was the fact. The question with him was narrowed down to this: should we have Bishops as pastors for the people, or the preachers? If for the first, then we would need a Bishop for every circuit; but if for the latter, then two additional Bishops would be sufficient.

Dr. Lee was for six additional Bishops, and agreed with Dr. Winans. He wanted a number of young men in the episcopacy. It were unwise to select others. He would go for an increase, physically and intellectually, adding six others of such minds as those now in the episcopacy; men who were well educated, and could represent the highest order of preaching talent among us.

Mr. Rosser expressed himself in favor of changing the plan and making large additions to the number of the Bishops.

Dr. Doggett rose to express an opinion. He believed that four additional Bishops would be necessary, and only four.

Dr. W. A. Smith thought, first, that the number of Bishops should be increased at least to the extent proposed by the resolution. He thought the numerical weakness of the episcopal board had led to injuries in Virginia, which he learned would not be erased in his lifetime, if ever. He was willing to glorify Methodism, but thought this might be carried to excess, and produce injuries. The episcopal board was a co-ordinate branch of the government, this ground we had taken firmly, and it was the main point of difference between the Church North and South. We believed as stated, and not that the episcopacy was a mere executive to carry out the government of the Church. But in what sense were they a co-ordinate branch of the government of the Church? At present they are co-ordinate in theory only, and not practically. If co-ordinate in fact, they have a right to have a veto power in the Church. He thought this power ought to be recognized, by giving them a well-defined restrictive veto power over the legislation of the Church. He would show why it should be practical. He believed that if such power had been recognized in 1844, the Bishops then would have vetoed some of the acts of that Conference; and had a two-thirds majority been required to pass a motion under veto, the whole Church would never have been rent. There were storms yet to gather around the Church, and if some such conservative power were not recognized, it might be most fatal to the Church. He was for clothing the episcopal board with constitutional veto power within proper metes and bounds; and he would not do this without making them as numerically as respectable as they were morally and intellectually. Unlike some others, he was not unwilling to take something because he could not get all. If he could not get all he asked, give him what they would. He would do the best he could, and while he lived, he meant to toil on to the desired point.

Dr. Wadsworth feared that a large increase in the episcopacy might destroy the unity of the board. He hoped the time would never come when Methodists should attach that importance to ministerial preferment which he had seen elsewhere. In looking over the whole subject as discussed here and previously in the papers, he thought three additional Bishops were all that was necessary. If this number be added, then the whole number could hold all the conferences in a small portion of the year, leaving by far the greater portion of their time for visiting and supervising the interests of the Church. He feared that a larger number than that proposed by the committee on episcopacy, would exhibit a discrepancy between the whole number of men and the work to be performed.

Mr. McTyeire wished to know what had been heretofore the proportion between the whole number of Bishops and the members of the Church. Some fifty years ago they were as one to 30,000. Later, they were as one to 50,000. Now there were more than 500,000 members, and but four Bishops, requiring at least six more to make them as one to 50,000. This was "Old Methodism." Let us stand up to it. We needed six; he would like to have more. Our territory had been enlarged, and our wants increased. He believed with Dr. Lee, that the Church had never engaged the full extent of episcopal influence, and the policy he thought ought to be extended. Once we had to contend for the right to have Bishops at all; afterwards the question was embarrassed with sectional feelings; but now the right was not questioned, and no sectional difficulties stood in the way. This opportunity should be embraced to meet the full demands of the Church. A number of conferences had been held without Bishops, most of them west of the Mississippi. This was detrimental to the interests of the Church. The failure was to be charged to the General Conference, and he hoped it would be so no more.

Dr. Patton rose to explain; allusion had been made to him. The proportion between the Bishops and members did not affect the question—the just proportion was between the number of Bishops and the Episcopal work to be performed.

Dr. McFerrin obtained the floor, but gave way to a motion to lay the paper on the table until to-morrow, which was so ordered.

The chair then called for further reports from committees, when

Dr. Early reported from the Episcopal Committee report No. 4, which was laid on the table under the rule.

No other reports being offered, on motion of Dr. Smith, it was resolved to take up the question of the location of the Book Concern on Monday next.

Dr. Boyd offered a resolution respecting the formation of Missionary Societies in our Sabbath Schools, which was referred to the committee on Missions.

Dr. W. A. Smith offered a resolution providing for a special committee to consider a plan for making our episcopacy a co-ordinate branch of the Church government, in fact as well as in theory; which resolution was, on motion, laid on the table for one day.

Conference adjourned with the benediction by Bishop Paine.

TWELFTH DAY—MAY 13.

The Conference was opened with divine service, conducted by Mr. Cayles. Bishop Paine in the chair.

After the reading of the journal of yesterday, Bishop Soule took the chair, and called for reports, memorials and petitions.

Mr. Ashby presented a memorial from Hannibal, Mo., on the subject of Temperance; and, on motion of Mr. Crouch, this memorial, and some others now lying on the table, were referred to the committee on Temperance.

Dr. Winans presented a memorial from the Rev. C. K. Marshall, on the subject of a great central newspaper for the Church; which was referred to the committee on books and periodicals.

Bishop Soule presented a memorial from members of the church in Wilmington, North Carolina, praying to be restored to the South Carolina Conference; which, on motion, was referred to the committee on Boundaries.

He also presented a memorial from members of the church in Fayettevills, praying to be left in connection with the North Carolina Conference; referred to the committee on Boundaries.

He presented another from members of the church in Wilmington, praying that the Front street church be restored to the jurisdiction of the South Carolina Conference; which was referred to the same committee.

Mr. Harris presented a memorial from the city of Memphis, praying that the next General Conference be held there; which was laid on the table for the present.

The Conference then took up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Dr. McFerrin took the floor and proceeded to state that the question was, what number of bishops was required to carry on the work. We are to have twenty-two conferences, possibly twenty-three. Bishops should be men of zeal and enterprise. The work to be performed by them is laid down in the book of discipline. This, in addition to what was proposed by the plan of Dr. Drake, would make the duties of the episcopal office too onerous, and, in fact, would require one bishop for each conference, or break down the episcopacy altogether. He enlarged on the heavy expenses which would be increased by the new plan proposed, which, in his judgment, formed an objection of no ordinary character. He regretted any remarks which might leave a wrong impression on the mind disparaging to the bishops. Our bishops traveled more in the year than those of any other church; how many families they visited, he could not say, but was sure that they never visited any family for the purpose of proselyting. If other bishops were entitled to credit for those persons whom they took into the church, Methodist bishops were not expected to take members into the church. Our episcopacy, as it is, has made as deep an impression on the mind as that of any other church. When we multiply such offices we multiply the chances of injury as well as benefit. Up to this time the Methodist episcopacy has never had a stain upon it, and he hoped it never would. The committee had deliberated upon the subject for weeks, matured it well, and reported unanimously in favor of the election of three additional bishops; for this number he was decidedly in favor. He went on to show that seven bishops could meet all the demands of the church with ease; increase the number to ten, and the expense would be burdensome to the church. He thought the argument from members urged yesterday was a cool fallacy, as it would apply to the division of individual churches, as well as to the whole Church. In reference to the veto power to be lodged in the hands of the bishops, he was not opposed to the thing; but it was singular that an argument had been made out of it in favor of a large number of bishops. The veto power might well enough be lodged in one man's hands; but think of such a prerogative in the hands of twenty men! He thought the outwork of Methodism might be mended; but its cardinal features were the worse for being mended. He was always to be found hard by the original principles of old constitutional Methodism.

Dr. Drake rose to correct some of, what he regarded, the sophistries of the last speaker. The plan of increasing the number of bishops, as proposed, did not tend to diocesan episcopacy. It did not require a bishop for every annual conference. He avowed that the advocates of a large number of bishops did not look to a diocesian episcopacy. He thought a bishop might continue on the same episcopal district for four years with profit to the Church, and then might be removed as easily as can a presiding elder be removed. The bishop, by such an arrangement, would become better acquainted with the preachers and the work, and this, he thought, would be of decided advantage. He thought the question of expense was not of serious character; it could be easily met. The people, he believed, wanted a change like this, which he proposed, and he hoped the conference would adopt it.

Mr. P. P. Smith wished to say a word or two. This matter had been discussed in the papers previous to the conference. He had settled it in his mind. The question was: "Is it intended so to alter our economy as to make our bishops pastors of the people, or leave them as pastors of the preachers?" If the former, he thought it could not be obtained. For this purpose, we had now preachers who were the pastors of the people, and if some of these men were taken for bishops, he did not see how the fact of a change of office would increase their preaching abilities. If bishops were to be pastors of the preachers the number proposed by the episcopal committee would be sufficient. He did not think the conferences had suffered for want of the presence of bishops to the extent some represented. Three, he thought, was a number large enough to be added to the present number. He hoped the amendment would not prevail.

Mr. Crouch would not make an argument, but state a few points which had presented themselves to his mind during the discussion. He thought it had policy to tax the people with the support of two or three classes of men to do the same work. He thought the advocates of a large increase in the number of bishops were aiming at an impossibility. Though they disclaimed all intention to do away general superintendency, yet the plan proposed necessarily did this. The object must be reached, if reached at all, by a radical change. He would make no argument here it was simply a fact. In place of giving more satisfaction to the people, it would give less, from the fact that an effort to serve all on this plan must fail to some extent, and in failing, would increase dissatisfaction.

Mr. Fly maintained that the subject had not been argued correctly. The object which he and those thinking with him desired did not propose any thing else than the carrying out of the plan as it existed now in the discipline. The bishops, he thought, had not done this fully, and with the present number could not; hence, the number should be increased. Our bishops had done well; but worked under a bad plan, and that plan should be altered. The objection on the score of expense might be urged against the whole system of episcopacy. He had no wish to make any radical change in our economy, but to carry out efficiently the plan we had.

Mr. Kelley thought it due to himself and the work he represented to give his views. As one of the representatives of the Western Virginia Conference, he was opposed to the motion before the conference, and in favor of the addition of three only. The discipline specified the duties of the bishops; let them judge in what particular manner it should be performed. He believed that some of the bishops now did as much pastoral visiting as some of the preachers. The latter should do this work. In his country, when the preachers decided questions of law, they were glad to see the bishops; but when they could not be present with them, they got on as best they could. Three more bishops were enough.

Mr. Langhorne said he had for some time entertained the opinion that there should be an increase in the episcopacy. The office was onerous, and he regarded it as improper to impose burdens upon bishops where it was in our power to relieve them. But he was not for an enlargement to the extent asked for by some, because it led to diocesan episcopacy. He was in favor of four more, and thought the Church demanded that number. Then they might labor with comparative ease to themselves and profit to the Church. The expenses of the whole, he thought, too insignificant to have a place in this discussion. The means, he thought, would be forthcoming.

Mr. Bruce thought the number of three too small. Our church territory was nearly twice as large as in 1844, and constantly enlarging. Without a great number of bishops they would be taxed too heavily, and no contingency was provided for. He did not want a diocesan episcopacy—would not have it—but wanted bishops enough to do all the work required of them. The question of expense was of but little weight; as, in his judgment, if the bishops were to mix more with the people, they would cheerfully support them. He hoped, therefore, the amendment would prevail.

Mr. Closs said, that as reference had frequently been made to episcopal committee, he would simply say, he had at first been in favor of three; now he would vote for four as the number.

Mr. Parks said the number three had been fixed upon by the committee as a compromise. He thought that much irrelevant matter had been introduced into the discussion. He thought that they could never multiply the number so as for them to be pastors in the sense in which some brethren regarded it. If their plan were to be carried out, we had better to take the question and resolve that we are all bishops, and go on it.

Mr. Cobb wished to correct an impression which may have been made in regard to the West. In Arkansas they had been well served; as well as could have been expected under the circumstances.

Mr. Thrall made similar statements in regard to the Texas Conference. The bishops had done well for them, and they wanted few more.

Dr. Winans wished to say something further on this subject. Some things, he thought, had been uttered unfavorable to him and his views. He had said that he could not go for the number stated in the report. He thought the increase of the number of bishops by three would be of no advantage, but an evil; as he believed the present number sufficient to carry out the plan of episcopal visitation as it has hitherto existed, and it was not necessary to increase the number unless the plan were altered. The addition of three would not allow a material change in the plan, and he thought it would therefore be an evil, because an encumbrance on the Church. But give four or five more, and the plan could be changed, and would be changed, and the bishops brought into contact with the people at important points, and act beneficially upon the Church. Brethren had strange ideas in reference to a general superintendency. His plan would not affect the principle of the Presiding Elder system; no more than the office of general supersedes the necessity of subordinate officers. He would take four, but no less.

Mr. Burton said he would vote for the number four. It might not represent the views of Dr. Winans, but it would meet the demands of the Church. The bishops represented both the preachers and [illegible] He wanted to bring the [illegible] with the people, so that [illegible] wants and [illegible] ancy did not consist [illegible] and districts, but in the [illegible] He did not want to change [illegible] intendency, but carry it out. The visits of bishops to the people would be immense good. There was no analogy between our episcopacy and a diocesan episcopacy; ours changed and was to continue to change. The episcopacy Influenced the Church greatly, and he hoped it would continue to do so. It was a unit, and he wanted its influence extended. He thought that Dr. Wadsworth's argument was against him. Dr. W. explained. Mr. Burton insisted that our bishops had as much influence with the people as the bishops of any other church. He hoped the amendment would prevail.

Mr. Heard hoped that all would now have an opportunity to explain by taking the vote. Messrs. Fisher and Williams made explanations; after which, on motion of Mr. Cowles, the vote was taken, and the amendment lost. The resolution reported by the committee was then adopted, and the conference accordingly fixed on three as the number of additional bishops to be elected.

Bishop Soule then announced the following committee on the Chartered Fund: Dr. Wightman, Dr. Early, Dr. W. A. Smith, Dr. Green and Dr. Parsons.

After which conference adjourned, with the benediction by Bishop Soule.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

LIFE OF BISHOP McKENDREE.

On Tuesday, the 16th inst., the proceedings of the General Conference were rendered peculiarly interesting, from the introduction of a resolution by Dr. Green, of Tennessee, proposing to raise a committee to inquire into the propriety of adopting measures for preparing a biography of the late Bishop McKendree, and to collect materials for a future biography of Bishop Soule. Bishop McKendree's last days were passed in Tennessee, and in Nashville his dust lies. With Dr. Green he was on terms of intimacy greater than usually obtains between the old and young. It was to him that Bishop McKendree said, when dying, those memorable words: "All is well."

With the biographies of these two venerable men is involved the materials of the only true and valuable history of American Methodism. [illegible] they are lost irreparably. When the matter was before the Conference, Bishop Soule, by request, rose to a few remarks. They may be interesting, not only for what they are, but for the speaker's sake, whose last speech will, at some day not far off, be heard. A friend noted down the speech, verbatim—a thing easily done from its slow and distinct delivery. The Bishop said:

It will be recollected that I was requested to preach the funeral sermon of Bishop McKendree by the General Conference of 1836. It will be recollected that I was requested to publish that sermon—which I did. It will be recollected that the General Conference also requested me to write a life of Bishop McKendree, both because I was intimately connected with my venerable friend in his last labors, and because by his last will all his papers were left to me.

I had no objection to write a life of Bishop McKendree, and I am free to say that I would have been glad to do it if the General Conference had placed me in a position so that I could have done it in a manner worthy of Bishop McKendree and worthy of the Church. But, in order to this, it was indispensable that I should have time. I perceived that the life of Bishop McKendree would embrace the history of the Methodist Church in the United States, and I was unwilling to enter upon the work with any other view.

To travel at large, and to superintend the temporal and spiritual interests of the Church, and do this, was impossible. It was necessary that I should have granted me time. This was not done; consequently, I did not enter on that work. I did, therefore, nothing more than to arrange the papers of my venerable friend—selecting papers and correcting dates.

After I returned from Europe; as, you know that I went there by authority of the General Conference, as the Representative of the Methodist Church in this country to the Wesleyan connection in Great Britain. After I returned, I was asked how the life of Bishop McKendree was progressing. To this I answered substantially as I have stated here; and I said to the subsequent General Conference that it was not possible for me to write this life, as it ought to be written, on steamboats, on stages, on horseback, on the decks of ships, while traveling in Europe and America. It was out of the question—I would not attempt it. But, still, no arrangement was made! Consequently, I did not enter upon this work, and have not to this [illegible] and, for some years past, I have been unable to do it. I am too old: "The keepers of the house do tremble." Even if my intellectual [illegible] were adequate to the task—which I seriously doubt—my physical ability is not. I can not read without film coming over my sight; even when I use the best glasses I can get, there is a film over the whole.

But [illegible] insurmountable difficulty is, that my hands tremble. I can hardly write sufficiently to conduct my correspondence with my friends. Frequently, in writing, I have to hold my right hand with the left. Under [illegible] is impossible for me [illegible] to state [illegible] know that [illegible] of the life of [illegible] was necessarily connected, in its most important events we stood intimately related, and we had to act together. In the latter part of Bishop McKendree's life he moved about feebly. I was with him in his journeys, driving his carriage, some of you know. And, from this period to the end of his life, he was engaged in some very important correspondence with certain parties, touching his official acts. He was not in a state of health to answer this correspondence. A number of the letters I wrote myself for Bishop McKendree.

And, I here tender to this General Conference the papers which were made mine by his last will, on condition that the committee asked for, shall be made; and, should the publication be made, that all the proceeds, over and above the cost of publication, shall be appropriated to the great Missionary cause for which the great McKendree lived, and labored, and suffered.

To the Young Men of the Alabama Conference.

I write "unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you." Blessed be God, that I can use this language with a hearty good will. Not that I would insinuate that those tall sons of genius whose heads are near to the frosts of winter, are not strong, or have not the word of God abideg in them." Nay, verily, I would write unto the fathers, but the things of which I speak, they know from the beginning even in the end thereof. But I write to you, young men, because I love the young—because my own heart beats with the warm impulses of the genial spring-time of life—because I know by my own feelings, and my own short experience, the besetments to which we are liable. Not that I assume the part of adviser and counsellor to you, brethren, for God knows I would learn of the "more excellent way" from the lowliest child of God; yea, here I delight, to find the deepest wisdom, where no adulterated knowledge of carnal wisdom mars the picture of my Saviour in the heart. But I know that the vanities of the world, and the varied instruments of estrangement from God, are thickly and plentifully plied against us, who must stand in responsible stations when our honored Bishops and fathers in Christ shall occupy their little couches of clay in some quiet dell far from the busy scenes of life, or near the noise of traffic and the strife of words in the city cemetery. I know that there are temptations offered to us that are peculiar in many respects, and dangerous to our present and eternal welfare. May God give us strength to escape every besetment, and keep to the old, well measured pathe of Methodism!

Excuse me, brethren, for taking the liberty to single you out. One of your number, whom I love in the faith, requested me to address you upon several points—to him I write especially, but unto all, as we are fellow-laborers in Christ Jesus.

You have doubtless felt oftentimes, since the Holy Ghost called yen to the Ministry, an ardent, burning thirst for usefulness—nay, it is even now the burden of your prayers—Lord make me a zealous, useful minister of the Cross! Nor do you fall sometimes to reflect upon yourselves, because of your want of zeal and means to do good, or because you are not successful in accomplishing these designs. You have wondered why you were not useful to that extent which you have reason to believe is both a privilege and duty. Conscious of our own rectitude and sincerity, we may have our faith well nigh shipwrecked by looking long for the fruit of our labors without seeing it. And whilst I would not grieve you, brethren, I cannot fail to caution you against a very common, and yet a very fatal philosophy, that sometimes operates with subtle power against our full discharge of duty, and most especially against that longing earnestness of spirit, that holy thiret for usefulness which should ever characterize us. You and I have heard, and have perhaps been comforted by the intelligence, that a faithful ministry is not always crowned with immediate fruit—that one may sow, and another reap—that a man cannot always see the result of his labors—souls may be converted hereafter who may trace their conviction to your labors. All this may be true—I would not question it; but there is danger in it. There is danger, that at the approach of disappointment, or even of ministerial trial, you will lay the flattering unction to your souls—I shall see the fruit after a while, or I have sown, another shall reap, and through these means you relapse into a state of security that may well nigh rob you, not only of your crown of rejoicing, but also of the crown of life. Be not deceived upon this point; it is your privilege, nay, your indispensable duty, to know that you are not laboring in vain in the Lord. You will not thus labor in vain; it is not probable that you will find a case of thorough faithfulness in the minister that is not rewarded by immediate fruit in the people. It may be, but do not make your own case that possible exception. Wrestle, strive for the mastery over yourselves; pray for the abundant Spirit among your people; you will not fail.

Again, let me caution you against another dangerous error to which we are all alike disposed—seeking familiarity with men in order to win them to Christ. Shun no man's company if ordinary circumstances admit, lest you gain prejudices without sufficient cause; but you need not seek the companionship of the wicked, even to do them good, unless you have before you the plainest, strongest, most undoubted reasons. Beware, that the leaven in you be not displaced by the very persons for whom you entertained such generous and disinterested friendship. Be cautious with that ungodly friend who professes high esteem for you; he may desire no evil against you, and as the world views it, may be your friend, yet he may betray you, and accomplish your downfall. Your straight-forward, consistent course and pious walk will accomplish a thousand times more with him than any number of free-and-easy fireside conversations, in which religion is seldom noticed, or made the object of mere mental observation. Do not imagine that you can win men by becoming familiar with them, and occasionally softening a sentiment in your creed, or in your sermons, out of respect to your kind host, or worthy friend, at whose house you may be entertained. There is room for much reflection here, but I leave you to it.

But you may ask the question—how shall we make ourselves useful? By observing two points of infinite importance: live holy, and preach holiness to the people. You need not make this subject a hobby, and yet you may keep it constantly before the people. Suffer no occasion to pass without directly recommending this grace. Lift the veil from the hearts of carnal professors, and let them see their woeful state. Let them know that there is a meaning in that text, "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His. And if Christ be in you the body is dead because of sin, but the Spirit is life because of righteousness." "And holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." Let no man sleep in his sins under your ministry. Make no exemptions, but wield the sword of the Spirit right and left; let it strike where it may, drive it to the point; and if there is a disposition to resist, strike again; give a more vigorous blow; divide rightly, prudently, but firmly, the sword of truth. Remember the words of that eminent revivalist of the present age—Do not only strike the iron when it is hot, but if you find it cold, strike it till you make it hot. Above all, brethren, look to the Spirit to do the work. Let not your minds be tossed by that vain conceit, that a sermon read from the pulpit will serve the purpose of the Spirit of God. Follow this rule and you cannot fail; study, meditate, pray, prepare, as if these were your only helps, before you enter the pulpit; but after you get there, rely upon the Spirit as implicitly as if you were a stranger to your subject. God will infallibly aid you, and speak through you there. Let it not be said that the Methodist ministry has resolved itself into a set of Spiritual telegraphs, that have the Spirit moving their pens instead of their lips. What if you do fail now and then? A sensible congregation will like you all the better for that, for it will always keep you humble, and that is to all the crowning grace in a minister's character.

But beware, my brethren, of that mischievous spirit of progress, falsely so called, which strikes at the heart of Methodism. Never dare to utter a word that may nourish a distate for class-meetings; for remember, when these are no more, the glory will have departed from Israel. The great enemy of our holy religion will then have reason to raise a fiendish shout of joy. So far from this, recommend them, meet them, regulate them, nay, enforce that rule against delinquents. You may lose some members by this latter course, but I apprehend a microscope could not find the piety excluded by it. If it be true, that our members do not believe in them, then they are no longer Methodists, and have no right to remain among us; they ought not to do so. Let your motto be—"Holiness to the Lord." Shun every place of social meeting among your friends where your religion is cramped. Speak freely of the dealings of God with your own soul, on all proper occasions; fathom your own heart, and you will not miss the hearts of others.

Above all, brethren, let us search for the old paths; let us follow Wesley, Fletcher, Asbury; let us cling tenaciously to primitive usages, and pray God to stay the tide of innovation, before we shall be buried in the darkness of our own seeking, and grope our way down to the regions of forgetfulness. Methodism is in no danger if we are true to her, but if we forsake first principles, our power is lost. Let no Delilah win you from Christ; betray not the secret of your strength; let your Nazaritish locks be seen, if necessary, but never be found asleep upon the knees of pleasure, or you will be bound with fetters of brass, and grind in the prison-house even whilst the world pretends to honor you. Let this year be one of peculiar devotion, and peculiar trials will follow; but they will give way to more glorious triumphs, and our Master will be had in house by the faithfulness of such worms as we feel ourselves to be. May the Spirit of God bless you exceedingly, abundantly, more than we are able to ask or think! Amen.

THE LIVES OF THE WESLEYS.—This work contains 572 pages, 12mo., closely printed matter—type rather too small for pleasant reading. It purports to be "The Life of the Rev. John Wesley, M. A.;—collected from his private papers and printed works; and written at the request of his executors." To which is prefixed some account of his ancestors and relations; with the life of the Rev. Charles Wesley, M. A.; collected from his private journal, and never before published. The whole forming a history of Methodism, in which the principles and economy of Methodists are unfolded: By John Whitehead, M. D., author of the discourse delivered at Mr. Wesley's funeral. The book is a reprint of the London edition of 1793. It contains many interesting facts and documents; some, perhaps, not found in the standard works of the Wesleyan Connection. This book cannot be recognized as Wesleyan. It has no connectional endorsement, and the views of the author on some important points of economy and government are all at war with the settled usage and policy of Methodism. Burnett & Bostwick, New Orleans, 1854.

MIRROR OF THE SOUL; or, Spiritual things discerned: By a Christian lady. This appears to be a profitable little book, altogether taken up with matters of every day and experimental religion. It has more experience than many class-meetings, and abounds in the practical didactics of the pulpit. We have not time to examine the work as we would. It is neither prosy nor light, but well sustained in interest. To those who truly hunger and thirst after righteousness, it will prove a blessing indeed. Burnett & Bostwick, New Orleans, 1854.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT—To Hon. John Perkins, for message and documents—Part 3, 1853-4.

REV. JOHN ANDREWS.—On Wednesday morning, the 24th inst., an old gentleman of this name, about 60 years of age, fell through the hatchway of the steamboat Unicorn, and was instantly killed. He was a citizen of Budville, Tarrant county, Texas. The deceased is supposed to have been a Methodist local preacher. He had a considerable quantity of freight on the boat, and was preparing for his return home. The Coroner held an inquest upon the body, and a verdict of "came to his death by injuries received on the head, causing concussion of the brain." He had some $400, in gold, on his person, and the daguerreotypes of two females, supposed to be his wife and daughter. The body was placed in a metallic coffin, and enclosed in a vault. The body and effects of the deceased are held for the disposal of his friends and family.

MISSIONARY MEETINGS AT COLUMBUS.—Meetings for the advancement of the Missionary cause were held on the nights of the 17th and 18th May. The speakers of the first night were Drs. Sehon and Taylor; of the second, P. Boring and Bishop Soule. We append the Bishop's remarks.

The collection was about five hundred dollars.

REMARKS OF BISHOP SOULE.

It would give me great pleasure to respond to the call made upon me this evening, in a speech of half an hour or more, if circumstances admitted. I have SEEN California, and cordially endorse every word that has been uttered by Dr. Boring. I have traveled in California as extensively as any other man in the same space of time. It is the finest country I ever saw. When I have surveyed her magnificent bay, her splendid rivers, her prolific mining regions, and their relations she bears to other parts of the world, I am almost inclined to wish I were young again. I declare unto you that I am willing to go to California again. There is a wicked people in California. I long to struggle with the powers of darkness there. I would grasp California in one hand and China in the other.

This is as much as I will say upon this subject at the present time. On another occasion it may be proper for me to give you my views in reference to California at great length. I again endorse all that Dr. Boring has said this evening. He has not too highly colored the resources and relations of California.

Dr. George F. Pierce was then introduced to the audience, but on account of the lateness of the hour, declined to address the meeting.

A collection for Missionary purposes was then taken up, and the meeting adjourned. We learn that the amount raised did not exceed five hundred dollars.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

THIRTEENTH DAY—MAY 15.

Conference met at 9 o'clock, Bishop Andrew in the chair, and was opened with religious exercises by Mr. McMahon.

After the reading of the journal, on motion of Mr. Derman, the resolution asking for a committee on the chartered fund was reconsidered, and it was withdrawn.

Mr. Slater, reserve delegate from Tennessee, took the place of Dr. McFerrin, who was compelled to leave on account of severe family affliction.

Dr. Green announced the lamented death of Mrs. McFerrin: and Mr. Owen presented the following resolutions, which were, by a rising vote, adopted:

Whereas, it has been announced to us that God, in his infinite wisdom, hath seen fit to remove by death, on the 28th of April, the wife of our brother, the Rev. Stephen Carlile, of the Arkansas Conference, while he was on the way to take his place in this General Conference; and whereas the sad tidings has also reached us of the sudden decease, on Thursday the 11th inst., of the wife of our brother, the Rev. John B. McFerrin, D. D., of the Tennessee Conference, another member of this body; and whereas, this cloud of mortal affliction hath settled upon their homes, while, in the spirit of true devotion, they were engaged in the service of God and his Church; and believing, as we do, that we must all, sooner or later, in some sacrificial manner, have fellowship with the Divine Saviour in Gethsemane, and relying upon the blessed promise, that as "the sufferings of Christ abound in us," so shall the consolation also; therefore,

Resolved, That while we reverently bow to these dispensations of Divine Providence, we will invoke the merciful care of God to be exercised over the desolate households of our bereaved brothers.

Resolved further, That while we tender to brothers Carlile and McFerrin the affectionate expression of our Christian condolence and sympathy, we will also pray to God that they may be supported in this, the hour of their affliction.

A motion of Mr. Evans to suspend the regular business in order to proceed at once to the election of three Bishops having failed, it was resolved, on motion of Mr. Deems, that hereafter the order of the day shall immediately follow the call for reports, petitions and such resolutions as, without discussion, are intended to be referred at once to appropriate committees.

Mr. McMahon, from the Mission Committee, presented report No. 1, of which two items were adopted, and the remainder laid on the table.

He also presented report No. 2, which was, after some discussion, withdrawn.

Dr. Stevenson presented a resolution of the Louisville Conference in reference to the location of a Book Concern, which was laid on the table for the present.

Mr. Cowles presented a petition from the 2d M. Dinwiddie Conference, Va., in reference to preachers' salaries. Referred to committee on Revivals.

Dr. W. A. Smith presented a similar paper from Scottsville Conference, Va., which was similarly referred.

Also, a resolution instructing the committee on Itineracy to inquire into the propriety of some regulations in the appointment of a preacher as Chaplain for R. M. College. Referred to a committee on Itinerancy.

Dr. Parsons offered a resolution instructing the Book Committee to inquire into the expediency of adopting pre-payment system in reference to our periodicals, which was so referred.

Dr. Lee offered a resolution in reference to the better preparing candidates for the Ministry. Referred to the committee on Education.

Mr. Alexander offered a resolution in reference to a Book Depository in Galveston. Mr. Allen offered a substitute; both of which were referred to the committee on Books and Periodicals.

Mr. Scruggs presented a petition from Huntsville, Ala., on the subject of Boundaries. Referred to the committee on Boundaries.

Mr. Harris presented a petition from sundry persons in Memphis, Tenn., on the subject of locating the Book Concern.

Mr. McAnally presented a similar petition from St. Louis.

Mr. Glenn presented a similar one from Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Evans a similar one from Athens, Ga.

Dr. Green a similar one from Nashville.

All of which were read and laid on the table for the present.

Dr. Green, after some explanations, submitted a preamble and resolution proposing to raise a committee to inquire into the propriety of adopting measures for preparing the biography of the late Bishop McKendree; also, to collect the materials for a future biography of Bishop Soule.

At the request of the mover, Bishop Soule explained why he had not been able to write the life of Bishop McKendree, agreeably to the request of the General Conference of 1836. He was satisfied the biography of Bishop McKendree, written as it ought to be, would enhance in the main the history of the M. E. Church in the United States; and for such a work, the General Conference had never given him time—without which he could not possibly perform it; and he had ever been unwilling to undertake it unless there should be a prospect of completing it as it should be done. Now, he was physically unable to do it. Besides, there were in the matter some points of delicacy. He had been identified with Bishop McKendree in many important movements relating to the Church.

This delicacy, together with other things, made it impossible for him to do the work. The Bishop then tendered to this Conference all the papers which, by will, had fallen into his hands, with the distinct understanding that all the net proceeds which might arise from the publication and sale of the Life of Bishop McKendree, be appropriated to the benefit of the Missions of the Church, to which Missions, Bishop McKendree devoted his life.

The resolution was adopted, and the number fixed at five for said committee.

Mr. Garrett presented a memorial from sundry persons in Mobile, asking that Mobile be placed in the same category with New Orleans in reference to the stationing of preachers.

Mr. Heard stated, that from intelligence he had received, there were adverse feelings among the people in Mobile on the subject.

The memorial was entertained, and referred to the committee on Itineracy.

Dr. Patton presented a petition from sundry persons in the Florida Conference, in reference to the boundary of said Conference; which was referred to the committee on Boundaries.

Dr. Hamilton presented a resolution in reference to a Book Depository in New Orleans, and the N. O. Christian Advocate; which was referred to the Book Committee.

Mr. Paine presented a resolution in reference to the manner of licensing preachers; which was referred to the committee on Revisals.

Mr. Rosser offered a resolution in reference to class-meetings, making the rules more stringent; which was referred to the same committee.

Mr. Deems offered a resolution referring to the publishing and sale of books on the cash system. Referred to the Book committee.

Also one referring to the restrictive articles in the discipline; which was referred to the committee on Itinerancy.

Mr. Dorman presented a resolution from the Alabama Conference, disapproving an appropriation made during the last year by the managers of the missionary society for the benefit of a Church in Washington city; which was referred to the committee on Missions.

Dr. Stevenson presented a resolution for the relief of R. C. Hatten, of Mo., which was referred to the committee on Books.

On motion, the resolution of Dr. W. A. Smith, proposing to make the Bishops a coordinate branch of the government of the Church, was taken up.

Dr. Smith explained the object of the resolution. The Bishops now had—and on one occasion had exercised—a veto power; he wanted such power acknowledged and restricted by the law of the Church.

The resolution was amended so as to be referred to the committee on Episcopacy, instead of a special committee; and thus referred.

Mr. P. P. Smith offered a resolution in regard to Annual Conferences appointing Presidents in the absence of a Bishop; which was laid on the table by the motion of Mr. Alexander.

Mr. Hicks offered a resolution in reference to the distribution of the dividends coming to us from the New York and Cincinnati Book Concerns; which was referred to the committee on Books; also one in reference to the endowment fund for the Literary Institutions under the patronage of the Church, which was referred to the committee on Education.

Dr. Henkle offered a resolution in reference to the trial of Bishops. Referred to the committee on Episcopacy.

Mr. Ralston moved that the question of locating the Book Concern be made the order of the day for to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the journal. An ineffectual motion was made to lay on the table. And before action,

Conference adjourned, with the benediction by Bishop Andrew.

FOURTEENTH DAY—MAY 16.

Conference met at the usual hour. Bishop Andrew in the chair, and was opened by divine service by Mr. Johnson.

After reading the journals, Thos. Johnson of the St. Louis Conference, appeared and took his seat.

Bishop Paine announced the following committee on the lives of Bishops McKendree and Soule, ordered yesterday: Drs. Wightman, Green, Doggett, Drake and Stevenson.

The question of fixing the location of the Book Concern was then taken up.

Bishop Soule suggested that it would be respectful in the Conference to hear any representations from gentlemen sent with petitions from any points soliciting the location.

On motion of Mr. McAnally, it was resolved that all such persons be invited to take seats within the bar, and represent in person or by proxy, the claims of their respective localities.

Prattville, Ala., was then called, and Dr. Hamilton stated the advantages possessed and offered by this locality. Danl. Pratt, Esq., was introduced by the Bishop, and made some remarks.

A communication from the City Council of Columbus, Ga., on the subject was read, tendering certain privileges of land and exemption from taxation; which was laid on the table for the present.

A motion of Dr. Early, regulating the order of discussing the question, prevailed.

Dr. Parsons represented Louisville. During his remarks the fifteen minutes' rule was suspended. After laying down some general principles, he enlarged on the elements necessary to the prosperity of the Concern, such as commercial facilities, manufacturing capabilities, foundries, and the like. They had no memorial from Louisville, but it was because the intrinsic merits of the place he represented were such as to render unnecessary any thing of the sort. He briefly reviewed the position of Atlanta, Prattville, St. Louis, Memphis and Nashville, showing objections to each, and closed by exhibiting the advantages possessed by Louisville.

On motion of Mr. Crouch, resolved, that when the Conference adjourn, it adjourn to meet at 3 o'clock, P. M.

Dr. Early moved that the order of the day be suspended till this afternoon, to allow the transaction of other business.

On motion of Mr. Burton, it was resolved that the committee on Books and Periodicals be instructed to consider and report some plan by which the talent of the Church, South, may be employed in producing such tracts, books, etc., as the Church demands.

Mr Walker presented a resolution proposing an alteration of the discipline in reference to the collections for the American Bible Society. Laid on the table according to rule.

On motion of Dr. Lee, Conference adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met at 3 o'clock, Bishop Paine in the chair, divine service by Mr. Garrett.

After the minutes were read, the order of the day was resumed, and Mr. Harris represented the interests of Memphis. He referred to the manufacturing facilities, the health, the commerce, the navigation, railroad improvements, and other advantages presented by the city of Memphis.

Mr. Hogue, of St. Louis, was then introduced to the Conference, and delivered an interesting and very forcible address in reference to a location of the Book Concern at St. Louis.

After which, on motion, the Conference adjourned.

Mr. Morton, of Athens, Ga., a representative from that town, addressed the conference, recommending strongly the claims of Georgia for the Book Concern: but withdrawing the claims of Athens, under existing circumstances.

Dr. L. Pierce presented the claims of Columbus, Ga. He maintained that so great, growing and glorious is the West: so expansive its energies; so gigantic its prospects, that in eight years a Book Concern west of the Mississippi will become absolutely necessary. He, therefore, thought that, at the present time, Georgia was the proper place for such a concern.

Dr. Stevenson took the floor and addressed the conference in a speech replete with statistical information, and in favor of Louisville.

On motion of Mr. Johnson, conference then adjourned.

SIXTEENTH DAY—MAY 18.

Conference convened at the usual hour, Bishop Paine in the chair; divine service by Mr. Randle.

After reading the journal, the chair called for petitions, reports, etc.

Dr. Early presented a report of the committee on episcopacy, respecting the transfer of preachers from one annual conference to another, which, according to the rule, was laid on the table for one day.

General Intelligence.

The Gaines Suit Not Ended.—It is known that the talented, indefatigable and heroic widow of the late Gen. Gaines arrived in this city a few days since. We have ascertained the object of her visit.

In the suit instituted by her a few years ago, she claimed as heir-at-law of her alleged father, Daniel Clark, and also as legatee under the will of 1813, said to have been destroyed. Some doubt arising about the jurisdiction of any other than the Probate Courts of Louisiana in relation to the legacy under the will, her claim in the name thereof was abandoned, and she relied solely upon her rights as heir-at-law. In this she was unsuccessful; but the Supreme Court in its decision suggested the expediency of her reporting to the Probate Court, with a view to the probate of the missing will. This she has determined to do; and in so doing she is encouraged by an elaborately written opinion of Judge Campbell, of the U. S. Supreme Court, concurred in by that eminent jurist, Gen. Walter Jones, of Washington, Geo. Wood, Esq., and Judge Kent, of New York, and a great number of other distinguished lawyers,) that the evidences at hand, and which is beyond the reach of accident or fraud, of the execution and destruction of the will of 1813, is overwhelming, and is upon this important document that she bases her immense claims.

Immense Loss of Life.

The steamship Pampero, Capt. Flanders, from San Juan the evening of the 17th, arrived at this port yesterday afternoon, bringing 232 passengers and $500,000 in specie.

Max Strobell, assistant of Col. Fremont, with eleven Delaware Indians who were in Col. Fremont's exploring party, came passengers on the Pampero.

The Northern Light left San Juan for New York on the evening of the 17th, with 800 passengers and $1,200,000 in gold. Among her passengers were Col. Fremont, Maj. Borland, U. S. Minister to Central America, J. Scirlman, Sam Brannan, and Dr. Peter Smith.

A revolution had broken out in Nicaragua. The insurgents had taken the town of Redlejo, and were fast overspreading the country.

Gen. Don Munoz, Governor of Nicaragua, had left and gone to Costa Rica.

The city of San Salvador was nearly destroyed by an earthquake on the 9th inst. Five thousand persons were killed.

A difficulty occurred on the San Juan River, between Capt Smith, of the Company's steamer Routh, and the native Captain of a bungo, which resulted in the death of the native.

On his arrival alongside the steamship, an armed force from Greytown came over to arrest him, but did not succeed, as they had no authority over an American steamship, and he refused to give himself up.

Major Borland, the U. S Minister to Central America, had come down passenger, and, on his arrival at the American Consulate, was arrested by an armed force and taken to the guard-house, where he remonstrated, and represented to them the consequences. They replied that they were acting under authority.

However, he was released by the Mayor, Mr Segua, a mob collected around the house, and a melee ensued, in which he received a wound in the cheek from a broken bottle thrown from the crowd. The soldiers were up all night.

On the morning of the 17th, Mr. Falin, the American Consul, came on board the steamship, and, on his return to his Consulate, was ordered off, and fired at by the soldiers. The Minister and Consul then proceeded to Punta Arenas.

Great excitement prevailed on the steamers. The Californians were for taking the town and releasing the Minister, but were anticipated by the timely action of the authorities.

Fearing some further difficulty when the steamers left, Major Borland raised a company of returned Californians from the Pampero and Northern Light to remain at the Point for the protection of the Consul and the Company's buildings, etc. He enlisted sixty men, paying them $30 bounty, and $100 per month, and insuring them a free passage home when discharged.

He then proceeded on the Northern Light to New York, to lay the whole matter before the U. S. Government.

The company purchased a number of revolvers, guns, etc., from the Northern Light's passengers. Several of those on the Pampero also left their arms.

The force at the Point is under the command of G. Fletcher.

Great excitement prevailed when these steamers sailed. Major Borland addressed the passengers from the deck of the Pampero, and, if necessary, could have raised a regiment.

The number of sugar-houses in operation in Louisiana during the late crop, was 1448; of these, 956 were worked by steam-power, and 481 by animal power; and their produce amounted to 449,321 hogsheads, estimated at 495,156,000 pounds. The quantity of molasses produced is estimated at 31,000,000 gallons.

Education in Alabama.—According to the Montgomery Times, there are over 120,000 boys and girls in that State, of which number over 81,000 do not attend school. There are, it says, in the State, 31,000 men and women who cannot read or write.

High Heels.—The Home Journal—to a certain extent a text book of fashion and health—regards the high heels which ladies are beginning to wear in New York, as one round, at least, in the ladder of health. It also suggests the insertion of an India rubber sole—no matter how thin—between the outer and inner sole.

The Ship Winchester.—The ship Winchester, lost at sea, was owned by Wm. F. Weld & Co. of Boston. She was of 1500 tons burthen, 7 years old, and valued at $80,000, and was fully insured. She was chartered by Enoch Train & Co., who were heavily insured on the cargo. The whole loss is upwards of $200,000.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Louisiana, from Galveston, we have received late Texas papers. The Galveston News of the 19th instant says:

We are glad to announce that we are now having rain in abundance. It commenced yesterday with a shower of hail, covering the streets, and was followed by rain, which still continues. We hope, and indeed there is good reason to believe, this rain extends far up the country. After many contradictory reports there is now hardly any doubt that our rivers are at last navigable. A telegraphic dispatch was yesterday received, stating a rise of eight feet at Cincinnati.

Chase of the Indians.—The Galveston News states that immediately upon the reception of the news of the late Indian massacre at Fort Elwell, Sergeant McNally, of the Mounted Rifles, was dispatched with an efficient detachment of men in pursuit of the marauders. They soon struck their trail, and followed it as rapidly as possible. Indeed, so rapid and determined was this pursuit, that Sergeant McNally and his command, in order to rid themselves of every incumbrance that they could possibly dispense with, threw away their rifles, and leaving five of their jaded horses behind, went ahead with no other arms but their revolvers. By these means Sergeant McNally succeeded in overtaking the Indians, who, finding themselves so hotly pursued, abandoned their booty, and even their own horses and entire equipage, and fled, disorderly and precipitately, into the dense fastnesses of a neighboring chaparral. All the Rifles which had been captured by the Indians from the Government train, together with all their own horses, guns, bows and arrows, buffalo-rungs, lassos, paint, and general equipage, fell into the hands of the intrepid McNally and his determined followers.

Another Fight with the Indians.—The News, of the 19th, says:

We learn from Drs Williams and Johns, U. S. A., who arrived in our city yesterday morning, from the West, that a pretty severe and obstinate engagement recently took place near Lake Trinidad, about forty-five miles West of Corpus Christi, between Lieut. Cosby, of the Mounted Rifles, with ten men, and a party of Lipan Indians, numbering from 35 to 40 warriors.

When Lieut Cosby came upon the Indians, they had just killed three Mexicans, and were in the act of mounting their horses, to leave the ground where they had perpetrated those murders. Lieut. Cosby gallantly charged upon them, and a desperate and sanguinary conflict ensued, which continued, without intermission, for about a half hour; during which Lieut. C was severely wounded in the arm, and had his clothing pierced in many places by arrows. One arrow pierced a porte monnaie, in the pocket of his pants, and, had it not been for a quantity of gold in the porte monnaie, which arrested the impetus of the arrow, he unquestionably would have lost his life. Lieut. Cosby fought with the most admirable coolness and determined courage, until his ammunition was completely exhausted; when he ordered his men to disperse and form again on Lake Trinidad. The Indians also left the ground about the same time, carrying off their dead and wounded.

In this fight Lieut. Cosby had a sergeant and one private killed, and one missing, supposed to be killed. Of the Indians, it is certain that four were killed, but the number of wounded was not ascertained, as they were all, as before stated, borne off from the field. In this fight Lieut. Cosby's command succeeded in capturing ten horses from the Indians; all of which they had previously stolen from the settlements on the Nueces and Lower Rio Grande.

From the accounts we have received of the conduct of Lieut. Cosby and his valorous little command, on this trying occasion, there can be no doubt that they all behaved themselves in such a manner as should elicit the admiration and thanks of their country, and the warm sentiments of gratitude from their countrymen, along the hitherto exposed and bleeding frontiers of Western Texas.

The Indians were instantly pursued by Lieut R. Jones, of the Rifles, with as efficient force. They did not succeed in overtaking the Indians, but pushed them so closely that they were compelled to abandon twenty horses (which they were driving) in order to facilitate their flight, and make sure their escape. These horses were driven in by Lieut. Jones.

The Metagorda Tribune says, that a plot, among some half dozen leading geniuses of the negro population, to escape, has been discovered, and the negroes brought to their senses by striking arguments addressed to them in the jail.

The Houston Telegraph says:

Scarcely a week elapses that we are not called on to record a homicide perpetrated in this section of the State. A few days ago a man named Odum deliberately shot down an unarmed German named Suhr, residing on Buffalo Bayou. We have before noticed the occurrence, but without comment. It seems that Suhr penned some cows, by permission of the owner, as he alleged, and Odum, who also claimed authority to put them up, turned the calves out of Suhr's pen. The latter went over, to see Odum about it, and the altercation that ensued resulted in the cold-blooded and unprovoked murder of Suhr.

The Telegraph, after commenting upon the frequency of murders in Texas, and the necessity of stringent measures being adopted to prevent it, says:

We heard Judge Buckley, in a very able and just charge to the grand jury of this county, recently, say, that since he had been on the bench in this district, upwards of ninety persons had been tried for murder, not one of whom had been punished for that crime. In all these cases the parties had either been acquitted, the offence reduced to manslaughter, or if found guilty, they had escaped, or been pardoned by the Governor.

Great Drought on the Rio Grande.—A correspondent of the Galveston News, writing from Rio Grande City, under date of the 30th ult., says:

This country is about to burn up from excessive drought; it has not rained a real good shower here in nearly twelve months, and the river is so low that the steamer Comanche does not think of trying to ascend above Reynosa Nuevy. The crops are entirely destroyed in this vicinity, and the mezes is only to be found green in spots, and very few spots at that.

A fire occurred at Houston on the 14th inst., which destroyed property to the value of $8000. The Brocken House and the residence of Mr. Robert P. Boyce, together with most of their contents, were consumed.

The mansion of General Sidney Sherman, at Harrisonburg, was burned on the 15th inst., with most of the furniture, etc., in it. The loss is considerable.

Reports from various points on the rivers are favorable. The Trinity was reported to be rising rapidly, and was within two or three feet of being in good boating order.

The steamer William Penn while descending the Brazos river struck a snag, near San Felipe and sunk, in fifteen feet water—she was freighted with five hundred bales of cotton, which will be partly saved in a damaged condition—the boat is a total loss.

The Victoria Advocate of the 13th inst. has the following relative to the weather and crops:

The ground has been sufficiently moistened by the recent rains, and the weather continues cloudy and damp. We are informed by the farmers in this vicinity that crops of all kinds are quite forward and give every promise of a satisfactory yield; and the prospects, so far as we can learn, are equally promising in the adjoining counties, and probably throughout the State.

The San Antonio Western Texan notices the passage through San Antonio of several families, consisting of sixty persons in all, in one body, for California, by the overland route. They had strong wagons and good teams, a large number of cattle and horses, and seemed well armed. A large number of trains have passed through San Antonio lately, for the same destination.

The Victoria Advocate of the 13th says:

Last Tuesday, Messrs. McRae and Rankin passed through town with a drove of seven hundred stock cattle and beeves, on their way to California. There were seventeen resolute men in company, all armed with revolvers and other weapons, prepared to fight their way among the Indians if necessary. Several similar companies are on their way, or about to start.

The Nueces Valley newspaper has been sold to Hon. B. F. Neal, of Corpus Christi.

The United States and Spain.

Madrid, Wednesday, April 19, 1854.

The dispute between the Governments of Spain and the United States is the most important event of the day.

On the 20th of last month, Mr. Soulé, who was then in high favor at Court, obtained an amnesty for the remaining prisoners connected with the Lopez expedition against Cuba; soon after which the dispatches respecting the unpleasant affair of the Black Warrior arrived. At first it was confidently asserted that the latter affair had been settled. There is reason to doubt, however, that this is not the case; and letters from Barcelona, Malaga, and Cadiz concur in stating that the parties who were to be set at liberty under the amnesty are still in prison—the Barcelona letter adding that information had been received that private orders had been sent from Madrid not to carry the amnesty into effect.

This change of policy has no doubt arisen from the quarrel about the Black Warrior, which now wears rather an ugly aspect, and which induces me to recapitulate what has passed respecting it, as gathered from a good source, though at the risk of referring to points alluded to in former letters. Mr. Soulé's first note contained the demand for a pecuniary indemnity of $300,000, the dismissal of General Pezuela, and all other officials who had taken part in the seizure of the Black Warrior; and that full powers should be given to the authorities of Cuba to settle future questions of the kind without having to refer them to the Government at Madrid. To this note Senor Calderon de la Barca replied that it would be very difficult to entertain the last point, inasmuch as its concession would be to change the whole system of Spanish colonial policy; and that with respect to the other demands of the United States, the Spanish Government could not enter upon them at present, since they had not received the official dispatches from the Captain-General of Cuba on the subject.

Mr. Soulé replied, in a note couched in stronger language than the first one. He insisted I am told—and quoted the Madrid Gazette, in which the receipt of dispatches from the Captain General of Cuba was acknowledged—that the Spanish Government must be in receipt of the dispatches referred to; and complained strongly that subterfuges of this kind were always resorted to at Madrid, while at Cuba the settlement of questions was always delayed on the pretext that the Captain-General was without instructions. Mr. Soulé gave the Spanish Government forty-eight hours to reply, as he should dispatch his special messenger, Mr. Winslow, at the expiration of that term.

Senor Calderon de la Barca replied in a very strong note, which was accepted at a Council of Ministers held on the subject. It adhered to the former note, and stated that the Government considered the course pursued by Mr Soulé as insulting, and that they would not submit to insult from any foreign Minister. To this Mr Soulé replied that if he had been free from this intention to offer any insult, but merely to state the facts of the case as he believed them to have occurred. In this state the matter stands here; and it remains to be seen what will be done at Washington when the special messenger arrives there. I believe that hopes are entertained that Mr. Crampton, the British Envoy at Washington, may be able to act the part of a friendly mediator in the matter.

[Correspondence of the London Times.]

Madrid, Thursday, April 20, 1854.

Although I have already communicated to you all important particulars of the negotiations that have been gone on with respect to the Black Warrior, it may be desirable, as the affair may possibly prove both tedious and troublesome, that I should furnish a few further details, to enable your readers to trace it from its commencement. It would appear that the misunderstanding up to the present time between Mr Soulé and the Spanish Government, are five in number. No. 1, presented by the American Minister, stated the complaints he had to make, and the atonement he was instructed to demand, and required a positive reply within 48 hours. No. 2, from the Spanish Government, declared its inability to reply to his communication until such time as it should have received information on the subject from the authorities in the island of Cuba. This brought forth No. 3, a most irate and discourteous document from Mr. Soulé, in which he taxed the Spanish Government with seeking excuses to postpone a reply, and, as I am informed, affirmed, or at least insinuated, that the Government had received dispatches from Havana since the affair in question, because advices had been received in Europe since that date from the same quarter.

The terms in which this note was couched were so offensive that the Spanish Minister must have been craven indeed, not to have returned a spirited and indignant answer. Such an one, I am assured, was sent, and so strong was it that the senders thought it not unlikely Mr. Soulé would avail himself of the opportunity to demand his passports, and thus extricate himself from the unpleasant position in which he had found himself since his duel with M Turgot. You are aware, I believe, that since the unfortunate and most uncalled for encounter into which the French Minister was, I may say, dragged by the strange personage whom the United States Government has thought proper to delegate to the Spanish Court, the latter has been looked upon with great coldness here, and has been omitted from all but those official invitations and courtesies which his diplomatic office rendered inevitable. At the Court, it is true, he has been made much of, but it has been well understood that these attentions were suggested by a desire on the part of the high personages who paid them to oust an indirect slight on the Ministers of England and France. To the surprise, however, of its senders, No. 4 note, far from eliciting a furious retort, or a demand for passports, was replied to in terms far milder and more becoming than those of the note that had provoked it; and there the matter rests for the present. I should add (what I perceive I have omitted) that, if my information be correct, dispatches from Havana reached the Spanish Minister just as he was preparing the second note, enabling him, by the information they brought, to give additional strength and completeness to his communication repelling the charges brought against the Colonial Government, rejecting the terms proposed, and vindicating the Cuban officials from any deviation from the Spanish laws and established usages of the Island. The worst they can fairly be accused of, I believe, is a little precipitation in the performance of their duty.

The general feeling here with respect to the conduct of the United States Government and its enemy in this business is, that an attempt is being made to fix a wolf and lamb quarrel on Spain, and that designs on Cuba are at the bottom of these very abrupt measures and exorbitant demands. Without endorsing such an opinion, one can hardly feel surprised at its being entertained by a feeble and jealous nation which has already seen its richest colony invaded by an expedition from the American shores, and which cannot entertain a doubt of the strong desire of America to appropriate Cuba. It is impossible to deny that it shows little generosity in a powerful nation thus peremptorily to demand terms which cannot be granted without the deepest humiliation to the much weaker one with which it finds itself at variance. As for the demand of an indemnity of $300,000, why not ask $3,000,000 or $30,000,000? There would be just as much appearance of reason and right in exacting the one sum as in insisting on the other. It is not an indemnity that is claimed from, but a fine that is imposed upon Spain, because her colonial officers are alleged (but not yet proved) to have mistaken or exceeded their duty. The dismissal of so high a functionary as the Captain-General of Cuba is another exorbitant and unreasonable pretension. As regards the third demand, that the colonial authorities should in future be authorized to settle disputes without reference to Europe, the Spaniards will reply that that is contrary to their system of colonial government, and is, moreover, less than ever necessary, now that steam has so greatly accelerated the communication between the two hemispheres. Without, however, entering further into the discussion of demands which it is hoped the American Government will feel the propriety of abandoning, or at least of greatly modifying, persons disinterested in the matter, and desirous only to see fair play and good harmony between nations, may be permitted to regret that there should not be invariably chosen as the medium of such communications diplomatists whose good temper, urbanity and courtesy would somewhat diminish their unpalatable nature, instead of men who, by a display of the contrary qualities, make the bitter draught difficult to swallow.

Mississippi.—A Duel.—The Whig Statesman, published at Butler, Choctaw County, Ala., states that Con Rea, Esq., editor of the Lauderdale (Miss.) Republican, and Mr. Evans, a lawyer of Marion, Miss., fought a duel on the border of Alabama, on the 13th inst. Rifles, at fifty paces, were used. Three rounds were fired. Rea, we learn, was shot down, perhaps dangerously wounded. The difficulty had its origin in a newspaper quarrel.

Attempted Suicide.—A man named John W. Moore, a citizen of Pauldine, Miss., cut his throat on the 10th inst., almost from ear to ear. He was under the joint influence of liquor and laudanum, when he did so. A few months since, under a similar state of excitement, he abandoned his home and fled to the woods, where he was found raving and in a state of entire nudity. The wounds inflicted by himself on the 10th, were not immediately fatal, though it is hardly probable that he can live long. He was a carpenter by trade, and had been a preacher of the gospel.

Mr. Rozier W. Davis, a highly esteemed citizen of Quitman, was assaulted on the night of the 8th inst., by a man named Brownhill, connected with a menagerie exhibiting in that place. He was struck on the back of the head three times with a sling-shot or "colt," fracturing his skull so that it was thought he could not survive. Brownhill fled.

Louisiana.—Mr Surget's negro man, William Hardin, was executed at Vidalia, in Concordia Parish, on the 19th inst., for the murder of the two white men, Ender and Miller, in April last.

The Concordia Intelligencer learns of the prevalence of Asiatic cholera on several plantations on the Black and Tensas rivers, within twenty miles of Vidalia.

The Concordia Intelligencer of the 19th has the following in reference to the weather and crops in that region:

"The first half of the month of May has been decidedly pluvial, drenching the cotton fields like a deluge, and causing quite as good a growth of weeds and grass as of young cotton. It did not let away by a flushing at sun on Wednesday morning, and now the plows and hoes are busily engaged in killing the grass and perfecting the stand of cotton. Many vast fields of corn are as high as a tall man's shoulders."

Louisiana.—The Echo of Lafayette says a difficulty occurred in that parish a few days since between Jean Thibodaux and Germain Bonquinet, upon which the latter stabbed the former, inflicting upon him a wound of which he is expected to die.

The Pointe Coupee Echo says of the crops in that parish:

Owing to the superabundance of rain that fell last week, the cotton in this parish does not present the most promising appearance. The corn though a little backward, looks well. As to the cane, we do not think that we have ever seen the plant cane and rattoons in a finer condition for the season. The crops will not stand in need of rain for some weeks.

Alabama.—Duncan Brown, an overseer on the plantation of Mr. Harrison, near Hynesville, in Lowndes county, was waylaid one night last week and shot, while returning home from a neighbor's plantation.

The Montgomery Mail, of the 19th, speaking of the crops in Chambers county, says the crops of cotton, corn, oats and wheat, in that county are promising. It says: "All of these, considering the unfavorable spring, are doing wonderfully well: the oats crop, especially, giving promise of a most abundant yield. Fruit, too, to our astonishment, is likely to be plentiful; peach-trees, being generally sufficiently burthened with young fruit, while apples are 'too thick to thrive.'"

There are now in jail at Selma three white men awaiting trial for murder, and three negroes charged with a like crime.

Crops in Florida.—The Tallahassee Sentinel of the 18th says:

We have been informed by a number of friends in this county, and a few out of it, that the crops here and hereabouts are rather backward, but upon the whole quite as promising, and in many instances, even more so, than they were up to this date last year.

Illinois Wheat Crop.—The season is now so far advanced that growers can judge, with much accuracy, what are the prospects of the approaching wheat crop; and the accounts which reach us from all parts of the State give promise of a full and bountiful harvest. We learn from one of our millers, who has just returned from a tour throughout this part of the State, that he has never seen finer wheat fields any where, and that, if nothing intervenes to cut off the promised yield, the crop will exceed all calculation. We shall not be surprised if Illinois shall this year take her place, next to Ohio, as the second wheat growing State in the Union. [Alton Telegraph, 15th.

Mr. Fillmore and "Henry Long."—We learn from the Atlanta Intelligencer that, during the recent visit of Mr. Fillmore to that place, among the servants who waited upon him at the Atlanta Hotel, was the famous Henry Long, who, it will be remembered, was the first fugitive slave delivered up under the act of 1850, and at whose trial in New York there was raised so great an excitement. Henry was considerably elated at the idea of serving his Excellency.

Another Enterprise.—The St. Louis Intelligencer of the 17th says:

We learn that the managers of the Great Central Michigan, and the Central Illinois roads, have united in an endeavor to establish and build a line of steamers between New Orleans and Cairo—the mouth of the Ohio. Mr Lester Colton, an enterprising gentleman, connected with the railroad lines, has been in our city and vicinity, and either contracted or is about to contract for a low pressure boat of the largest dimensions, in the construction of which speed, safety and comfort will be the main features.

Five Hundred Souls Rescued from a Sinking Ship.—New York, May 14.—The steamer Washington reached quarantine last night, and arrived up at noon. She brings 240 passengers and a full cargo.

The Washington also brings the passengers and crew, about five hundred souls, taken from the ship Winchester, bound from Liverpool to Boston. She was wrecked in the frightful gale of the 13th of April, and had been in a crippled condition, kept from sinking by constant labor at the pumps. The Washington fell in with her on the 20 inst., and notwithstanding the prevalence of a heavy gale, succeeded in rescuing all the passengers and crew.

The Winchester went down in thirty minutes after the last of the crew left her. She belonged to Boston, and had a valuable cargo. She sailed from Liverpool on the 16th of April.

The ship Winchester had 750 souls on board; 350 were taken off by the ships Mary and Caroline, and Paragon, and the brigs Ann Edwards, and Robert Bruce, all bound to Quebec, and the remainder by the steamer Washington.

Storm at the North.—A tremendous storm of wind and rain passed over Washington and Baltimore on the afternoon of the 17th. At Baltimore, the wall of one of the stores on Light street was destroyed by fire was blown down by the gust of wind, killing one Wilson L. Lloyd, of the firm of Mcilhenny & Lloyd, and a clerk named Samuel C. Atkinson. They were in an office adjoining the wall, and which was crushed by the fall. At Washington, Mrs Reommele, wife of John C. Reommele, grocer, corner of Tweuth and K streets, was instantly killed by lightning this evening. She was standing in her chamber immediately under the roof, when the fluid entered, struck her on the head, and passed down her body, making a hole in the floor.

Murder at a Wedding.—On Tuesday night last an affray occurred at a wedding near Cincinnati, during which a man named Robert Thompson fired a pistol among a crowd of dancers, slightly wounding Augustus Leegar and Elizabeth Pope. Soon after, Captain Dresher attempted to put Thompson out, when he shot him dead on the spot. Thompson made his escape.

The Great Western Railway.

The Port Huron Commercial has the following relative to the great Canadian Railway running through Canada, from Detroit to Niagara Falls:

This railroad is destined to be one of the best on the continent, and in the summer season will be remarkably pleasant and inviting to the traveler. Leaving the Detroit river, the road runs along in sight of the beautiful St Clair Lake, in full view of the steam and sail vessels constantly passing up and down. The road has but two or three slight curves between Detroit river and Chatham, when he did so. A few months since, under a similar state of excitement, he abandoned his home and fled to the woods, where he was found raving and in a state of entire nudity. The wounds inflicted by himself on the 10th, were not immediately fatal, though it is hardly probable that he can live long. He was a carpenter by trade, and had been a preacher of the gospel.

The Winchester went down in thirty minutes after the last of the crew left her. She belonged to Boston, and had a valuable cargo. She sailed from Liverpool on the 16th of April.

The ship Winchester had 750 souls on board; 350 were taken off by the ships Mary and Caroline, and Paragon, and the brigs Ann Edwards, and Robert Bruce, all bound to Quebec, and the remainder by the steamer Washington.

Storm at the North.—A tremendous storm of wind and rain passed over Washington and Baltimore on the afternoon of the 17th. At Baltimore, the wall of one of the stores on Light street was destroyed by fire was blown down by the gust of wind, killing one Wilson L. Lloyd, of the firm of Mcilhenny & Lloyd, and a clerk named Samuel C. Atkinson. They were in an office adjoining the wall, and which was crushed by the fall. At Washington, Mrs Reommele, wife of John C. Reommele, grocer, corner of Tweuth and K streets, was instantly killed by lightning this evening. She was standing in her chamber immediately under the roof, when the fluid entered, struck her on the head, and passed down her body, making a hole in the floor.

Murder at a Wedding.—On Tuesday night last an affray occurred at a wedding near Cincinnati, during which a man named Robert Thompson fired a pistol among a crowd of dancers, slightly wounding Augustus Leegar and Elizabeth Pope. Soon after, Captain Dresher attempted to put Thompson out, when he shot him dead on the spot. Thompson made his escape.

The Irish in America.—The London Times, referring to an infamous article, denouncing the course of England on the Eastern question, which lately appeared in the Citizen, edited by John Mitchel, the Irish refugee, at New York, makes the following remarks:

"The Irish emigrants or fugitives, not satisfied with the improvement in their condition which attends their departure from Europe, or with the hospitable reception they find in the New World, still retain the taint of fiction from that unhappy country which their own dissensions so

California.

We have received by the United States our usual file of California papers. The San Francisco Alta California of the 17th ult. says:

Col. Fremont arrived in this city by the Stockton boat of yesterday, having left his whole party in good health on Saturday, encamped beyond Stockton. Col. Fremont is in excellent health and is very hearty. The reports brought by Col. Babbitt, of the loss of a number of his party, and the intense suffering of all, were much exaggerated. Col. Fremont's party was composed originally of eight Americans and twenty Delaware Indians; and but one man, an American, was lost. He lagged behind and finally became discouraged, and cut his throat in the snow, where he was found by a party sent to look after him. He was brought into camp, but all efforts to restore him were in vain, and he died. His whole party are in good health.

Col. Fremont crossed the Sierra Nevada near the head of the Merced River, and reports that there is great little snow there. The railroad route, which he examined, he considers to be favorable. His observations and notes are very full, and he is very much pleased that he has got a good deal of information which no man had previously travelled. We hope to be able to present in a few days some complete account of his trip.

The Alta says in the paper of the 1st inst. says:

The wheat crop has attracted much attention. Fears have been expressed that the crop would be much too large for the demand of California, but this is not probable. The number of acres in wheat in the State is estimated to be about 80,000, which, @ 30 bushels to the acre, would produce 2,400,000 bushels—about three bushels for each inhabitant. The great majority of the wheat fields are in the counties bordering on or near to the bay.

The bark Walter Claxton, heavily laden with lumber for this port, was lost a few miles out from Humboldt Bay on the 21st. It is thought that a hole was knocked in her bow by the anchor. She turned bottom up. Of 16 persons on board only 8 were saved.

There has been four or five days of rain during the fortnight, and the miners and farmers are thus well supplied with water.

The news from the mines presents little of striking importance, though the season is extremely favorable and the gold produce correspondingly large.

On the 15th the steamer Secretary, plying between this city and Petaluma, burst her boiler when off San Rafael, about 15 miles from this city. About 30 persons were killed. The boat was racing, and the engineer had tied down the lever of the safety valve. He is among the dead.

The trial of Rocha Del Valle, the Mexican Consul, for enlisting men for the Mexican army, was continued on the 16th ult., the jury rendering a verdict of guilty, and recommending him to the clemency of the Governor. The sentence will not be passed until the 15th of May.

The Prussian Consul, Mr. Dillon, has been also arrested for refusing to attend court as a witness in this case.

The Legislature has fixed the 15th of May for the close of the session.

The San Francisco Chronicle of the 1st inst. has the following items:

Mr. Price recently recovered $10,000 from the city of Sacramento, as "damages" for injuries resulting from his falling into a hole in one of the streets of that city.

The Mint is in full operation, and coins money at the rate of one million of dollars a month. Its capacity is still greater.

The Chinese population has been increased within the past two weeks fully fifteen hundred. A large number of vessels loaded with passengers, are reported on their way from China, and the last advices from Hong Kong were to the effect that 6000 men and women were waiting passage at that port.

The clipper ship Flying Cloud arrived at this port on the 29th, eighty-nine days and eight hours from New York, the quickest passage on record between the two ports.

Dispatches from Utah Territory are to the 2d March. The Mormon settlements are represented as prosperous in the extreme.

The clipper-ship Golden Fleece, in beating out of the harbor on the 22d, struck on the rocks near Fort Point, and was rendered a total wreck. She is said to be fully insured in Boston, where she was owned.

Mr. John S. Benner, Superintendent of the State Prison, was drowned on the 16th, near Point Quentin. He was 35 years old.

Under the city ordinance for the suppression of houses of ill fame, numerous Chinese pesthouses have been broken up, and the keepers fined and imprisoned.

Benjamin F. West, a portrait painter, formerly residing in Salem, Mass., committed suicide in the town of Fremont recently. The names of other persons who have committed felo de se within the last fortnight are, J. Barrows, foreman of the lumber mills at Mendocino; James Sutton, formerly of Boston, who killed himself at Sacramento; and Emanuel Skull, a Hungarian, at Gold Hill. The last man was one of Hungary, a man of remarkable famous linguist.

The Walker Expedition—Its Failure.

The Los Angelos Star of the 22d of April gives the following relative to the Walker expedition and its defeat:

Walker left San Vicente with one hundred men and one hundred cattle. In crossing the mountains between them and the Gulf, they suffered and a great deal of cattle. After crossing the mountains they were joined by thirty Cucupas, who followed them for the purpose of the Indians were to be compensated for the return of the property. Walker, instead of attempting to escape, fixed himself

[illegible] six miles above its mouth, [illegible] from Fort Yuma. [illegible] four hundred yards wide, very deep and rapid. The men crossed by [illegible] to swim the [illegible] several were drowned and [illegible] escaped, and the interpreter was [illegible]

The [illegible] over [illegible] Capt. Boerstler, Smith, [illegible] and for Dobrians went [illegible] a party of [illegible] men, was [illegible] from the ground and stole [illegible] Smith, [illegible] Indians ascertained Smith [illegible] of the [illegible] drew his pistol and deliberately [illegible] Indians a pint of boiled corn [illegible] was [illegible]

The party [illegible] at this point three days. On the [illegible] after crossing there was [illegible] dissension in camp, and in a barren country, which they had invaded with hostile intention, with [illegible] means of repelling attack; exhausted, naked, [illegible] famine [illegible] in the face, many men prepared to [illegible] the waning fortunes of the expedition, and [illegible] the settlements for an honest livelihood. [illegible] party of our informant [illegible] three days re[illegible]ing, Fort Yuma, where they were received by Major Ir[illegible] with courtesy and their necessities supplied." Before leaving the Fort many others came in, and it was ascertained that fifty men had deserted Walker and others were preparing to leave in a body. A general stampede had occurred.

From his numbers thus reduced that the [illegible] under the [illegible] which were his only [illegible] rations, Walker resolved to retrace his steps to San Vicente, with the evident intention of rejoining his Excellency Smith. He started back in "the winter of his discontent," with not more than twenty men and twenty or twenty-five head of cattle.

The character which Walker bears among his men is by no means an exalted one. He is represented as excessively vain, weak-minded and ambitious. His vanity makes him tyrannical; his weakness renders him cruel, his unbounded and senseless ambition has led him to believe himself born to command. His great pride was in "standing upon his dignity;" his men were constantly harassed with vexatious orders upon etiquette. There was not a sensible man in the whole command who did not utterly despise him.

The property destroyed by Walker is estimated at more than a million of dollars. And by his licenses and example, the Indians, who before were peaceful, have become aggressors, and their depredations are pleasing out what little was left by him. It is not supposed that Walker has appropriated to his own uses more than $150,000; but a vast amount of property has been wasted.

Oregon.

AWFUL STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION.—An Extra from the Oregon Spectator of April 8, says:

The Willamette Falls Company's new steamer Gazelle left her wharf at Oregon city at half past six o'clock, P. M. on the 8th of April, and had just landed at Canemah, at fifteen minutes before seven, when a terrible explosion of her boilers blew her into atoms, killing about twenty persons and wounding many others. Fragments of bodies were found scattered in every direction; some were blown into the river, others to the shore, but the greater part of the killed found were lying about the deck forward, among all kinds of fractured machinery and freight. Mr. David Paige, chief-superintendent of the Company, had his head literally dashed to pieces, and could not have been recognized by other means than his clothes. Many others were as badly mutilated. Among the killed was Mr. David Paige, of San Francisco, whose wife and child were killed last year by the explosion of the Jenny Lind.

Washington Territory.

Major G. H. Larned, of the Fourth Infantry, and eight privates of the same regiment, were drowned in Puget Sound, about the 1st of April.

The Indian disturbances have been effectually quieted.

The Chilian bark Dolores of San Lorenzo, was wrecked near Vancouver's island, recently. Of fifteen passengers, and the ship's crew, only one person was saved.

The new steamship Sonora, from New York the 11th of March, arrived at Panama on the 9th May, having made the passage in 47 days 20 hours running time. The Panama Star and Herald gives the annexed report of her log:

Running time between New York and Rio, 21 days and 23 hours.

Running time between Rio and Valparaiso, 15 days and 21 hours.

Ruenleg time between Valparaiso and Panama 9 days 23 hours.

A letter in the Aspinwall Conrier, dated Carthagena, April 8th, states that a revolution broke out in Bogota, the capital of New Granada, about the middle of April, and General Melo had declared himself the Dictator at the Capital.

Gen. Herrera, and most of the National Congress had fled, and had not at the last advices accomplished a re-union.

The Panama Star and Herald says:

From an extra issued from the office of the Panameno, on the night of the 10th inst., we learn that a new Provincial Goverament has been established at Bogota. Gen. Melo is Supreme Chief and his chief Secretary is Dr. F. A. Obregin.

In Peru, the civil war continues to absorb the attention of the Government and the people. A fresh disturbance has broken out among the revolutionary parties themselves, which threatened the overthrow of the revolutionists.

The Lima Foreign News says:

Within the past week, near one hundred gold hunters have left this city for the mountains on prospecting tours. The major part intended going by way of Cerro Pasco. One or two small companies, however, left with the intention of striking off to the southward, from Tarma.

The deaths in this city, from yellow fever, during the month of March were as follows: Men, 406; women, 200; children, 212—total, 818. The deaths during the same month in 1853, were 253.

From Bolivia we learn that General Belzu had suppressed all attempts to turn him out of power. Belzu was to have left La Pas on the 20th ult., for Oruco and Cochabamba, whence he intended passing over to Sucré in order to reassemble Congress in August.

From Chili we have no news of importance.

Australia.

The Melbourne Argus, of the 3d of March, says, in commenting upon the new Constitution:

This House is to consist of thirty members, who must have within the colony a money qualification of ten thousand pounds. "The House will not, from its very constitution, be a very industrious one, and a small but compact phalanx of unscrupulous men, acting in union in the Senate, may assume a very awkward and dangerous position. Its popularity is already in a fair way of being blown to the winds by being looked upon as a mere chamber of successful money grubbers; and it is only necessary to make it the arena for the prosecution of self interests, to render it as mischievous and contemptible, as it ought to be pure, dignified, sagacious; the object of the respectful affection of every sound thinking man in the community."

The Markets.—At Melbourne, the gold market is active, and the price remains firm at £3 17 9d per ounce.

The Sydney Gold Circular says, advices from the Gold Districts continue generally of a cheering character, and in many places there are evidence of good supplies, both from old diggings and new discoveries.

A correspondent of the Panama Star, writing from Melbourne under date of Feb. 10th, says:

As we all live in a great state of excitement about the newly discovered gold fields in Peru, already 5000 adventurers (four-fifths of whom are Americans,) have left this country for Peru. The mania for emigrating to Peru has now spread universally over this colony. About twenty vessels are at present up for Callao, nearly all of which will be crowded with passengers. I fear the whole will turn out to be a speculation of our shipping agents here and the Peruvian Government.

From Acapulco.

The Panama Star and Herald, by the arrival of the steamship Médison at that port, had received later advices from Acapulco relative to Santa Anna and Alvarez.

Santa Anna broke up his camp on the 26th of April retreating towards the city of Mexico. During the encampment of Santa Anna near Acapulco, he had several light skirmishes with the revolutionists, resulting only in killing two or three on either side, and a bombardment of the castle, the bombs doing no damage, falling rather short.

He then sent a flag of truce to the castle, demanding the peaceable surrender. The bearers were sent back to Santa Anna, by the commander of the castle, General Comfort, to say he would send his answer. After consulting his command, (about 150 or 200,) his answer was sent in a discharge of round shot into the camp of Santa Anna, killing six men and taking an arm off of another.

During his withdrawal, Santa Anna expected to be attacked whilst passing some defiles in the mountains, sent the litter in which he had previously been conveyed along with his army, and took a more circuitous route on horseback, to the place they were marching.

A severe shock of an earthquake was experienced at Acapulco on the morning of the 5th inst.; no damage done.

We have received much more interesting news from various quarters, which we are compelled to postpone the publication of until our next.

James Land, who cut his throat at Hudson, N. H. recently, had two brothers who also committed suicide; so did his father; and he has a sister in an insane hospital, and another brother was killed on a railroad.

BOMBARDMENT OF ODESSA.

The Vienna Presse confirms the withdrawal of the Russian forces, bag and baggage, from the Lesser Wallachia, hospitals, magazines, and all.

It adds that it may be explained in connection with the formation of the two Austrian corps d'armée in Gallacia, the Russian prince not wishing to have his retreat cut off by the armies of Austria, or it may be that Prince Paskiewitch is only anxious to concentrate the Russian forces against Silistria, and so force it to surrender, as being the entwork of the Balkan, ere the English and French army can come up to its relief.

THE BOMBARDMENT OF ODESSA.—It was prematurely announced, in most of the English and French papers, a week before the event took place, that the allied fleets had bombarded the city of Odessa.

Without stopping to comment on the remarkable circumstance, that the intention of the English admiral evidently leaked out in advance of his acting upon it, we have now to announce that a portion of the allied fleet has actually bombarded Odesse An account of the bombardment is officially promulgated at Vienna, whence it has been telegraphed to the French and British press. It seems but half a measure after all; but perhaps the accounts yet to arrive by mail may show it in a more satisfactory light.

It may be remembered that on the 6th ult., the British steamer Furious was sent with a flag of truce of Odessa to bring off the British ex-Consul and some seventy British subjects. The Russians refused to permit the steamer to enter the harbor, and on her persisting, fired six or seven shots from the walls, and sent some ships to chase her. The Furious escaped, and brought back to the fleet a report of the treatment she had met with.

This was on the 6th of April, and the next we hear of was the arrival, off Odessa, on the 14th or 17th, for the accounts differ, of several ships of the allied fleets. The last advices from Odessa, received here per steamer Canada, were to April 20th, at which date, although some English steamers were in sight, all was quiet; consequently the account in the papers, that the city was bombarded for one hour, on the 18th, is manifestly incorrect.

At all events, on the morning of the 23d, nine steamers of the allied fleet took up a position before the forts that command the entrance to the harbor, and immediately commenced to throw bombs and rockets upon the forts and the city. We have as yet to glean our information from telegraphic scraps and flying rumors, consequently do not know what steps preceded the bombardment, whether the British Admiral made any formal demand upon the city, which was refused, or whether the Russians at once acted upon the aggressive. Not unlikely both these circumstances occurred.

One statement says that the bombardment was over in two hours; another that it continued incessantly for ten hours, and only closed with the night. The Austrian official account, published at Vienne 30th, states as the result of the action that "a battery of four guns was destroyed, and the Austrian ship, (the Sta. Catherina,) and eight Russian merchant ships, in harbor, were burned."

The Russian telegraphic account is significant. It is in these terms: The English and French Admirals demanded the surrender of the Russian ships in the port of Odessa. This being refused, bombardment began from eighteen ships. A small part of the city is destroyed. An attempt to land 1800 men failed. The bombardment has produced no effect.

Three of the English steamers were badly damaged.

A dispatch to the London Daily News states that on the 22d a partial bombardment took place, but not much damage was done except setting some buildings on fire. On the 23d hostilities were suspended, and a summons was sent to the place to surrender. In the event of a refusal, the Admirals—French and British—threatened to destroy the city on the succeeding day. On the 24th was the attack. It was further stated that the Russian fleet sailed out of Sebastopol and advanced against the allied fleet, either with the hope of drawing the latter away from Odessa, or of getting it between two fires, but, on a portion of the British ships offering battle, the Russians withdrew to their stronghold.

A private telegraphic dispatch received from Odessa by an eminent Greek firm, and dated the 26th ult., stated that the whole combined fleet took their departure on the morning of that day.

The Austrian Correspondez has another account under date of Bucharest, April 28

The English and French admirals demanded the delivery of the Russian vessels at Odessa. On refusel, seven three-deckers and eleven frigates bombarded the town on the 24th.

The Woronzoff palace is totally destroyed

Four frigates are severely damaged.

THE SIEGE OF SILISTRIA.—The important position of Silistria is closely invested, but the telegraphic dispatch of the 28th, says that, to that date, the fortress had suffered no damage.

Accounts from Bucharest, April 19, mention that it (Silistria) had been hard pressed since the 14th, and would ere then have fallen but for the determined valor of its defenders, who express themselves able to hold out until aid shall arrive. The Russians, on the contrary, expect to reduce the place in a few days. Mustapha Pasha has a strong garrison, but it is said to be neither well victualed, nor properly supplied with ammunition. The fort is in the possession of the Russians, as are also the entrenchments at the junction of the Drista, the Turks having retired within the defences. The Russians were expected to assault on the 1st May, with 80,000 men. They have erected seventeen heavy batteries under cover of which they will cross the river. The passage at Oltenitza is expected at the same time. Notwithstanding all these formidable statements we must not forget that Silistria is too strong a position to be carried without a severe and perhaps a prolonged struggle.

THE BALTIC.—The British fleet had been farther reinforced, and were awaiting the arrival of the French squadron. Until the letter arrives, a British force will oruise off the Gulf of Finland and Bothnia.

On the 21st, nineteen British ships anchored before Stockholm. Admiral Napier arrived on the 24th, and on the 25th, had an audience with King Oscar. He returned to the fleet the same day.

A Russian powder factory on the Island of Cronstadt, and containing 60,000 pounds of powder, blew up and killed 60 operatives. No damage was done to the fortress.

The Russian schooner Libertas, Capt. Rass, was taken by the British, and a prize crew was put on board to navigate the vessel to England. Captain Rass, being acquainted with British tastes, supplied his cestors with unlimited allowances of brandy. They got drunk; the Russians nailed them below hatches, and carried them as prisoners into Caolscronai.

A strong note has been sent by France and Britain to the Senate of Lubec, calling the government of that city to account for having permitted the clearance of a cargo of sulphur to Russia, after the declaration of neutrality was issued.

PROFESSOR WEISS'S GREAT HISTORY
OF THE
FRENCH PROTESTANT REFUGEES.
[DISPERSION OF THE HUGUENOTS.]

THIS profoundly interesting and supremely valuable work is already celebrated throughout the civilized world. Its popular character, together with the national attractions it possesses, must cause it to be more universally read even than the cel-brated "History of the Reformation," to which, (says Alison in Blackwood,) "in spirit and treatment it bears such strong resemblance." There are no dramas in the world's history of more thrilling interest than this intensely absorbing narrative of the fortunes of these noble Huguenot sufferers in the cause of religious freedom. Their influence upon agriculture, commerce, manufactures, literature, morals and religion, in the various countries of England, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Russia and America, to which they fled, is traced in a perspicuous and masterly manner. Of how important a part they took who came to this country, no American needs to be reminded to conjecture the value of such a record. The work is treated with a fullness of historical research from materials collected during twenty years of industry, and is written in a graphic style, which makes it a production of equal interest and value to the student of history and the general reader. The author treats the subject in a purely historical aspect, is candid, discerned impartial, and the story is sustained with an ability and vivacity, which excite in the mind the irresistible impression of romance. The period relates to one of the most stirring and touching segments of the whole circle of French history." The record is taken up where it was left by Ranke and Browning, supplies the links in the grand historic chain that connects the past with the present, and binds the centuries into one harmonious whole; and thus has been supplied the long marked deficiency in the annals of both Europe and America. Eulogies have been pronounced on this rare history by the highest artical authorities, as one of the most valuable contributions that has been made during this century, and one that must wield a more important influence on the public mind than any previous work. The costliest talent was engaged to translate this work. An able American Appendix has been added, which much enhances its value to the American reader; and no pains have been spared to give the volumes every attraction. In the frontispiece is an accurate PORTRAIT of the cruel Pope Pius V, and a fac-simile of the execrable medal struck by Gregory XIII. to celebrate the frightful massacre of St. Bartholomew.

Hundreds of testimonials from eminent clergymen and laymen of every denomination, distinguished scholars, presidents of colleges, professors of history, and illustrious authors and statesmen have been received, enlogizing and commending this pre-eminently popular history in the most emphatic terms Among the names of illustrious foreigners are: D'Aubigne—Guisot—Mignat—Villemain —Merle—Alison—Macaulay—and Hallam. Among the eminent American Divines are the Reverend Doctors Cheever—Potts—Spring—DeWitt—Knox of N. Y.; Bethune, Brooklyn; Sprague, Albany; Murray, N. J. Boardman—Berg—Dowling, author of "History of Romanism," Phil: Johns—Henry, Baltimore; Stow, Boston; Bacon, New Haven; Murdock, Hartford; Perry, Cleveland; Moore, Richmond; Gibson, Petersburg; Hanekle, Cuthbert, Charleston; Dwight, Portland. In British America, Campbell—Matherson, Montreal; Macher, Kingston; O. W. Marsh; Quebec. Among the distinguished Professors, Bush, Ripley and Wayland; and many others of like character and standing.

PROFESSOR WEISS'S GREAT HISTORY OF THE FRENCH PROTESTANT REFUGEES—(Dispersion of the Huguenots)—WITH AN AMERICAN APPENDIX. In Two Volumes, 12mo Price $2 50

This profoundly entertaining and instructive work has created an impression more deep and lasting than any other production of modern times. The universal welcome with which it has been received by all classes, must hereafter place its able author with the most favored historians, D'Aubigne and Macaulay. The Press in heralding its great fame, have predicted for it a popularity equal to that of "The History of the Reformation," to which "in spirit and treatment, it bears such strong resemblance." There are no dramas in the world's history of more thrilling interest than this intensely absorbing narrative of the fortunes of these noble Huguenot sufferers in the cause of religious freedom. Their influence upon agriculture, commerce, manufactures, literature, morals and religion, in the various countries of England, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Russia and America, to which they fled, is traced in a perspicuous and masterly manner. Of how important a part they took who came to this country, no American needs to be reminded to conjecture the value of such a record. The work is treated with a fullness of historical research from materials collected during twenty years of industry, and is written in a graphic style, which makes it a production of equal interest and value to the student of history and the general reader. The author treats the subject in a purely historical aspect, is candid, discerned impartial, and the story is sustained with an ability and vivacity, which excite in the mind the irresistible impression of romance. The period relates to one of the most stirring and touching segments of the whole circle of French history." The record is taken up where it was left by Ranke and Browning, supplies the links in the grand historic chain that connects the past with the present, and binds the centuries into one harmonious whole; and thus has been supplied the long marked deficiency in the annals of both Europe and America. Eulogies have been pronounced on this rare history by the highest artical authorities, as one of the most valuable contributions that has been made during this century, and one that must wield a more important influence on the public mind than any previous work. The costliest talent was engaged to translate this work. An able American Appendix has been added, which much enhances its value to the American reader; and no pains have been spared to give the volumes every attraction. In the frontispiece is an accurate PORTRAIT of the cruel Pope Pius V, and a fac-simile of the execrable medal struck by Gregory XIII. to celebrate the frightful massacre of St. Bartholomew.

Hundreds of testimonials from eminent clergymen and laymen of every denomination, distinguished scholars, presidents of colleges, professors of history, and illustrious authors and statesmen have been received, enlogizing and commending this pre-eminently popular history in the most emphatic terms Among the names of illustrious foreigners are: D'Aubigne—Guisot—Mignat—Villemain —Merle—Alison—Macaulay—and Hallam. Among the eminent American Divines are the Reverend Doctors Cheever—Potts—Spring—DeWitt—Knox of N. Y.; Bethune, Brooklyn; Sprague, Albany; Murray, N. J. AYER'S
CHERRY PECTORAL,
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS,
BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH,
CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

Many years of trial, instead of impairing the public confidence in this medicine, has won for it an appreciation and notoriety by far exceeding the most sanguine expectations of its friends. Nothing but its intrinsic virtues and the unmistakable benefit conferred on thousands of sufferers, could originate and maintain the reputation it enjoys. While many inferior remedies thrust upon the community have failed and been discarded, this has gained friends by every trial, conferred benefits on the afflicted they can never forget, and produced cures too numerous and too remarkable to be forgotten.

While it is a fraud on the public to pretend that any one medicine will infallibly cure—still there is abundant proof that the Cherry Pectoral does not only as a general thing, but almost invariably cure the maladies for which it is employed.

As time makes these facts wider and better known, this medicine has gradually become the best reliance of the afflicted, from the log-cabin of the American peasant to the palaces of European kings. Throughout this entire country, Cherry Pectoral is known as the best remedy extant for diseases of the Throat and Lungs, and in many foreign countries it is coming to be extensively used by their most intelligent physicians. In Great Britain, France and Germany, where the medical sciences have reached their highest perfection, Cherry Pectoral is introduced, and in constant use in the Armies, Hospitals, Alms-houses, Public Institutions and in domestic practise, as the surest remedy their attending physicians can employ for the more dangerous affections of the lungs. Also in milder cases and for children it is safe, pleasant and effectual to cure. In fact, some of the most flattering testimonials we receive have been from parents who have found it efficacious in cases particularly incidentel to childhood.

The Cherry Pectoral is manufactured by a practical Chemist, and every ounce of it under his own eye, which invariable accuracy and care. It is sealed and protected by law from counterfeits, consequently can be relied on as genuine without adulteration.

We have endeavored here to furnish the community with a medicine of such intrinsic superiority and worth as should commend itself to their confidence—a remedy at once safe, speedy and effectual, which this has by repeated and countless trials proved itself to be; and trust by great care in preparing it with chemical accuracy, of a uniform strength to afford physicians a new agent on which they can rely for the best results, and the afflicted with a remedy that will do for them all that medicine can do. STRAY LEAF FROM AN ITINERANT SCRAP-BOOK.

A VOICE OF WARNING.

It was early in the year 1848, as I was traveling to the eastern part of Alabama, that I stopped at the approach of night-fall at the house of Judge D., an old and respectable citizen of ——— county, and received a cordial welcome—for we had formed a slight acquaintance in the days of other years. The first salutations over, "mine host" addressed me briefly thus: "My habits, sir, are the same as at our last interview; I presume that you, likewise, have maintained your integrity; I will not, therefore, ask you, as I once did, to swerve from your purpose, and you need not attempt to dissuade me from mine." The import of this laconic address will appear to the reader when he is informed that four years before, while laboring on —— circuit, I came in my wanderings to the old dilapidated town of ——, where my predecessor had left an appointment for preaching, and called upon Judge D., who informed me at once that the idea of establishing circuit preaching there was preposterous, but invited me to spend the day with him. I had scarcely recovered from that trepidation which most young men feel when introduced to strangers, and which has ever been a peculiarity of my temperament, when he invited me, also, to join him in his devotions at the altar of Bacchus. This being declined, he singly and alone paid his homage there, remarking—"It is my habit, and I would do it if there were any preachers present." Though a youthful stranger, I essayed to reason of "righteousness, temperance, and a judgment to come," as a means of dissuading him from an indulgence so pernicious in itself, and ruinous in its tendency. But, my words were to him as idle tales; so after partaking of the hospitalities of the house, and offering a prayer for my generous but unsaved host, and his blood family, I departed, and saw him no more. Still, as above stated, I came to lodge under his roof, when I learned, from his own lips, that he was still enamored with his cups. No pains were spared to render me comfortable; but the solemn asseveration, "my habits are the same," the marks of the dreadful ravages the monster, intemperance, had made in the short space of four years, together with the fact, that my lips were sealed by his expressed injunction, rendered fruitless their best efforts. To see a fellow being on the verge of destruction; the sands fast crumbling from beneath his feet; to be within reach of the victim, and possessed of a will to attempt the rescue, and yet to meet with such determined opposition from the object of our solicitude, a situation the least enviable of any within the range of thought, and well calculated to produce concentration of mind, of thought and feeling. Thus was my mind abstractly taken up, when the announcement, "Supper is ready," diverted it from a subject so painfully absorbing, and restored equilibrium.

Passing over the intervening hours between tea and bedtime, when the latter drew near, prayer was proposed and agreed to. The reading of a select portion of Scripture, and singing a part of that solemnly impressive hymn—

"And am I born to die?
To lay this body down?
And must my trembling spirit fly
Into a world unknown?"

brought us down into the depths of humility before God. It was a solemn time—to me, the most awful hour of my existence. Never before was I so fully drawn out in prayer; yet there were some misgivings in my mind, but why, I could not tell. I did not distrust the power and faithfulness of God, but endeavored to fix my faith in Christ fully while I pleed the hoary sinner's cause. Tears and sighs were alternates of the passing moments; Judge D. wept aloud. Prayer being ended, we sang "one of the Songs of Zion;" and the conclusion of which, the subject of my narrative sank upon his knees, and with a voice I shall never forget, said—"Oh, pray for me once more." Again we bowed before the Lord, and called upon the mighty God of Jacob. This circumstance, we may well be supposed, inspired hope in my bosom, but, alas! it was a delusive hope; for, rising from his knees, he drew a chair near me and said, substances, as follows: "Your reading, singing and praying affects me very much, as it awakens within me a consciousness of my personal accountability to God, and that I am unprepared to meet Him; and yet I know that I must shortly see Him face to face. The thought troubles me, but it is too late now. Yes, it is for ever too late! the demon, intemperance, has made a complete conquest, and I am ruined!" His emotions becoming too great for utterance, he buried his face in his hands, and groaned convulsively. Nor was he alone in that state of unutterable anguish; the aged companion and heart-stricken daughter gave full vent to an agony of feeling that found no relief but in floods of tears.

Years have passed away since then, but the scenes of that hour is as fresh in my mind as if it had been but yesterday, and the bare thought of ever witnessing the like again, almost unnerves my soul, and paralyzes all the energies.

But, to return; the miserable man at length replied: "Mine is a hard case; I was born of respectable parents; was trained religiously; educated liberally; married judiciously; was successful in business; enjoyed the confidence of my fellow-citizens, and was by them promoted. I might have done well for time and eternity; but, alas! the vile practice of social drinking, frequently indulged, created a thirst for alcoholic drinks, and led me into habits of intemperance. The spell I cannot break; for forty years the habit of my destruction has been weaving, and now it is too strong for my feeble efforts. My prospects for time are blighted; but if this was all, it would not be so afflicting, but my soul, which can not die, must be miserable for ever." He ceased, and with these words ringing in my ears, I retired, but not to sleep.

Morning came at last, and I prepared to leave, but not without once more whispering of hope, and its inseparable adjunct, in the despairing sinner's ear. But oh! the withering response, accompanied by the most rigid expression of features—"I tell you, sir, it is too late; withhold your sympathies from me, and bestow them on the hopeful. Use every means in your power to reclaim them; cite my case, with the free use of my name, for I shall soon be where a name is nothing; perhaps some will hear you. Farewell; we shall meet no more in this world!" He ceased, and with a sad heart, I resumed my journey.

It was our last interview. Two months afterwards Judge D. sank to the tomb, the victim of intemperance. There I leave him till the judgment day.

But oh! is there not a voice of warning in this rude sketch; yea, and of anxious solicitude for the welfare of others. Like Dives, he cries, if not from the pit, yet from the sides of it, "Come not to this place." Young man, beware of the social glass, lest in the sequel of life you find yourself enslaved by the tyrant foe and have not power to break your fetters. Heed this warning voice, lest in the end you lie down in sorrow and awake not again but to shame and everlasting contempt.

THOUGHTS BY THE WAY.

BOSTON, May 3, 1854.

MR. EDITOR—Sir: We entered this fair and goodly city, the metropolis of notional incubation, where circumstances are hatched from the he-muddled hallucinations of an imperfect guess, for the purpose of getting up tea-pot tempests, and keeping the popular mind in an endless state of fermentation. Intellect is the golden calf Bostonians worship. To their praise, be it said, the moneyed millionaire is nearly nowhere, compared with the millionaire of mind. Their moneyed men walk the streets, and news-boys dash up to them with an I-don't-care-a-darn for your purse sort of air, and scream out the last arrival, and with an knowing look indicate that stocks will fall, or storms arise, or wars prevail, if they don't buy a paper; while others, rolling in costly carriages along the streets, carry for an outrider a bundle of live rags mounted behind, with a determination to share the comfort of a ride with "old rich," while his less lucky companions cry "cut behind," "cut behind," to provoke Mr. Jehu to apply the lash to the limbs of the loafing crews' nest as a dissolvent to the forced partnership. But it is not so when the streets become for a while the Pantheon of her Intellectualists—when mind like a pyramid moves along—then heads are bared—boys hush instinctively their clamor, and loom up in the benign recognition paid to genius and talent; for they know that "mind makes the man," and that the people are now pouring forth their homage to those who, though their minds are as full as the granaries of the seven years of plenty, have not coppers enough in their pockets to hold their eyelids down if they were dead. Here, however, is a point of evil. Mind is every thing—heart, sensibilities, the conscience, are undervalued. The mind is stimulated by all possible agencies. Lectures, Quarterlies, Weeklies and Dailies teem from the tongues of men and from the tongues of the Press, in the highest finish of style, copiousness of learning, vividness of imagination, cogency of reasoning, and boldness of assumption. All sorts of notions, theories, transcendentalisms, Germanic dreams, resurrected ideas of the dark ages, fossil fancies that were buried before the flood; and flighty idiosyncracies, Polytheism, Atheism, Infidelity, Negro-Stoweism, Unitarianism, Presbyterianism, Universalism, Puseyism, Methodism, and a newspaper is scarcely large enough to tell all the rest. And all are ably represented by men—mature manhood—prowess of mind; and all are engaged as gladiators to do the most to urge on the victories of mere mind, and party, and often of paltry measures.

Old-fashioned Christianity has but a poor chance of development in New England now. The once Evangelical pulpit has taken into its care and patronage all the multitudinous questions of the day; abolitionism, Nebraska bill claims, the character of Senator Douglas, politics generally, abuse of the South specially, physics, science, mesmerism, biology, spiritualism, infernal knockings, angelic penmanship, and every other imaginable subject. The consequence of all which is, that population swells rapidly up to thousands annually, and Christian Churches barely hold the stand they had ten or twenty years ago—while Theodore Parker, Ralph Waldo Emerson, and all that class of polygonal-minded men are the symbol and adumbration of the clergy of New England as a body—as far as the preaching of a pure, awakening and saving Christianity is concerned.

Hence, nearly all the distinctions between the denominations of former years have passed away, and Drs. Beecher and Bullen, and the representatives of all the creeds of all the cardinal points of the Theological compass, unite in brotherly and heretical harmony—to war, not against sin, but the South!

Black spirits and blue,
Red spirits and gray,
Mingle, mingle, mingle,
Mingle every day!

Meantime, the fugleman of Papacy, chameleon Brownson, is heard with great self-complacency, singing,

"There's a good time coming bye and by!"

Nevertheless, these folks are no niggards, though great negro-ists. And while for the latter they have many words, saying, "Be ye warmed, and be ye clothed," and be ye fed, and be ye blest—only be out of our way, that we may sanctify our sympathy by cherishing it where it can never reach the objects of it, yet, for themselves, for their homes, equipages, costly wares, made of silver and gold, had been laid out by the great Nahant Sea Serpent when he lost his reckoning, got out of his element and went off simultaneously to the four points of the compass in pursuit of a "manifest destiny." They always answer you politely—take pains to direct you, and sometimes go along to show you the way.

We had occasion to rummage the records of the Courts of three counties and overhaul several other offices of records, and the attentiveness, obligingness and accommodation of all the officers we met could not be excelled; though not one of them know our whither, or our whence, or cognomen, or any thing else about us, except our being in search of information, which they seemed eager to impart.

Yours, SALATHIEL.

P. S.—We wrote you on a former date that the manuscripts of Bishop Bascom's lectures on Infidelity had been burnt in the Harper conflagration. We now have the pleasure to inform you that four days after this sad intelligence was communicated to us, they were discovered, and are now safe! S.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

MR. EDITOR—Your remarks in the Advocate of 29th April, respecting the whereabouts of the Preachers, has awakened a train of serious reflection. I have reviewed my brief ministerial experience, and brought to mind the many promising young men who at first bade fair to be useful, but who now, absorbed in the world, are but drones in the hive. Are not these the ones? I remember the many Local Preachers who might have been useful in the Itinerancy, but temporal considerations restrained them. Are they not here? The Church has long and loudly called them forth; the claims of the world upon them are urgent. How potent are the circumstances that hinder.

That the Gospel is sufficient to accomplish its purpose, is not a question to be considered now. The works of regeneration it has performed in the world declare its sufficiency. The suffrages of eighteen centuries affirm it. That more might have been done, we may not deny, but it has not been ineffectual. God in his wisdom has made the Gospel to depend for success upon instrumentalities. The Gospel has always been the power of God unto salvation, but when hid in monasteries or in the libraries of the learned, its power was not so manifest. It remained for those honored instrumentalities of the reformation, Luther, Tyndale, Zuingle and Calvin, to unveil its glories to the world. Its power is now manifest in the enlightened piety and pure morality of those that love it. Yet, notwithstanding its wide dissemination, something seems wanting. It is the living Preacher, the minister of reconciliation, to urge the Gospel upon the consciences of men. But where are they?

It is God's prerogative to call men to the Ministry. Having originated the plan, it is His to provide the instrumentalities. Can we consistently suppose that He has neglected so essential a part of his plan? He has called men to preach, sufficient, too, we think, for the emergencies. We have every reason to believe that the trades and professions hide many who are called to preach. Oh, for an archangel's voice to bring these back again to life. While they are toiling for this world's goods, and enjoying (if they can possibly enjoy) the means of grace, multitudes are dying for want of the bread of life.

The Local ranks, too, hold many whose proper place is the Itinerancy. I know one young man, once a traveling elder, without family, and in good health, who satisfied himself with preaching once or twice a year, but whose whole energy was devoted to making money by school-teaching. He is not alone; many seem to hold preaching to be secondary to convenience or worldly interest. I have found this more especially among the ordained Local Ministers (with some honorable exceptions.) They have obtained a position and a name, and now they preach or not, as convenience or inclination may dictate. That a preacher may have sufficient cause for locating, we will not deny; but that a location frees him from the duty of preaching whenever he can get a congregation, is very doubtful. Unless his commission is revoked, he is bound to preach, especially after he has taken the vows of ordination.

Brother Goodwyn writes: "This preaching once in four weeks at a place, according to my notion, is rather an up-hill business." Who that has traveled a four weeks' circuit that has not felt it? The three remaining Sabbaths are spent in idleness, or perhaps worse. The seed sown, for want of cultivation, dies. The habit of church-going is feeble. Yet there are seventy-nine Local Preachers in the Louisiana Conference.

What must be done? Some pious heart suggests—"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that he send more laborers," etc. This is very good, and, without doubt, if the Church were to send up its fervent prayer to God upon this subject, many would be dragged from their hiding places. This is the heaven-appointed means, and will be effectual, though it is seldom that the people of God make this their special prayer.

Let us suggest another means: Keep them when we get them. It is a fact, that though the "allowance" of a Methodist Preacher is confessedly small, many do not get even that, and they are driven out of the Itinerancy. A growing family sets a man to thinking. To feed, clothe and school them is his positive duty. But how? Not upon half receipts of a meagre allowance. The whole is not sufficient. But to satisfy present wants is not all a man has to labor for; there is a future to every family; and to provide for the exigencies thereof, is one of the objects of toil. A prudent forecasting is not only not sinful, but it is right. "He that provideth not for his family, is worse than an infidel." When youth and strength is gone, and almost life is spent in the service of the Church, then the old man gets a superannuated relation, with an allowance. Or if death removes him, his orphans are cared for. On page 12 of Minutes of Louisiana Conference, we find Brother ——, superannuate, with a wife and three or four children, receives $105 28. The orphan of Brother ——, mother also dead, receives $6 20. How far will this go to feed, clothe and school! Is there any wonder that they either locate, or, "wedded to old and well-cultivated fields," they become loco-itinerants! The wonder is, that more do not avail themselves of this plan. Gray hairs and sage counsels give place to youth and inexperience.

Before this communication reaches your readers, the General Conference will have acted upon the memorials of the different bodies that feel interested about ministerial support. Whatever be done there, there is something to be done on the circuits. Every member should feel that it is his duty to give, and give liberally, for the support of the Gospel. Let him learn to give systematically. At the beginning of the year determine what per centage of his income he will devote to this purpose, and divide this among the several objects of his choice. Let each steward regard himself not so much the agent of the Church or Preacher, but the agent of God, to whom is committed an important part of the work, and then with holy zeal apply himself thereto. Such a course will, we think, help to keep your preachers among you—to live and die at their post. GREENWOOD.

TEXAS CORRESPONDENCE.

TRIUMPH OF THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW IN MARSHALL, EAST TEXAS.

The last Legislature of our State passed an act giving to the voters within five miles of Marshall the right to prohibit, by a majority vote, the sale of any spirituous or vinous liquors or cider in Marshall, or within five miles thereof. The election took place 6th May, instant, and was strongly contested by both parties.

The following was the result:

In favor of the law (no license)	136
Against it (for license)	66
Majority in favor of the law	70

Showing a majority in favor of the law against liquor license, out of three hundred and two votes, to be seventy.

In estimating the importance of the above triumph, it will be recollected that the law voted for and gained is substantially the same as the Maine Liquor Law.

PROFITS OF LITERATURE IN TEXAS.

Several enterprising young men who commenced a few years since on a few hundred dollars, are now doing a large and profitable business in books and stationery. In many of the larger towns of the State great openings exist for enterprising booksellers. Schools and higher seminaries of learning are springing into existence in every part of the State. School-books and stationery are in great demand.

TEXAS WHEAT—EARLY HARVESTING.

This is now the 20th May, and many of our Wheat-growers are preparing to harvest their crops. New flour will be in abundance in the northern part of Texas in a short time. With railroad facilities, Texas will soon be able to supply all the southern portion of the United States with flour far in advance of any other country.

STOCK RAISING IN TEXAS.

This branch of business is rapidly on the increase in Texas. In many parts of the State large fortunes are being made by stock raising. TEXIAN.

REMINISCENCES.

MR. EDITOR—In the autumn of 1803, the Western Conference of the M. E. Church was held at Mount Gerezim, in Harrison county, Kentucky. Mr. Asbury was present, having braved the dangers of a savage wilderness. At this Conference I was appointed to preside over a new district called Cumberland. This district embraced the whole of Tennessee west of the Cumberland mountain, the southern portion of Kentucky, and, at least, nominally, extended to Natchez and Illinois. Except Nashville Circuit, the whole work was new, the circuits large, sparsely settled, or in progress of settlement; but one preacher on a circuit, and all young; not an ordained traveling preacher on the district save myself. Revival influence, or, perhaps, more properly, divine influence, seemed to pervade the whole country, and affect almost all classes of people. After a journey of some two hundred miles, through a region of country where public houses and even log cabins were "few and far between," my first work was, before the time for quarterly meetings, to travel all round Nashville circuit, preach at some twenty-five appointments, and meet as many classes. I arrived at Franklin, Williamson county, on a Sabbath in November, 1803. In this vicinage there had been a remarkable revival, and the spirit of proselytism was alive. There was then no house of worship in the place; a crowd was assembled at a stand in the woods, and a preacher in the pulpit, who discussed the subject of baptism some two and a half hours. As he urged "exclusive immersion," and abused "infant sprinkling," I had to act on the defensive; in doing which, I addressed a listening multitude about three hours, when peace ensued.

That indefatigable pioneer, Jesse Walker, had been sent to form a new circuit in Livingston county, Kentucky, near the junction of the Ohio and Cumberland rivers. To attend a quarterly meeting, I had to travel about eighty miles along a small path-way, open barrens, and sometimes twenty or thirty miles no human habitation. In the dusk of evening, having ridden some forty miles, I reached a cabin, and put up for the night. A little fat meat, bread, and a tin cup of buttermilk were my refreshments; and a small, open cabin, a short, hard bed, and scanty covering, was my lot for repose. Before fair daylight, I set out on a dreary travel of forty miles. A small path, few, very few new cabins, new settlements, and scarcity of food for man or horse. In evening twilight I arrived at the residence of Colonel S., a thoroughbred backwoodsman, a religious and hospitable man. His good lady was kind, but not well skilled in the culinary art, or cleanliness. After a long and lonely day's travel, without breakfast or dinner, a comfortable repast would have been refreshing. It was night—supper was announced—a dim light showed that there were victuals. I soon encountered a portion of an old tough fowl which had been boiled with bacon and greens, now cold. Not being able to relish or masticate this, a bowl of milk was presented; the light was too dim to perceive the want of cleanliness, but the sense of feeling was aroused when the edge of the bowl came in contact with the lips.

Here I found the laborious Jesse Walker, who, in the midst of poverty and hardships, was enjoying seasons of grace, and a powerful religious revival, which was in progress when he came, almost without a preacher. On the next day the quarterly meeting commenced at a new log meeting-house in the woods. Here was a considerable concourse of emigrants from different and distant regions—many of whom were new converts. Soon I saw that the kingdom of God among this simple-hearted people was not in word, but in power. Here I found James Axley, a biographical sketch of whom has recently appeared in your paper. He was then a shouting, happy convert, in a rude state, just taken from the quarry; he was humble and zealous; and when attempting to exhort, would shut his eyes and weep profusely. He was subsequently an extensive and useful itinerant; but the roughness never wore off, and much of his notoriety was ascribed to his singularity and rigidity. Here, too, I found Peter Cartwright, just from the quarry, but a thundering exhorter.

I presented these two young men to Conference for admission, on trial, near Georgetown, Kentucky, October, 1805.

Mississippi, May, 1854. L. GARRETT.

CONFERENCE HIGH SCHOOL, NORTH LOUISIANA.

At a meeting of the citizens held at Forest Grove, in Claiborne parish, on Saturday the 29th April, 1854, on motion made, the Rev. WM. B. BARNETT was called to the chair, and the Rev. J. C. BLACKMAN appointed secretary. Whereupon the object of the meeting having been in a brief manner explained by the chair, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas it was proposed by the last annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of this State, held at Mansfield, in December last, to establish a College or Seminary of Learning at some suitable point in North Louisiana, and a committee was also appointed to examine and report to the next annual conference such a place in this portion of the State as in their opinion would be most suitable and proper for the location of said College or Seminary; And whereas it is the opinion of this meeting that institutions for the promotion of learning should be separated as far as possible from all temptations and inducements to vice and folly, and extravagance, and surrounded with all the moral influence that can be placed around them, in order that the moral as well as the intellectual faculties may be properly trained and cultivated—Therefore, be it

Resolved, That in consideration of the premises, and in view of the fact that Forest Grove is centrally situated between the swamp lands of the Mississippi and Washita rivers on the one side, and of Red River on the other, in a neighborhood abundantly supplied with the best of water, and of lands unsurpassed in fertility by any in this portion of the State; and that it is already densely settled by a population well known for its intelligence, morality and public spirit, and in point of health, is fully equal to any in the State; it is the opinion of this meeting that said College or Seminary cannot be located at a more suitable place than this.

Resolved, That feeling as this meeting does a deep interest in the cause of education generally, and prompted by a desire to secure to themselves and their children, as well as to the community at large, the benefits to be derived from such an institution located in their midst, the chair appoint a committee of six to solicit subscriptions in behalf of said College or Seminary.

Resolved, That the chair also appoint the further number of three as a committee of correspondence, whose duty it shall be to address the conference committee on the subject of the location of said College or Seminary, calling their attention to this plan, and in a proper manner pointing out its superior claims and advantages, with the assurance, also, that if the claims of this place are properly taken into consideration, and should meet with the favorable notice of the committee and of the next annual conference, that this application will be supported by a liberal subscription on the part of the citizens of this community.

Whereupon, the chair appointed the following gentlemen to constitute said committee, to wit: Rev. James T. Wafer, Rev. W. C. Moreland, James Dyer, F. Taylor, James Cook and W. B. Nicholson as the committee to solicit subscriptions, and the Rev. James T. Wafer, Rev. W. C. Moreland and James Dyer as the committee of correspondence.

On motion of Joshua Willis, it was further Resolved, That a copy of the preamble and resolutions adopted by this meeting be forwarded to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

The meeting then adjourned sine die.

You can tell how wide a man's reputation is, but you can't tell how long.

SIT DOWN SAD SOUL.

Sit down, sad soul, and count
The moments flying;
Come, tell the sweet amount
That's lost by sighing;
How many smiles?—a score!
Then laugh, and count no more;
For day is dying!

Lie down, sad soul, and weep;
And no more measure
The flight of Time, nor weep
The loss of leisure;
But here, by this lone stream,
Lie down with us, and dream
Of starry treasure!

We dream—do thou the same;
We love forever;
We laugh, yet few we blame,
The gentle—never!
Stay, then, till sorrow dies;
Then hope, and happy skies,
Are thine forever!

Ministering Spirits.

The re-union of parents and children in heaven, as well as of other friends, is a cheering and delightful thought. And the idea that our departed friends may sometimes be near us, or wait to welcome us on the borders of the spirit land, is well suited to impress the mind.

A little girl in a family of my acquaintance—a lovely and precious child—lost her mother at an age too early to fix the loved features in her remembrance. She was as frail as beautiful; and as the bud of her heart unfolded, it seemed as if won by that mother's prayers to turn instinctively heavenward. The sweet, conscientious and prayer-loving child was the cherished one of the bereaved family. She would lie upon the lap of her friend, who took a mother's kind care of her, and winding one wasted arm around her neck, would say, "Now tell me about my mamma!" And when the oft-told tale had been repeated, she would ask softly, "take me into the parlor; I want to see my mamma." The request was never refused, and the affectionate child would lie for hours contentedly gazing on her mother's portrait. But—

Pale and wan she grew, and weakly,
Bearing all her pain so meekly,
That to them she still grew dearer,
As the trial hour grew nearer.

The hour came at last, and weeping neighbors assembled to see the child die. The dew of death was already on the flower, as the life sun was going down. The little chest heaved faintly—spasmodically.

"Do you know me, darling?" sobbed close to her ear the voice that was dearest, but it awoke no answer.

All at once a brightness, as if from the upper world, burst over the child's colorless countenance. The eyelids flashed open, the lips parted, the wan cuddling hands flew up, in the little one's last impulsive effort, as she looked piercingly into the far above.

"Mother!" she cried, with surprise and transport in her tone; and with that breath into her mother's bosom she passed.

THE MORMONS.—The last Edinburgh Review contains a complete history of this corrupt community, from its origin of the gross imposture through its whole scandalous progress down to the present moment. It gives a fair view of the doctrines and the condition of the Mormons, and holds them up, by a plain statement of undeniable facts, to the disgust and horror of the civilized world. The Review states that more dupes have been made in England to this mischievous and monstrous delusion than in all the world besides. Mentioning an authentic portrait of Joseph Smith—the Mahomet—the Review remarks: "Never did we see a face on which the hand of Heaven had more legibly written rascal." The face was a faithful index of the character. Astonishing as the growth of Mormonism seems even to those who never knew its founder, to those who did, it is so utterly astounding that they have no words to express their wonder. If the reader will bring to his recollection the most thorough, irredeemable, acknowledged scamp of all his acquaintance, and try to imagine such a man the successful head of a new religion, he will have some idea of the most boundless wonder of those who formerly knew Joe Smith, at the triumph of the imposture of the most notorious and graceless vagabond in all Western New York.

A HERO OF PATRIOTISM.—Gen. Wooster, to whose memory a monument has recently been erected in Danbury, Massachusetts, was killed at Ridgefield by an English bullet in 1777. The surgeon at the Danbury hospital, where the dying General was brought, probed his wounds, and searched for the bullet in vain, and the ball still remained in the body when it was consigned to the grave. Seventy-seven years afterwards, as we learn by the New [illegible] Republican, in 1854, when it was [illegible] to remove the remains of Wooster, the exact spot of his interment was uncertain. Digging near the place where a few aged persons supposed the grave to have been, soon the skull and larger bones of a man were found. Then two bunches of matted wire were thrown out; they were the epaulettes of the dead. Next was found a portion of a plume, and finally a lump of clay was tossed up, which, on being broken by the laborer, was discovered to contain the leaden bullet. This was conclusive proof of the identity of the remains. The bullet was known to be of English manufacture from its extraordinary size; being much larger than those used by the Americans. How little the soldier who sent the fatal messenger of death imagined that it would be held to the gaze of a great concourse of people, and honored by them as a precious relic seventy-seven years afterwards!

ST. LOUIS COMMONS.—The Supreme Court of the United States has just rendered a decision of great importance, in which many of our readers may take an interest:

It seems that in 1812, Congress passed an act affirming the title to these lands to be in those who held them, either solely or in common, previous to 1803. In 1824, Congress passed another act, fixing a period in which claimants, to them, under the law of 1812, should file their respective evidences of title, and donating the vacant lands among them—these the title to which failed to be thus proved up—for common school purposes. The courts of Missouri ruled that bona fide claimants, under the law of 1812, were quieted by the law of 1824, unless they had fulfilled the requirements as to proof of locality, &c., incident to the law of 1824. We understand that the Supreme Court have decided that the act of 1824 did not vitiate the rights of any bona fide claimant under the law of 1812, that not having donated to them the lands in question past any recall by a failure to comply with the subsequent requirements of the act of 1824.

AN IMMENSE BRIDGE.—A correspondent of the Chicago Press thus describes the great bridge at Peru, Ill., on the Illinois Central Railroad:

The great bridge of the Illinois Central Railroad, 3500 feet, or two-thirds of a mile in length, is rapidly approaching completion; the cars, however, will not run over it before October. This, your readers are aware, is the greatest work of the kind in the West, and is one of the seventy-five truss bridges now under contract by the enterprising firm of Stone & Boomer, of Chicago. It reaches from bluff to bluff, is 75 feet in height, contains upwards of 1,000,000 feet of timber, all worked up in Chicago, and how much iron and stone I know not. The mason work is not excelled, and is of the Joliet hydraulic rock. The top is to be covered with tin and be made water tight; the trains of cars are to run on top of all; beneath them and between the frames pass the roads for wagons, and underneath of all passes the river and canal. A wire-work railing is to be placed over each side of the track.

I am possible.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

COLUMBUS, GA., May 24.

A good many settlements have been made since my last. Book Concern settled; number of bishops and bishops themselves; Missionary Society, et cetera. Consequently, there is a general subsidence of speech, feeling and restless anxiety in the members of the General Conference. The Concern, Parent Missionary Society, Sunday School Society, Sunday School paper, in addition to the Christian Advocate of old standing, have all been settled in Nashville, Tennessee. This consolidation we have all confirmed to be inaugurated without resistance. The great West and Southwest, including two-thirds of our Church territory, and the fields in which our great, expanding, rapidly and richly developing prospects lie, have not, as yet, received that attention—patronage if you please—they deserve. This is my opinion, and that of many others, but it is only the opinion of a minority. The older and central Conferences are, doubtless, sincere in their opinion, that it is best for the Church that things should be as they are; but the wisdom and experience of future years—not far in the future either—will show that their course has been more convenient than far-seeing—more aggrandizing than progressive. Building up a powerful interest at a single point—absorbing and overriding, and, in a modified sense, enbsidizing all other sections—may be for glory, but is it for good? We desired to have these influences balanced, these favors distributed.

THE NEW BISHOPS will be ordained on Sunday next. Just now, it may not be unentertaining to our readers to be introduced to them, as their connectional career is beginning.

GEORGE FOSTER PIERCE, D. D.,

was elected on the first ballot. He was born in Greene county, Ga., Feb. 3, 1811: the first son among an interesting and talented family, and of a father, Dr. Lovick Pierce, who has largely contributed to the elevated position of our Church in Georgia, and moulded the moral character of the great State itself. He graduated in the University of Georgia at eighteen years of age. While in College, and a member of the Sophomore class, a memorable revival of religion, under the ministry of Dr. L. Pierce, was visited upon Athens, Ga.—the seat of the University. Many of the students shared in its benefits—about sixty of them; and among the rest his son. Such facts strongly recommend an efficient complaisancy over all colleges and institutions of learning. There the prophet of God presides over the fountain of influences, and casts in the salt.

He began preaching early in life, and his style is said to have been exceedingly ornate. He was admitted on trial as an itinerant in Georgia Conference at its first session after separation from the South Carolina Conference. That session was held in the city of Macon, in 1830. He was a member of the General Conference in Baltimore, 1840, and of every succeeding one: generally at the head of his delegation.

The Georgia Conference nobly led off in female education several years ago. The Female College at Macon, now in successful operation, was the first and greatest demonstration of the first chartered Female College in the South in Methodism, and, some say, in the world. The first President was George F. Pierce. Under his auspices the ship was put to sea. This position he held for the years 1839 and 1840. His oration, at the opening of the College, was extensively published and admired at the time, and in that line of effort is reckoned among the classics of the country. While here, he tried his hand, with no bad result, at that which every man thinks he can do—editorship. The Southern Ladies' Book was a fair and chaste Monthly, and had a good run in its day, and finally went out. The Publisher, however, and not the Editor, is responsible. Doubtful whether he was editor at the death; believe he was not. He gave it a start, endowed it with character, and it died in others' hands.

After serving in the rank and file of the ministry on the important stations, and as the Presiding Elder's district, and [illegible] the bidding of the Conference, Dr. Pierce was transferred (not elected) to the Presidency of Emory College about 1849. The College has prospered under his administration, and proved his executive talent.

It was generally conceded, before the meeting of the Conference, that George F. Pierce would be made bishop, whether there were one or many. His election, therefore, surprised none, and was gratifying to all. His antecedents are favorable. In person he is of faultless size and proportions. Indeed, few could be trusted with so fine a person—they would make an idol or a deity of it. He is dispond rather to neglect it. In character, there is a good report of all—them that are without, and within, too. A man of humble piety and closet prayer: in the prime of life, and ripe in all his faculties.

Bishop Pierce, as a preacher, will elevate the character of the Church; and as he will circulate widely, this is large gain. By such an example, the young men will be stimulated; and not so much by imitation as stimulation. The preaching of the whole [illegible] will be improved. His style has that strength of statement for which his venerable father's is so distinguished; to this, there is added an overwhelming flash. The Episcopacy is strengthened in him. I hope he may be prevailed upon to fix his domicil in the Southwest. The welfare of the Church requires it.

JOHN EARLY, D. D.

At many General Conferences this name has been balloted for in connection with this office. On the fifth ballot he was elected. He is a native of Bedford county, Virginia. His precise age is not known to me; I have met with no one who does know it. It can not be learned from him, as I can testify upon direct interrogation. He ignores age; wars against time; will not grow old. What energy is here indicated! Like another Joshua, he will not let the sun go down. His example and precept will have a salutary influence upon the superannuated list, now growing too fast and too large. Our young men are too ready to grow old: our middle aged men to retire upon grey hairs. Bishop Enrly is a standing rebuke.

He was converted and joined the Church in 1804, under the ministry of that man of blessed memory, Stith Mead. At the Virginia Conference, held in Newberne, N. C., February, 1807, he was received on trial. Of the General Conference in 1812, the first delegated one, he was a member; and the minutes of that body attest his presence at every session; his wisdom also. His name may be found on the right side of all great questions. In 1809, ordained deacon by Bishop Asbury; in 1811, elder, by Bishop McKendree. In 1813, 14, 15, the Bishop elect began to take lessons in that excellent school of Episcopal life—the Presiding Eldership. Not many members of the Virginia or North Carolinn Conferences, but could get from him the history of their beginnings—perhaps a note in his diary showing when they were licensed by him to exhort!

Cyrus knew all his soldiers by name; so saith the tradition. Bishop Early will, after one round of Annual Conferences, know every preacher by name. He never forgets a face or name. His acquaintance with men and things in detail, is immense. Unwritten volumes of record and reference are in his head. In this, he brings a valuable contribution to the Episcopal bench. As an Executive officer, he can get through vast business in a brief time, and satisfactorily. Posted up in all precedents—thoroughly posted up and acquainted with the economy of the Church, strong and erect, dignified and prompt, he will fill the chair of Annual Conferences as few men can. Honor is due, and honor is done to long service. Many inducements, both of a political and commercial character, have been held out; but none of these things moved him from the regular work. From an early day he has been President of the Board of Trustees of Randolph Macon College, and it is said was, at one time, President of five important Boards!

The Bishop is rumored to be about sixty-nine years old. You never catch him pluming himself on the long past—though his past is crowded with stirring events. You do not hear him saying—"Brethren, about forty years ago, when I was appointed," &c. Judge McLean met him in New York, not long since, attending to the Church suit. "Why, Dr. Early, you have not changed any these twenty years." "No sir, and I don't expect to change in the next twenty."

Though old, let the young man that can get ahead of Bishop Early. He is first up in the morning, first in the parlor, first at church, first at conference; or, if traveling, first to get tickets, first in the omnibus and first out, first in the hotel and first registered. Old is as old does. May his youth be renewed like the eagle's. May his bow abide in strength. His residence is in Lynchburg, Va., where are garnered up many domestic joys.

HUBBARD HINDE KAVANAUGH.

Accompanying General Wolfe, who fell at Quebec, as his army surgeon, was one Dr. Hinde. The wars over, he settled and became wealthy in the West. Under the early Methodist preachers his wife was converted. The Doctor, a skeptic, did not understand this. The case was not only new but strongly marked, for Mrs. H. shouted and rejoiced greatly. He shaved her head and put on a blister. The case was not cured, but grew worse—rather, confirmed. The upshot was, the Doctor became a convert, and out-did his wife in zeal. A Methodist tree, genuine in trunk and branches, grew up there. The daughter of that couple was the mother of Bishop Kavanaugh.

He was born in Clark county, Kentucky, 1802; joined the Church of his parents at fifteen; licensed to preach, 1812; admitted into the Kentucky Conference, 1823. There are four brothers, all of whom are Methodist preachers. No small part of the benefit the Church has in this new Bishop, is—his wife. It is no disparagement to the wives of others that she is mentioned. They have had five children, but now are childless. On the day of his election to the General Superintendency, she expressed herself, to a friend, ready then to start for California—any where her husband in his new office may be needed for the Church' good. A good example to the preachers' wives.

I have never heard Bishop Kavanaugh preach. His address is quiet and unostentatious; his bosom full of kindness to every creature; his piety and pious labors known and read of all. How he will succeed as an Executive officer, I have no clue beyond his well-balanced character. In that famously good school for bishops—the Presiding Eldership—he has not had experience; was in the office only once, and then for one year. At [illegible] he is expected as wielding a powerful eloquence in the pulpit. His success has a triumphant tone, and his warmest perorations are measured off almost in blank verse. In the structure of his discourses he carries a breadth of argument, and puts forth abundance of plain, strong, Gospel truth. No wonder that hearers, with itching ears, are sometimes heard complaining of rather long sermons. In physique, Bishop Kavanaugh is well built and compacted in frame, heavier, though not higher than most men. Hair short, sandy-colored, and brushed up; forehead low; face meditative and placid. He was recommended to the Church unanimously by his colleagues and delegates from Kentucky and Louisville Conferences, and elected on seventh ballot.

May these three be a blessing to the Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

NINETEENTH DAY—MAY 22.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Paine in the chair; divine service by Mr. Marvin.

The journals of Saturday were read and approved. Bishop Soule then took the chair.

Col. Cummings, of Philadelphia, was introduced to the Conference by Bishop Soule, and invited to a seat within the bar.

The chair called for reports from Committees.

Dr. Hamilton, chairman of the committee on Revisals, offered a report, and on motion of Dr. Boyle, the chairman was allowed to withdraw it.

Dr. W. A. Smith presented the report of the Commissioners in the Church suit; which was read, and on motion, was referred to a select committee.

Conference then took up the report of the committee on Missions, which had been made the order of the day.

The report was read by the Secretary, and it was moved that the Conference proceed to fill the blank as to where the Society should be located.

Dr. Boring opposed the motion on the ground that the Society had already been located at the city of Louisville, Ky., and no change could be made in the Constitution of the Society, without the concurrence of the Board of Managers.

Drs. Stevenson and Parsons stated that the Board of Managers had given to a committee of this Conference plenary powers, in reference to any change in the constitution, which might be deemed necessary.

Dr. Boring did not think the explanation satisfactory.

Dr. Stevenson further stated that a quorum of the Board of Managers were on this floor, and would concur in all necessary alterations in the constitution.

Dr. Sehon presented a paper showing the action of the Board of Managers on this subject.

Dr. Boring continued, and stated that the subject had been before the committee some three weeks, and this was the first time he had heard either of the paper handed by Dr. Sehon, or that there was a quorum of the Board of Managers present at this Conference. He did not believe the Board could delegate their powers in reference to a change in the constitution, or that a lawful meeting of that Board could be held in the city of Columbus, Ga. He believed there was only one alternative in the case, which was to adopt a substitute for the report, and the old constitution of the Missionary Society, and refer it to the Board of Managers at Louisville for concurrence.

Mr. Pitts thought the views of the speaker very strange. He saw no difficulty in the way, and believed the Conference competent to change the constitution.

Mr. McMahon reported that Dr. Boring had not been present at the deliberations and councils of the committee, in which case he thought the Dr. would have at this time entertained different opinions. The committee had acted advisedly, and he thought there was no difficulty in the way.

Mr. Blue agreed with Dr. Boring in reference to the authority of the Board, and thought it dangerous to give to a Board of Managers so much power as was contemplated by the report.

It was then moved by Mr. Hughes to fill the blank with Nashville as the place.

Mr. McMahon nominated Louisville.

Mr. Harrison remarked that the Society was chartered by the Legislature of Kentucky, which charter recognized the constitution of the Society, and the mode by which that constitution was to be amended. He thought that ultimately the Society should be located where the Book Concern was; but there were difficulties in the way of removing the Society now. He believed the proposed change of place would forfeit its charter.

Dr. Green regarded the Missionary Society as the creature of the General Conference, and could be amended or altered by the Conference at any time; besides, the present Board had concurred in the proposed changes. He thought the Society ought not to be removed during the present fiscal year.

Mr. Burton had difficulties, and with his present views could not vote to change the place of the Society.

Dr. Stevenson thought the Society and Book Concern should go together, and no difficulty would arise from a removal of the Society, provided it were prospectively done, and time given for the winding up of the business of the present Board.

Mr. McTyeire offered, as a substitute, that the Society be located in New Orleans. There they could procure a charter easily and readily. He objected to the centralizing policy which seemed to be likely to prevail. In Tennessee, they had already proposed three official papers, a publishing house, and two depositories. The central conferences had the power to do these things, but was it kind or just? In all the country west of the Mississippi river, there were no Church advantages, no Bishop, no official paper as yet, no Book Concern, or scarce any thing else. Why not then at least give the Missionary Society to some other place? He referred to the extent of the missions in the country bordering on New Orleans, and showed that the larger portion of all the colored missions and nearly all the German missions of the Church were in States bordering on Louisiana. Our Missionary operations would soon extend into Mexico and South America; which, in his judgment, was a strong argument in favor of New Orleans. We wanted a financial center for business of this kind, and such was New Orleans. At that place most of our foreign Missionaries embarked, and hereafter it would be more so. It was also the most favorable point for Missionary anniversaries.

Dr. Hamilton agreed with these views. This centralizing policy, he thought, would work badly, and the prospects at present were, that efforts would be made to carry the policy to a greater extent than some might now suppose. A large portion of the church territory and membership were remote from the proposed centralization, and could not be brought into contact with it. He hoped that New Orleans would be selected.

Mr. Johnson had been connected with our Missionary operations for seventeen years. There were two great points of commercial central operations within our bounds, New Orleans and St. Louis; to which points our operations must be directed; and if we act wisely, we would either select one of these points, or at least have assistant Treasurers there.

Dr. Green wished to say a word in reference to Nashville. The Church, South, had done nothing for Nashville; it proposed to put a publishing house there. He could not see what would be gained by locating at New Orleans; if there would, let it go there, or any where else where the interests of the Church required it.

Mr. Roesser wished to know if the large contributions which had been claimed for New Orleans, had not been made by visitors? He was opposed to New Orleans, and in favor of Louisville.

Dr. Mitchell moved that the present discussion be stopped at 12½ o'clock.

Mr. Walker offered a substitute to the effect that we now take the vote; which motion prevailed. The vote was taken on Mr. McTyeire's substitute, which was lost by a vote of 59 to 43.

Dr. Green then moved that the Society be located at Nashville after the 3d Monday of 1855; which motion prevailed.

Dr. Parsons then moved, that when the Conference adjourn, it adjourn to meet at 3½ o'clock.

Dr. Deems then moved, that the Conference now adjourn; which motion was lost, and Conference proceeded to the further consideration of the report of the Mission Committee. The report was read, item by item. A portion of it was adopted after some amendments; and the time for adjournment having arrived, Conference adjourned with the benediction by the Bishop.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met, Bishop Soule in the chair; divine service by Mr. Rigge.

The journals of the morning session were read and approved.

Mr. Keener moved that the vote by which the Missionary Society was located at Nashville, be reconsidered. He briefly gave his reasons for this motion. He believed that there was a misapprehension in the minds of members as to the condition and prospects of New Orleans. It was gradually and constantly advancing. Other denominations were making efforts to establish themselves in that city, and we should do likewise. We needed in this matter a financial center, and in that city we might have it. There was no necessary connection between the Missionary board and the Book Concern. New Orleans was to be the point of embarcation for our Missionaries. A line of steamers would soon run from San Francisco to China, by which route our connection with the China mission must be kept up, etc.

Dr. Wightman was against the motion to reconsider. He sympathized with the opposition to centralization, as a general thing, but there were exceptions, and this was one. Unless the present programme of our Missionary operations were changed, the joint meeting of the Board and Bishops must take place in August, an improper and unsafe time for visiting New Orleans. For this and various other reasons, he was opposed to a reconsideration of the vote.

Dr. Hamilton did not suppose it really necessary that the meeting alluded to should take place in the month of August.

Mr. Walker moved to lay the motion to reconsider, on the table, which prevailed.

Bishop Andrew presented a communication from C. A. Peabody, Esq., accompanied by a basket of flowers and strawberries, and tendering to the Bishops and members of the Conference, a polite invitation to visit his strawberry plantation, and test the flavor and excellency of his fruit. A unanimous vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Peabody for his very beautiful present and his invitation; and it was resolved to accept it on the afternoon of Saturday next.

Dr. Wadeworth offered a resolution appointing Tuesday, the 30th inst., as the day for the final adjournment of this Conference.

Dr. Wadsworth advocated, and Dr. Doggett opposed this motion.

Dr. Boyle agreed with Dr. Doggett. We had been sent here to do the business of the Church; when that was done, he was ready to adjourn, not till then.

Mr. Langhorne hoped the motion would prevail. He was tired of listening to long speeches. The business might be done by the time appointed, if we went at it.

The vote was taken, and the motion fixing the time of adjournment on the 30th instant, prevailed.

Dr. W. Smith offered a resolution asking that the report of the committee on Boundaries be made the order of the day for to-morrow, at 9½ o'clock. The motion was lost.

Mr. Langhorne offered a resolution in reference to changing the discipline; laid on the table under the rule.

The Conference then resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on Missions, which was again read, item by item, and adopted.

On motion of Dr. Parsons, the Conference went into the election of Missionary officers, as provided for in the Constitution.

Dr. Parsons nominated Dr. Sehon, and Mr. Garrett nominated Mr. Keenor. On balloting, Dr. Sehon was pronounced duly elected.

W. R. Elliston, Esq., of Nashville, was nominated by Dr. Green as Treasurer, and duly elected.

Rev. E. H. Myers was nominated by Mr. Walker as assistant Treasurer at Charleston, and elected.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire was nominated by Mr. Pierce, and elected assistant Treasurer at New Orleans; and Rev. D. R. McAnally was nominated by Mr. Johnson, and elected assistant Treasurer at St. Louis.

On motion of Dr. Deems, it was resolved that the delegations embraced in the several missionary districts be requested to report to-morrow morning the traveling Elders suitable to represent those districts in the joint meeting of the Bishops and Missionary Board.

A communication from Rev. T. Stringfield and others, in reference to the Helston Christian Advocate, was read, and referred to the committee on Books and Periodicals.

On motion, adjourned.

TWENTIETH DAY—MAY 23.

The chief portion of the day was spent in debating a report from the committee on Revisals. The matter, however, was deferred.

The ordination of the new Bishops is to take place to-morrow.

The Conference passed a vote of thanks to Mr. Peabody, one of the Editors of the "Soil of the South." The reason of this will be seen in the following extract from the Columbia Times:

AN AGREEABLE INCIDENT.—On Monday the 22d, Mr. Peabody, of the Soil of the South, presented to the Bishops a basket of his large and luscious strawberries, ornamented with evergreens and flowers, and extended to the whole Conference an invitation to visit his house and indulge in strawberries and cream on Saturday the 27th inst. This is magnificent hospitality, and worthy of the generous host.

We are requested by Mr. Peabody to state that those gentlemen who entertain the clergy, are all included in his invitation. He especially requests that the clergy will bring their ladies with them. And we pledge ourselves that Peabody will see that "none go away dissatisfied." The Mayor and Council are also invited.

The Conference have accepted the invitation of Mr. Peabody, and the body will attend.

[We have very agreeable advices of this magnificent entertainment. The incidents and particulars, done up in the best vein of the Editorial Correspondence, will afford our readers of next week a delightful repast, not of, but about strawberries—the next best thing. Doubtless our brethren and fathers partook representatively, and we, their constituents, as in duty bound, smack our lips! Albeit, a pure Athenian democracy would suit our tastes when an order of the day like this comes up for digestion. Pro tem.]

TWENTY-FIRST DAY—MAY 24.

Conference met at 9 o'clock, Bishop Paine in the chair; religious exercises by Mr. Wesson.

The journals of the preceding day were read and approved.

Dr. Wightman, chairman of the committee on Episcopacy, offered report No. 6, which was laid on the table under the rule.

Dr. Lee, chairman of the committee on Itinerancy, offered report No. 1, which was read. Mr. Bruce moved that it be adopted; a short discussion followed, in which Mr. P. F. Smith, Drs. Lee and Winans, Mr. Crouch and others participated. Bishops Soule, Andrew and Paine explained what had been the usage of the Church in the premises.

Mr. Garrett moved that the report be laid on the table, which was lost.

Dr. Hamilton then moved an amendment, which was afterwards withdrawn.

On motion of Mr. Walker, the whole subject was then laid on the table.

Bishop Paine presented a communication from the Bishops, on the subject of leaving preachers without appointments; which, on motion, was referred to the committee on Itinerancy.

Dr. Lee presented report No. 2, from the committee on Itinerancy, which was read; and after an ineffectual effort to lay it on the table, it was moved that it be amended by referring the matter back to the Virginia Conference, as the report was in reference to a preacher who had been located by that conference at the request of his friends—the preacher himself being absent and dissenting from the position of his friends, who asked a location.

This amendment was laid on the table by motion of Mr. Dorman. The vote was then taken on the report, which was adopted.

Dr. Lee then offered report No. 3, which was adopted.

Also report No. 4, which was, on motion, adopted.

Also report No. 5, which was read and adopted.

Also report No. 6, which was, on motion, laid on the table for the present.

Dr. Smith also presented report No. 3, which was read and then taken up seriatim. After several of the items were passed, on motion of Dr. Wadeworth, it was resolved that an afternoon session should be held. Pending some discussion on the subject of the Quarterly Review, Bishop Soule presented a memorial from Charlotte, N. C., adverse to a transfer to the North Carolina Conference; and one from Fayettoville, N. C., asking to be transferred to the South Carolina Conferences. These were read, and, on motion, laid on the table; after which, the conference adjourned.

Various substitutes were proposed for the recommendation embraced in the report, but were all lost; and the conference at length, without deciding the subject, on motion, adjourned.

Prior to the adjournment, Bishop Paine stated that as Bishop Andrew might be compelled to leave Columbus shortly, and wished to be present at the consecration of the Bishops elect, it would be proper to bring on the ordination to-morrow. Whereupon, 4 o'clock, P. M., was fixed on as the hour.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY—MAY 25.

Conference met at 9 o'clock, Bishop Andrew in the chair; religious exercises by C. F. Deems.

The journals of the preceding day were read and approved.

Bishop Soule then took the chair, and called for reports from standing committees.

Dr. Hamilton, chairman of the committee on Temperance, offered a report, which was read and laid on the table under the rule.

Dr. Green, chairman of the committee on the 9th Section, part 2, of the book of Discipline, offered a report, which was read, and Dr. Winans moved a suspension of the rule which required such reports to lie on the table one day. The rule was suspended, and the resolution of the report recommending the expunging of the 9th Section, was adopted by a rising vote, one member voting against it.

On a motion to adopt the preamble of the report, considerable variety of opinion was expressed, and a substitute offered by Mr. Johnson was finally adopted, referring the preamble to the Bishops to revise and publish it in such form as they may deem advisable.

Dr. Green then presented a further report from the same committee, which was read, and the resolution it reported was adopted, after striking out a part of the preamble.

The third part of the report was then presented.

Dr. Whiteford Smith offered an amendment to the effect that all, except the resolution, should be stricken out; which motion prevailed.

The motion recurring on the report, as amended, it was moved by Dr. Boyle that it be laid on the table, which motion prevailed; and the 3d part of the report was laid on the table.

Dr. Wightman, chairman of the special committee, appointed to devise a plan for the publication of the lives of Bishops McKendree and Soule, presented a report, which was read, and at the request of Bishop Paine, was laid on the table for the present.

Dr. Hoskle, chairman of the committee appointed on the report of the Church Commissioners, offered a report, which was read and laid on the table for the present.

Dr. Boring, from the committee on the memorial of Mrs. Bascom, offered a report recommending the book agents to publish the Manuscript Works of Bishop Bascom, under the editorial supervision of the Rev. T. N. Ralston. This report was on motion adopted.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

ORDINATION OF BISHOPS.

The ordination of George F. Pierce, John Early and Hubbard H. Kavanaugh, Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, took place in the Methodist church, at 4 o'clock.

The ordination service was introduced by Bishop Andrew, who read the Collect and Epistle. Bishop Capers read the Gospel.

Bishop Soule then called the name of Geo. F. Pierce, who was presented by his father, Dr. L. Pierce, of the Georgia Conference; and the name of John Early, who was presented by Dr. Winans, of the Mississippi Conference; and also the name of H. H. Kavanaugh, who was presented by Dr. Stevenson, of the Louisville Conference.

Bishop Soule then proceeded with the service to the end of the questions and answers. Bishop Paine followed to the end of the prayer meeting to the imposition of hands.

Bishop Soule then took the lead in the laying on of hands. Bishops Andrew, Capers and Paine, Drs. Pierce, Winans and Stevenson united in the solemn ceremony.

The Bible was presented by Bishop Andrew, and the service was concluded by Bishop Capers.

Conference was then called to order by Bishop Paine.

The journals of the morning session were read and approved.

Mr. Branham, as a reserve delegate, was announced as taking the place of Bishop Pierce in the subsequent business of the conference.

It was then moved that the business on which the conference closed its session on yesterday, be taken up, which was the 8th item in the report of the committee on books.

Mr. W. Patten offered a substitute for that part of the report, which was read and supported at some length by the mover; when Mr. Keener took the floor in opposition, and read in argument a paper setting forth a different plan of operations; and closed by moving to lay the substitute of Mr. Patton on the table; which motion prevailed.

Dr. Parsons then offered a substitute, which was read and briefly advocated by the mover, Drs. Hamilton and Drake, and opposed by Drs. Green, Smith, and others; when Mr. Dorman moved to lay the substitute on the table; which motion was lost, and the substitute was adopted by a vote of 52 to 47.

On motion, the conference then adjourned.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY—MAY 26.

Conference met at 9 o'clock, Bishop Paine in the chair; religious exercises by Mr. Harrison.

The journals of the preceding day were read and approved.

Bishop Paine then took the chair.

Mr. Allen moved that the regular business be suspended, in order to reconsider the vote by which the report No. 3 of the committee on the 9th Section was laid on the table. Which motion was afterwards withdrawn by the mover, and then renewed by Mr. Garrett.

On this motion considerable discussion arose, in which Messrs. Johnson, Dorman, Caples, Fly, Ferguson, McMahon, Dre. W. A. Smith and Green, Messrs. Cowles, Langhorne, Dr. L. Pierce and others participated. The vote was taken and the rule was suspended.

Dr. Winans then moved to reconsider the vote by which report No. 3 of the committee on the 9th Section was laid on the table; which motion prevailed. This report recommended the striking out of the rule forbidding the "buying and selling of men, women and children," etc.

Dr. Winans then moved that the report of the committee be adopted. The ayes and nays were called for, and the following vote was given:

AYES—Messrs. Marvin, Stevenson, Parsons, Atkins, Doggett, Dibbrell, W. A. Smith, Lee, Hanner, Green, Henkle, Hughes, Scruggs, Erwin, Taylor, Wadsworth, Riggs, McAlister, Stanford, Cobb, Brock, Owen, McMahon, Wightman, Gumewell, W. Smith, Weer, McSwain, Boyd, Stacy, Campbell, Pierce, of Mi., Winans, Fly, Anthony, Pierce, of Ga., Parks, Glenn, Evans, Penrce, Lewis, Mann, Simmons, Branham, Hamilton, Summers, Dorman, Heard, McDaniel, Ferguson, Garrett, McTyeire, P. The Discipline requiring a two-thirds vote to carry the measure, it was lost.

Dr. Hamilton offered a resolution providing for the action of the "previous question" during the remainder of the session; which resolution was adopted.

Mr. Evans offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the general rule in the book of Discipline on the "buying and selling of men, women and children, with an intention to enslave them," is understood as referring exclusively to the slave trade as prohibited by the constitution and laws of the United States.

The previous question was then moved, and the vote on the resolution was called for by ayes and nays:

An amendment of Dr. Whiteford Smith was laid on the table for the present; and on motion of Dr. Wightman, it was resolved that the maintennnce of the Bishops be dropped from the proceeds of the Book Concern.

On motion, conference then adjourned to meet at 3½ o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met at 3½ o'clock, Bishop Paine in the chair; religious exercises by Mr. Harringer.

The journals of the morning session were read and approved.

Mr. Stncey asked leave to present a report from the minority of the committee on Boundaries. Leave was granted, and the report was read, and, on motion, laid on the table. Both of these reports referred to the boundaries between the North and South Carolina Conferences.

Dr. W. A. Smith then moved that the conference take up the report of the Book Committee; which was agreed to. The report was read, item by item; and Mr. Bluemore moved to reconsider the vote by which Nashville was selected as the site of the publishing house.

Mr. Scruggs moved to lay this motion on the table. Lost.

The chair stated that there were grave doubts as to the propriety of allowing the presentation of any resolution proposing to reconsider an act which, by ballot, fixed the location of the publishing house. However, he did not rule out the motion to reconsider.

Messrs. McFarland, Harris, McMahon and Allen addressed the conference in advocacy of Memphis. After some remarks by Mr. Green and Bishop Soule, Dr. Hamilton moved the previous question, which was sustained.

The conference then refused to reconsider.

The report was voted on, item by item, and the 1st, 2d and 3d were adopted.

On the 4th item, Mr. Heard moved to strike out $75,000 and insert $25,000; which was lost.

The 5th was also adopted.

For the 7th, Dr. Hamilton offered a substitute; pending the consideration of which conference, on motion, adjourned.

BOOK NOTICES.

SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS, examined and explained. Judge Edmonds refuted, or a Scientific Exposition of the Involuntary Powers of the Human Mind: By JOHN BOVEE DODS.

This book is very defective in style, and the author's manner is highly egotistical and of bad taste. We think there are some flies in it—theologically. The position of the author in regard to the Manifestations is probably, somewhere near the truth. He admits the facts, and resolves them into phenomena of our mental and physical nature. He accounts for the rappings and writing plausibly without the agency of disembodied spirits. His exposition of the involuntary powers of the mind—the key of his spiritual solutions—is new and entertaining. We are not prepared to adopt his theory, but have read it with interest.

This book is of surpassing interest, written in a straightforward, concise style. It leads the reader into the center of the subject—revealing the social, moral, and physical condition of this vast and unique empire. The work is abundantly illustrated. A HISTORY OF GREECE, FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE ROMAN CONQUEST: By WM. SMITH, LL. D. Revised with an Appendix, by George W. Greene, A. M. New York: Harper & Brothers.

This work is intended principally for schools, and is mainly based upon Grote. What its claims to excellence are, we have not time to determine just now. History is a progressive science, and we do not know why every new one may not be an improvement on those that have been written; this should be the case, and we hope it is in the present instance.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY FOR JUNE.—We are indebted to Messrs. McGinnis & Carver for this choice Magazine. Our stock of superlatives have been exhausted on the previous numbers. This number possesses more variety than usual. The Editor's table alone is worth more than the price of the volume. The position of the Clergy, is the topic in the present number.

LOCALE OF THE MISSIONARY BOARD.—The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church have determined to transfer the Missionary head-quarters of the Church from Louisville, Ky., to Nashville, Tenn. It has heretofore been the policy of the Church to make the Book Concern the place of meeting of the Missionary Board. This custom controlled the question. The speech of Mr. McTyeire, in favor of New Orleans, was cogent and overwhelming; and we are quite sure that he would have carried his point but for the force of habit. As it was, the vote was a close one.

The election of Dr. Sehon to the Secretaryship gives general satisfaction. Besides being a polished gentleman, and an eloquent orator, he has peculiar claims to the confidence of the South, as he was on the other side of the line when the Church divided, and followed Bishop Soule across the border. He is, therefore, peculiarly qualified to preside over the Missions to the blacks, as by his works we know him to be trustworthy.—Times & Sentinel.

DIED—Of Whooping Cough, in Mobile, May 5th, 1854, CAROLINE, daughter of Dr. R. L. and Charlotte Watkins, aged about 19 months.

Thus it is that our Heavenly Father severe the ties that bind us to earth, by removing, one by one, the objects of the heart's affections: thus it is, too, that Heaven becomes the more inviting to us, since it is the home, the bright and happy home of our loved ones. In thus penning the brief notice of the death of a sweet child, and one so dear to parents and friends, while we weep with those that weep, we would affectionately point them to Him who hath said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

"Oh! hadst thou still on earth remained,
Vision of beauty! fair as brief!
How soon thy brightness had been stained
With passion or with grief!
Now not a sullying breath can rise
To dim thy glory to the skies."

WM. M. LOVELADY.

Mobile, May 11, 1854.

At the residence of Maj. Crook, in Monroe county, Ala., on the 12th of March, N. J. CARR, in the 26th year of his age.

The deceased was a native of the above county. In Claiborne he spent his schoolboy days: In 1842 he professed conversion and joined the M. E. Church, South; and for several years manifested much love and zeal for the cause of Christ. It is, however, the impression of the writer, that when he grew up to maturer years and engaged in business life, there was an abatement of his zeal and love for God and His cause. No departure, however, from the rules of morality in the general acceptation of that term. In a word, he was a high-toned gentleman, with more than an ordinary cultivation, and native intellect above the mediocrity. Fell disease arrested him in the spring-time of life's pilgrimage. He had contracted a chronic disease which baffled all remedial skill. He lingered for a year; and if we are right in our belief, the eye of his faith had been turned away from its steady gaze upon the Author and Finisher of his faith. Fortunately for him that death lingered, and the King of Terrors stayed his hand upon the threshold of life's vitals while life was thus passed in the scale of probation. He trimmed his lamp and examined up his faith for the last mortal conflict. He spoke of his approaching dissolution with perfect calmness and resignation. He said he was not afraid to die, and besought his friends to meet him in Heaven. If there is consolation to the friends of departed ones, surely it is in the assurance that they have gone to the land "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." Let us not sorrow as those who have no comfort; for he gave undoubted evidence that his peace was made with God. He breathed his last breath so quietly that one could not discern the link between time and eternity.

"He wrapped the drapery of his couch around him, and lay down to pleasant dreams."

Arrest of a Fugitive Slave in Boston.

GREAT EXCITEMENT.

United States Deputy Marshal Killed,

ATTEMPT TO RESCUE THE FUGITIVE.

MILITARY OUT.

BOSTON, May 27.—Great excitement was caused in the city yesterday by the arrest of Burns, a fugitive slave. The mob made an attempt last night to rescue him, and a United States Deputy Marshal was killed, while attempting to maintain the laws.

The examination of the slave is progressing before a United States Commissioner, and a mob of four or five thousand persons surrounded the Court-house. The military has been ordered out.

BOSTON, May 27, Night.—The examination of the case of the fugitive, Burns, has been postponed till Monday. The military force of the city has turned out in large numbers, and there is no abatement in the excitement. A large number of arrests have been made.

BOSTON, May 28.—Col. Suttle, the owner of the slave Burns, has offered to sell him for $1200, and it is understood that the money is nearly all subscribed.

PROTECTION AGAINST THE IRISH.

The Reverend Theodore Parker and Wendell Phillips have applied to the authorities for protection against the Irish, who have threatened vengeance in consequence of the killing of officer Batchelder, which occurrence took place on Friday night. The military force of the city is under arms.

BOSTON, May 29.—The examination of Burns, the fugitive, is progressing to-day, and Court Square is crowded by an excited populace. The Court House is strongly guarded by the military.

BOSTON, May 29.—The excitement continues, and the report that Col. Suttle had offered to sell Burns has been denied. No further outbreak, however, is reported. Large delegations of abolitionists from the neighboring towns are expected. Circulars of an inflammatory character, addressed to the people of New England, have been distributed. There was a very large sale of revolvers in Boston, yesterday.

FALLING OF A DRAWBRIDGE.

NEW YORK, May 29.—The draw bridge at Hoboken fell yesterday and several hundred people were precipitated into the water. A large number were injured and many are believed to have been killed.

A BELLIGERENT MESSAGE.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—It is supposed that President Pierce will send in to the Senate and House of Representatives, on Monday, a very belligerent message in regard to Cuba.

THE NEBRASKA BILL AND THE NEW YORK "HARDS."

NEW YORK, May 29.—The New York "Hards" have issued a circular, defending their course against the Nebraska bill—denouncing President Pierce as a tool of the slave power, and predicting a war with Spain for the acquisition of Cuba, as a slave State.

STEAMBOATS PASSING.

We have Galveston papers as late as the 25th ult., from which we extract the following:

MORE TEXAS CATTLE FOR CALIFORNIA.—The Victoria Advocate, of the 13th inst., informs us that Messrs. McRae and Rankin recently passed through that town, with a drove of seven hundred stock-cattle and heeves, on their way to California. This company consisted of fifteen hardy, resolute men, beside Messrs. McRae and Rankin. They were all armed with revolvers and other weapons, and were fully prepared, in every respect, to "hold their own," if they should happen to "fall in" with any hostile party of Indians, not numbering more than ten to their one. The Advocate learns that there are several similar companies, either on their way to California, or about to start there.

We have lately had an abundance of rain, and we learn that rain has fallen almost daily for some days past, throughout the country. The corn crop is now beyond the reach of drought, and from all accounts the yield will be a very heavy one.

The Brenham Enquiror says efforts are being made to establish a cotton factory at Chappell Hill.

The Recorder says the cotton is in blossom on several plantations on the Brazos.

THE INTERIOR.—The Madison Journal says that it has been raining almost constantly for the last week, and the planter whose crop is in any thing like decent condition may consider himself fortunate.

ANOTHER MURDER IN VERMILION.—Last Saturday, 20th ult., a lad not yet fifteen years old, son of Celestin Nunez, was playing with a negro boy, a slave of Gérard Decuir, when a difficulty arising between them, the son of C. Nunez takes a gun and shoots down his adversary dead at his feet. [Independent.

ABSENCE OF MIND.—Lord Holland tells of a man remarkable for absence of mind, who, dining once on a shabby repast with a friend,

The Arrest of Aaron Burr in Alabama.

It became evident early in the summer of 1806, that Burr had some designs on foot; and the silence and secrecy which attended all of his movements failed not to excite the suspicions of the Government, through their secret agents. President Jefferson, in his special message of January 23, 1807, says that he had two distinct objects in view "one of these the severance of the union of the States by the Alleghany mountains; the other an attack on Mexico; a third object was provided merely ostensible, to-wit: the settlement of a pretended purchase of a tract of country on the Washita, claimed by a Baron Bastrop."

In the latter part of the year 1806, a party of Kentuckians, induced by the proclamation of President Jefferson, arrested Burr, and brought him to trial. Henry Clay, whom Burr had previously and frequently met, appeared as his counsel; and he was acquitted upon the ground of insufficiency of evidence to convict. Thus released, he continued down the Mississippi with a few boats and men; but just above Natchez he was again arrested by Colonel Claiborne, at the instance of the Governor of Mississippi. Again a prisoner of the United States, public sympathy in that section was strongly excited, and he found no difficulty in giving the necessary bond for his appearance at court. When brought before court, he denied that his offences came within the jurisdiction of Mississippi. The Attorney-General took sides with him, and insisted that he should be released from his bail and sent to a competent tribunal. The Judges, however, refusing to grant the application for discharge, it was ascertained at the opening of the court the prisoner had departed. Officers were at once dispatched in pursuit, and large rewards offered for his apprehension. And this brings us to the circumstances of his arrest in Alabama.

About a month after his failure to appear at court, Burr found himself, with one companion, in the vicinity of the village of Wakefield, Washington county, Ala. Fearful of detection he entered the town, under cover of the night, with the determination of passing through and gaining, if possible, the house of Col. Hinson, a gentleman whom he had met at Natchez, and who had invited him to his house. Riding up to the door of a cabin, Burr inquired of two young men, seated within, first for the tavern and then for directions to Col. Hinson's. Perkins, one of the young men replied that it was several miles to Hinson's, that the way was difficult to find, and that dangerous creeks intervened. The travelers thanked them for their information and rode off. As they passed the door the light shone fully upon the face of the elder gentleman. Perkins was a close observer; and the richly caparisoned horse, the fine saddle and holsters, the noble and dignified mien of the stranger, observable despite his coarse dress, and the bright sparkling eye, which flashed from beneath his slouched hat, seemed to thrust conviction upon him, and he at once exclaimed, "that's Aaron Burr!"

Satisfied as to the correctness of his conclusion, Perkins at once sought Brightwell, the sheriff; and in a very short time the two were following closely upon the tracks of the travelers. Arriving at Col. Hinson's, Burr found that his friend was absent; and his request for a night's entertainment was tacitly refused—probably through fear, by Mrs. Hinson, who quietly closed the window in reply. Making their way to the kitchen, they seated themselves by the fire, intending to pass the night there; but the sheriff, who was a relation of Mrs. Hinson, appearing soon after, she hastily prepared supper for them. During supper, Burr charmed the hostess with his elegant conversation, though evidently disconcerted by the keen glances of the sheriff, who remained in the room. As the former left the table before the others, Mrs. Hinson, at the instance of the sheriff, turned to the other traveler and said, "have I not the pleasure of entertaining Col. Burr in the gentleman who has just walked out?" Much confused, he made no answer, but, rising, walked off. Brightwell was now satisfied that it was really Burr, but the fascinating address of the latter had won his heart, and he did not return to Perkins, whom he had left shivering with cold in the adjoining woods.

Perkins, in the meantime, becoming impatient, and still believing he was right, made his way, in haste, to Fort Stoddard and reported to Capt. E. P. Gaines. A file of soldiers was at once put in motion under the command of Capt. Gaines. Directed by Perkins, the party met Burr and his companion about 9 o'clock in the morning, when the following conversation ensued:

Gaines.—I presume, sir, I have the honor of addressing Col. Burr?

Stranger.—I am a traveler in the country, and do not recognize your right to ask such a question.

Gaines.—I arrest you at the instance of the Federal Government.

Stranger.—By what authority do you arrest a traveler, on the highway, on his private business?

Gaines.—I am an officer of the army. I hold in my hands the proclamations of the President and Governor, directing your arrest.

Stranger.—You are a young man, and may not be aware of the responsibilities which result from arresting travelers.

Gaines.—I am aware of the responsibilities, but I know my duty.

Burr still persisted in denouncing the arrest unjust and unwarranted, and attempted to frighten Gaines from the discharge of his duty, but the latter sternly replied, "you are my prisoner, sir, and must accompany me to Fort Stoddard." Finding resistance of no avail, Burr yielded, and soon found himself a prisoner in Fort Stoddard.

During his stay in the Fort, his kind attentions to George S. Gaines, (brother of the Captain) whom he found dangerously ill—his gentlemanly deportment and agreeable address towards all, made him many friends. He spent much of his time in the company of the accomplished Mrs. Gaines, who enjoyed much of his brilliant conversation. That lady sympathised deeply with the unhappy position of Burr, and in common with the other ladies of the Fort shed tears when she saw him depart for Washington, guarded by a file of soldiers.

The escort was placed under the command of Perkins, at whose instance Burr had been arrested. With a party of ten men, Perkins set out upon his arduous journey, his route lying up the Alabama river to the present city of Montgomery, thence north-eastward, through Georgia, South and North Carolina into Virginia.

We do not propose following the party through their many adventures—at one time winding their way through almost impenetrable forest, at another swimming swollen streams—riding day by day, wet to the skin by the driving, pelting rain, and lying at night upon piles of knots and chunks to keep above the water which covered the swamps—continually alarmed by the howlings of wolves and other wild beasts—and their paths invested by bands of savages not less ferocious, etc., etc.

Through all these and similar trials Perkins led his prisoner safely; and strange to say, during the whole route no word of complaint escaped the lips of the latter. Amid all these adversities, in which the powers of nature as well as of man seemed conspiring to crush him, his spirit sunk not. Truly, his situation was one to depress an ordinary spirit. There was he, who had been alike distinguished in the field and the cabinet—who had enjoyed the highest favors of a country whose institutions still bear the impress of his genius—there was he, reposing beneath a rude tent in the wilds of Alabama, a prisoner of the United States, surrounded by a group of soldiers whose only business was to watch him, and without one friend, one congenial spirit, to console and befriend. Apart from this, his wife had lately died, his only child was afar off, ignorant, perhaps, of his sad condition; his professional affairs disarranged, and he himself ostracized by that State with whose history his name was indissolubly connected—and branded wherever he went as "murderer" and "traitor." Yet did Aaron Burr rise superior to his fallen fortunes, and during the whole journey he strode his horse with a dignity of mien not unbecoming the position he had lately filled, while his keen eye flashed with the light of conscious superiority upon the rude guard which adverse circumstances had placed over him.

While there was much of the suaviter in modo in Burr's address, there was a dignity of manner about him, which never failed to rebuke the officious and idly curious. Just after passing the Oconee river, the party passed the night for the first time under the roof of a house. Bevin, the landlord, was quite officious, and his loquacity soon brought upon him a merited rebuke. Unacquainted with the persons or the objects of the party, he yet discovspirney;" asked if he had not been arrested, and made many sneering remarks upon his present fallen condition. Perkins and his companions, much embarrassed, tried to change the subject, and elude his inquiries by seeming inattention; but he still persisted, when Burr, rising up to his full height and fixing upon the landlord his flashing eye, said, "I am Aaron Burr! what is it you want with me?" Bevin, as if thunderstruck, fairly crouched beneath the withering glance; and during the remainder of their stay could hardly summon courage to ask their commands, though most obsequious in his attentions.

As the party drew near to the confines of South Carolina, Perkins caused his prisoner to be more carefully guarded. Col. Alston, who had married Burr's only child, resided in this State, and Perkins feared lest some attempt at a rescue should be made. Burr also evidently had some hopes of such an event, and was prepared at any time to take advantage of it—as was proved by an incident which we take from Mr. Pickett. In passing through the county town of Chester District, the party passed near a tavern, before which a crowd of men were assembled. Seeing the collection of men so near him, Burr threw himself from his horse and exclaimed, in a loud voice, "I am Aaron Burr, under military arrest, and claim the protection of the civil authorities!" Perkins and several of his companions at once dismounted, and the former ordered the prisoner to remount. Burr, in a most defiant manner, said, "I will not!" Being unwilling to shoot him, Perkins threw down his pistols—both of which he held in his hands—and seizing Burr around the waist, threw him into his saddle. Thomas Malone caught the reins of the horse, slipped them over his head, and led the animal rapidly on. The astonished citizens saw a party enter their village with a prisoner, heard him appeal to them for protection in the most audible and imploring manner, saw armed men immediately surrounding him and thrust him into his saddle, and then the whole party vanish from their presence before they could recover from their confusion.

Soon after this incident, Perkins obtained a gig, and in this Burr passed, without further adventure, the remainder of his journey to Fredericksburg, where dispatches from the President caused Perkins to take the prisoner to Richmond.

Here he was arraigned and tried, first for high treason, then for misdemeanor, both of which charges he was acquitted. The gravest charge proved against Burr was that he had written a letter in cypher, avowing his design of seizing Baton Rouge as a preliminary measure, and then extending his conquests to the Spanish provinces. But this, be it remembered, was proved upon the evidence of Gen. Wilkinson, whose own skirts were not entirely free in this case.

We do not wish to be regarded as an advocate or an admirer of Aaron Burr. While we respect his genius, we find much in his private character to contemn. But we must believe that the severe censure which public opinion heaped upon him, was, to say the least, over hasty; and has thrown too much odium upon his once fair name. There is some truth in the sayings of a great man that "Republics, at best, are ungrateful." "The evil that men do" is too apt "to live after them," while "the good is (too) often interred with their bones." In contemplating the "traitor," and the destroyer of Hamilton; we have forgotten the man of distinguished talents and abilities—the legislator, who has left upon the laws of our Empire State, the impress of mind, the useful U. S. Senator and the Vice President of our Union. We have carried his virtues with his vices and consigned him to eternal obloquy. The historian's motto should rather be, "Fiat justitia, ruat cælum!"

The conclusions of Mr. Pickett, as to the causes of Burr's great unpopularity, seem to us quite just and impartial, we therefore close this article with an extract from his interesting work.

"One of the great secrets of his political misfortunes lay in the malevolence of politicians and fanatics. Somebody heard General Washington say 'Burr was a dangerous man;' therefore the world set him down as 'a dangerous man.' He killed Hamilton in a duel because Hamilton abused him; thereupon the world said he was 'a murderer.' He was a formidable rival of Jefferson's for the Presidency; thereupon the majority of the republican party said he was 'a political scoundrel.' He had opposed the federal party; for that reason the federal party hated him with exceeding bitterness. A blundering, extravagant man, named Herman Blannerhassett, sought Burr while he was in the West, eagerly enlisted in his schemes, and invited him to his house; thereupon Wm. Wirt said, in his prosecuting speech, that Burr was the serpent who entered the garden of Eden. [Georgia University Magazine.

THINGS IN WASHINGTON.—It is mentioned that foreign diplomatists in Washington have lately declared that there is no secret treaty between France and Spain for the protection of Cuba. But there are American diplomatists here, says the Washington correspondent of the Charleston Courier, who have formed a different opinion. The question comes up for discussion at this time for the reason that a French fleet, of extraordinary force, has appeared off Cuba, and that its objects cannot be explained. It is remembered, too, by some who were in the Administration formerly, that in the Ray case and in the Lopez case the French Government showed some intention of interposition for the protection of Cuba.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs met on the morning of the 23d inst. to take into consideration the subject of the resolutions of Mr. Slidell, Mr. Mallory, and Mr. Clayton, respecting Cuba. They came to no conclusion, but called for further papers, and particularly for a copy of the Spanish edicts respecting the slave trade, and the apprenticeship of negroes, and the registry of slaves, etc. It is quite certain that they will not act rashly. Advices from Mr. Soulé were received on the 23d, says the same correspondent, by a special messenger from Madrid. According to rumor, they are of such a character as will incline the President to the adoption or recommendation of hostile measures—at least of a blockade of the ports of Cuba.

WILL BROKEN.—The will of Mrs. Jane Wilson, widow of Hans Wilson, of Steubenville, was set aside by the verdict of a jury of Jefferson Co., Ohio, on Thursday last. By this will the residue of her estate, after a few small legacies to her relatives, was bequeathed to the Foreign and Home Missionary Societies of the Presbyterian Church, the amount of the bequest being estimated at $214,000, chiefly in cash. Mrs. Wilson had no children, but left a number of brothers and sisters in humble circumstances, who contested the will on the ground that she was not of sound mind. The will was written by Judge Leavitt, of the United States Court, who was appointed executor. A great number of witnesses were examined concerning her capacity, and the case was argued by Messrs. Stanton and Kennon for the relatives against the will, and Messrs. D. L. Collier and Meredith for the Missionary Societies. The jury, without any difficulty, found that the will was not valid, and the large estate will be divided equally among her relatives. [Pittsburgh Journal.

SINGULAR PHENOMENON.—The Galena Advertiser says that on the 5th inst., at evening, a little before 8 o'clock, a singular phenomenon was witnessed by several persons who were sitting on the guards of the steamer War Eagle. It consisted of an immense ball of light, which suddenly appeared in the heavens at an angle of about 45 degrees, and fell thence to the horizon, leaving behind it, not a fiery tail, as is usual with such phenomena, but a track of dense white smoke, which kept its perpendicular position in the sky for about three minutes, and then slowly curled itself up like a huge serpent, and in about ten minutes vanished.

A "DEAD SELL."—An amusing story is told of a young Parisian artist, who lately painted a young duchess, with which her friends were not satisfied, declaring it was totally unlike. The painter, however, was convinced that he had succeeded admirably, and proposed that the question of resemblance or non-resemblance be left to a little dog belonging to the duchess, which was agreed to. Accordingly, the picture was sent to the hotel of the lady next day, and a large party assembled to witness the test. The dog was called in, and no sooner did he see the portrait, than he sprang upon it, licked it all over, and showed every demonstration of the greatest joy. The triumph of the painter was complete, and all present insisted that the picture had been retouched during the night; which was actually so—the painter had rubbed it over with a thin coating of lard! The dog's Amber.

There have been many theories to explain the nature and formation of amber. Some observers have thought it must be of animal origin, some vegetable, some mineral; some have maintained that it is an animal substance similar to beeswax, and secreted by a peculiar kind of ant inhabiting pine forests; others have affirmed that it must be a fossil mineral, of antediluvian origin; while a third party have given their suffrage to the theory that amber is a gum which oozes in a liquid state out of the pine tree, and then solidifies. These last theorists appear to be nearer the truth than either of the others; for the insects and flies, and bits of leaves which are found in amber, seem to show that it must have been in a liquid, or at any rate a viscid state when they were buried in the substance. Besides the writers in ancient and medieval times, modern Russians and Germans have lately written about amber. Some wish to know whence amber was first obtained; others inquire by what route it first reached the countries bordering the Mediterranean; some occupy dozens of pages in discussing the whereabout of Pliny's "Amber Islands."

Amber is an obstinate and capricious substance to work; for it becomes so hot and so highly electrical while being mechanically elaborated, that it has a tendency to fly off in fragments. Hence it is necessary to fashion a number of pieces alternately, that each may cool after having been worked up into an excited state. The nodules are split on a leaden plate at a turning-lathe, and are smoked into shape by whetstones; after which they are polished with chalk and water, or with oil, and are finally rubbed with flannel. The workmen themselves are said to become nervous and electrified, owing to the remarkably excitable nature of the substance. They make of amber, pipe mouth-pieces, necklaces, bracelets, ear-rings, and various other articles; including such amber snuff-boxes as that of which Sir Plume was justly vain. Herr Lantzen, a Prussian manufacturer, has even gone so far as to produce amber candle-sticks, amber-wine-glasses, and amber work-boxes; and Herr Winterfield, of Breslau, has displayed before us a vase, a set of chessmen, a knife and fork, fruit-knives, a paper-cutter, sets of buttons, work-boxes, pen holders, frames for knitting-needles—all of amber. Pieces of amber can be joined by the aid of heat and a little linseed oil; and it may be rendered soluble to serve as a varnish, or as a cement for broken glass or china; by being boiled with oil; it may be imitated, at an humble distance, by a particular manner of treating gum-lac.

If we would know the real value and estimation of amber, we should keep company with a Turk. He had his hookah or narghili, which has a receptacle for water or rose water, through which the smoke passes before reaching his mouth; the receptacle is an air-tight vessel, surmounted by a bowl containing burning tobacco. The passage of the smoke through the water deprives it of some of its strong, rank flavor, and cools it. The Turk loves to hear the bubbling sound of the liquid as the smoke passes through it. He says it lulls and soothes him like soft music. He does not sit with a yard of stubborn clay projecting from his lips; his pipe stem is flexible, being formed of a spinal wire covered with leather, over which another wire is coiled, to strengthen the tube; but if he be more moderate in his piping operations, he uses a stiff-stemmed tchibooque. It is in the amber mouth-piece of his splendid narghili that he especially glories. He places it in the centre of the apartment; his guests sit around, and he lends a smoke to each in turn, by passing round the flexible tube from hand to hand, and from mouth to mouth. He prides himself on the amber mouth-piece so much, that he will spend a little fortune upon it. He has, as his countrymen generally have, a theory that amber is incapable of transmitting infection, and this may have had very much to do with the growth of a liking on the part of the Turks for amber mouth-pieces. He prefers the straw-colored, translucent, slightly-clouded specimens, and for a bit of such amber he gives an astonishing price. If he be a very wealthy Turk, indeed, he mounts his amber imame or mouth-piece to be studded with diamonds; then its value may be anything you like to name.

Insects, and flies, and worms, and straws, and twigs, found in amber, have always been a fruitful source of literary illustration. The wonder is how they got there, until it is explained that amber has once been a liquid. The little extraneous bodies comprise insects, leaves, drops of clear water, bits of metal, sand, pebbles, and stones. Some of the insects evidently struggled hard when they found themselves entangled in the once viscid mass, for their legs and wings alone are left, their heads and bodies being nowhere. In the British Museum, at the east end of the mineralogical gallery, are amber specimens enough to give us quite a lesson on the subject; they are rich in insects with learned names; they vary in color from nearly white to deep red; they have all degrees of transluceney, from the transparent to the opaque. Some are long, some round, some smooth, some rough; most of them are in the natural forms, but a few have been fashioned into minature bottles and cups. Sir Thomas Browne, the trusty exposer of Vulgar Errors, fought strongly against insects in amber, declaring that they were mere representations or imitations; but herein experience and observation, science and good sense, have all shown him to have been in the wrong; for there is no longer any doubt that amber insects are real insects. Dr. Mantell says that there have been no fewer than eight hundred species of insects found in amber, some known at the present day, but mostly extinct species.

Roguery finds something to do even with so pretty a subject as amber. It is mortifying to know that amber is not always amber—that it is sometimes copal; in so far as copal is a resinous substance, which exudes spontaneously from certain species of trees, it may be regarded as the younger sister of amber; but it does not thence follow that those who prefer the elder sister would willingly receive the other as a substitute. There are, among the specimens in the British Museum, two marked respectively—Amber and Copal; it would puzzle any but a professional judge to distinguish one from the other; for they are of the same color, they present similar degrees of transluceney and polish, and both contain insects and other little fragments. Possibly the copal specimen may be lower; it may have been picked up in this state; but many a bit of so called amber is a delusion and a snare. Sometimes a piece of copal is boldly put forth as a piece of amber; sometimes a good piece of amber is hacked and enlarged by a piece of copal; while, at other times, a lump of copal is buried in the middle of a third hollow envelop of amber. Mineralogists tell us that amber has a more shell-like structure than copal; and chemists assert that the white smoke from a bit of ignited amber gives forth a more fragrant odor than burning copal; and that the means of detecting shams are thus afforded.

The Richest Slaveholder.

A writer in the Richmond Whig gives an account of a gentleman in Virginia, who is the richest man in that State, and the largest slaveholder in the Union, and perhaps in the world, unless the serfs of Russia be considered as slaves. He says:

Samuel Hairston, of Pittsylvania, is the gentleman. When I was in his section, a year or two ago, he was the owner of between 1600 and 1700 slaves, in his own right, having but a little while before taken a census. He has also a prospective right to about 1000 slaves more, which are now owned by his mother-in-law, Mrs. R. Hairston, he having married her only child. He now has the management of them, which makes the number of his slaves reach near 3000. They increase at the rate of near 100 every year; he has to purchase large plantations every year to settle them on. A large number of his plantations are in Henry and Patrick counties, Virginia. He has large estates in North Carolina. His landed property in stocks, alone is assessed at $600,000. His wealth is differently estimated at from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000; and I should think it was nearer the latter. You think he has a hard lot, but I assure you Mr. Hairston manages all his matters as easy as most persons would an estate of $10,000. He has overseers who are compelled to give him a written statement of what has been made and spent on each plantation, and his negroes are all clothed and fed from his own domestic manufacture; and raising his own tobacco crop, which is immensely large, he so much clear gain every year, besides the increase in negroes, which is a fortune of itself.

And now for his residence. I have traveled delta, and none of them equal to it. Mrs Hairston has been beautifying it for years; and a good old minister, in preaching near the place, and describing Paradise said, "it was as beautiful as Mrs. Hairston's;" or, as a friend who had visited Washington city for the first time, remarked, that "the public grounds were nearly as handsome as Samuel Hairston's." He is a plain, unassuming gentleman, and has never made any noise in the world, though he could vie with the Brices, the McDonough's and Astor's; and it is strange, that while their wealth is co-extensive with the Union, he is not known 100 miles from home. I believe he is now the wealthiest man in the Union, as Wm. B. Astor is only worth about $4,000,000, and the estates of fifty people are vastly overrated, while Mr. Hairston can show the property that will bring the cash at any moment.

Mr. Hairston was raised within a few miles of where he now lives, in Henry county. He has several brothers, who are pretty well to do in the world. One of them, Marshal Hairston, of Henry, owns more than 700 negroes; Robert Hairston, who now lives in Mississippi, near 1000, and Harden Hairston, who has also moved to Mississippi, about 600 slaves. George Hairston, of Henry, has given most all of his property to his children, reserving only about 150 slaves for his own use. This, I believe, is a correct statement of the circumstances of the Hairston family.

The Reported Turkish Victory in the Dobrudscha.

It is impossible to vouch for the accuracy of the report transmitted yesterday from Vienna of the defeat alleged to have been sustained by the Russians on the 18th and 19th of April in the Dobrudscha, for the telegraphic message merely states that such a report was current in Bucharest. But several collateral circumstances tend to strengthen our belief in this statement, and we hope that it will soon be more fully confirmed. The French Government published three days ago, in the Moniteur, an official statement that a battle had been fought at Czernavoda, in which the Russians were defeated, and we presume that this intelligence, which has not been subsequently contradicted, was transmitted to Paris by the consular agents of France nearest to the scene of action. The report is now stated to come from Bucharest, which is the headquarters of a large portion of the Russian army, and it is obvious that statements unfavorable to the arms of Russia are very slowly and reluctantly communicated to Europe through the Russian posts. But, lastly, we had already observed on more than one occasion that the division of the Russian army under General Luders, which had crossed the Danube into the Dobrudscha on the 21th of March, must be considered to be in a critical, if not a precarious, position. We cannot estimate the force of this corps at more than 44,000 men at the moment of the passage of the Danube opposite Galatz, Isaktcha and Tultscha, and that number has probably been reduced by the resistance of the Turks on certain points, and still more by the difficulty of subsistence and the unhealthiness of the climate.

The Russians have three bridges at the place where they crossed, but which are fifty miles in their rear; on their left they have the Black Sea, occupied by the fleets of the allied powers; on their right they have the Danube, which it would not be easy for them to cross between Hirsova and Silistria; and in front they have the main body of the Turkish army in Bulgaria, opposed to what is, in fact, only the left wing of the Russian forces. Under these circumstances, if Omar Pasha has been able to collect a body of troops at all equal to the number mentioned by the telegraphic despatch as 70,000 men, he may have attacked the Russian division with considerable advantage. The Danube is too wide in that part of its course for the Russians to have received any support from their comrades on the opposite bank, who are concentrated opposite Silistria. Gen. Luders' wing of the army was, in fact, cut off by the river, and the intention of the movement he had been instructed to make by the Dobruscha was evidently to menace Silistria from the east, while the centre of the Russian army effected its passage and attacked the fortress in front. The course of the Danube from Silistria to the confluence of the Sereth lies between banks so extremely low and marshy that the bed of the river is inordinately wide, and no military movements can take place on the shore.

But the same causes which would intercept the communications of the Russian army in this part of the country might prove most disastrous in the event of a reverse; and, if it be true that Omar Pasha succeeded in turning the Russian position on the east, so as to threaten its only line of operations or connection with its base, it may readily be conceived that the consequences of any retreat would be calamitous. Indeed, a division placed in the position which General Luder seems to have occupied, and opposed by an army of really superior strength, ought either to be annihilated, or compelled to lay down its arms. This danger will be enormously increased if, as the telegraph informs us, the combined fleets have bombarded the forts which protect the mouth of the Danube, and are, we trust, prepared to force a passage and maintain a command over the lower portion of the river. We must remember, however, that we are here relying much upon the Turkish forces, and that we are very imperfectly informed, both as to their numbers and their efficiency. The last accounts which have reached us on these points are rather unfavorable, and we are quite unable to determine, from the facts previously before us, whether Omar Pasha really had the means of conducting with success the very important operation he is now said to have undertaken and accomplished.

Another account received by the German papers states that three Russian columns were defeated by the Turks with great loss near Czernavoda; but, that on the arrival of reinforcements, the Turks themselves were compelled to retreat. However this may be, the English and French troops, which had reached Constantinople on or before the 16th of April, are at a distance of little more than twenty-fours from the scene of these operations; for Varna is only 145 marine miles from the Bosphorus, and the fleets will enable our forces to act upon the coast, as may be deemed most convenient. While, however, the Russians have withdrawn their right wing from Little Wallachia, out of affected compliisance to Austria, and have engaged their extreme left, perhaps imprudently, in the Dobrudscha, it is evident that preparations are being made on a grand scale for the passage of the main body, or centre of the army, between Nicopolis and Silistria. The principal attention of Prince Paskiewitsch and Prince Gortschakoff is directed on that portion of the line, and they have judiciously contracted the extreme length of their operations parallel to the Danube, so as to bring the front of their army to face the strongest part of the Turkish position.

The great difficulty the Turks have to encounter is in the number and extent of the places to be garrisoned and defended along so vast a line, more or less open to attack; but we learn that considerable detachments are now pulling down the stream of the Danube, from Kalafat and Widdin, to Rustchuk, the storm having passed over without breaking on the extreme west of the Ottoman dominions. Whether the accounts we have received of this reputed victory in the Dobrudscha be confirmed or not, the next few days will probably throw considerable light on the plan of MOUNTAIN CHILDREN...By Mary Howitt.

Dwellers by lake and hill!
Merry companions of the bird and bee!
Go gladly forth and drink of joy your fill,
With unconstrained steps and spirits free!

The sunshine and the breezes,
And the old trees that cast a solemn shade;
The pleasant evening, the fresh dewy hours,
And the green hills wherein your fathers played.

The grey and ancient peaks
Record which the silent clouds hung day and night;
And the low voice of water as it makes,
Like a glad creature, murmurings of delight.

These are your joys! Go forth—
Give your heart up unto that mighty power;
For to his spirit God has clothed the earth,
And speaketh solemnly from tree to flower.

The voice of hidden rills
Be quiet way unto your spirit finds;
And awfully the everlasting hills
Address you in their simply toned winds.

Yet sit upon the cliffs,
Twining its flowers with thoughts full of glee;
And a pure mighty influence 'mid your mirth,
Mould your unconscious spirits silently.

Hence is it that the lands
Of storm and mountains have the noblest sons;
Whom the world reverences. The patriot bands
Were of the hills, like you, ye little ones!

Gather the pleasant song
Are ye to silent within the mountain cottages;
For weary regions to your wilds belong,
And your own haunts where inspiration broods.

Then go forth—earth and sky
To you are tributary; joy are spread
Profusely, like the summer flowers that lie
In the green path, beneath your gamesome tread!

Fuller Details of the Foreign News.

Fuller details of the bombardment of Odessa had been received. The Russian version stu[pp]ed out all the unfavorable features, such as the blowing up of the magazine and the capture of the ships. The Russian Commander states the affair on the part of the Russians as a brilliant feat of arms, and adds that decorations had been bestowed upon the several officers who distinguished themselves in the action. The Russians acknowledge 4 killed and 64 wounded; but credible letters from some of the inhabitants state that 300 were killed, 800 seriously and 300 slightly wounded. No official accounts had yet been published by the British Government, as the despatches from Admiral Dundas had not been received but were hourly expected.

Several conferences have taken place in Vienna between the British, French and Austrian Ministers, at which conditions were agreed to, to be offered by Austria to Russia after the former has occupied Bosnia, Gapper, Albana. The conditions were said to be found favorable by Baron Meyendorf; they were regarded as being probably the final attempt of Austria to restore peace before she declares herself.

THE FEELING AT ST. PETERSBURG.

A letter from the Baltic, of the 25th ult, says: The thaw of the Neva is expected in two days. The ice has already broken up in the Gulf at a little distance from Cronstadt, which will be, very probably, accessible at the end of the month. The approach of hostilities is strongly felt at St. Petersburg, and measures are being taken with a view to dangers which are profoundly apprehended, though denied.

Four batteries have just been established at the mouth of the Neva. The metallic reserve of the fortress was sent eight days ago to Moscow. From the 17th, the command of the town will be divided between four military governors, and the state of siege will be applied in all its rigor. Many persons are leaving for the interior of the country.

The departure of the Emperor for Peterhoff, where the Court was to have gone on the 27th, is adjourned. His Majesty is in such ill-health that he had been obliged to countermand twice a review which he had intended to pass.

The displeasure (mecontentement) caused by the policy of Austria was every day expressed more openly.

It had been affirmed in some salons that the Government was preparing to place that power, by an ultimatum, under the necessity of pronouncing for or against it.

Annexed is an extract from a letter received in London from St. Petersburg:

"St. Petersburg, April 21.—This day Her Britannic Majesty's Consul here received notice that the Russian Government will no longer recognize him in his official capacity. Count Nesselrode further informed him, in the most polished terms, that his passports will forthwith be prepared; and desired to know for what place they should be made out, and by what persons he intended to be accompanied. It is understood that he must not delay his departure beyond a fortnight from this day."

FURTHER FROM THE BALTIC FLEET—MOVEMENTS OF THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA—THE DEFENCES OF CRONSTADT—WHAT SIR CHARLES NAPIER IS DOING.

London, May 6, 1854.—"I have just seen two [gen]tlemen who arrived here by the Helen Macgregor steamer from Hamburg. One left Cronstadt and the other St. Petersburg about 18 days ago. The one from Cronstadt says that the Emperor is putting large heavy pieces of flat iron down in the river, with sharp heavy spikes (inclined) in the centre, in order to pierce our ships as they sail towards the port.

The Emperor was down there himself, looking over the different forts; and he asked one of his admirals about the safety of the place from the attack of our combined fleets. The admiral's reply was, that it was of no use keeping the ships of war in the port, as they would be sure to be burnt or destroyed. And that it was arranged that they should be brought out and placed in a line across the river or gulf, so as to act as a battery; the admiral adding that they might be the means of doing a great deal of damage to our fleet; if they were shattered to pieces in that position it would not matter. They have 2000 guns in the different batteries [a]round.

Two or three English merchants have built ships in the immediate neighborhood. The Emperor has seized them, turned the owners out, and made use of them for barracks for his troops. 100,000 men of all arms are located there, and about 200,000 more all along the coast of Finland—some at one place and some at another. At St. Petersburg there was the greatest consternation, and the English were leaving as fast as they could.

One poor fellow, who had got his little property converted into cash, was seized and robbed, [a]nd got a handful of sovereigns which he pocketed, and with which, by good luck, he escaped. It was the opinion of a great many people (English) who could not get away, that, in some districts, they might expect to be murdered by the Russians all at once, if things should go adverse to the Emperor's wish. He said they would give all they had to leave the country. Sir Charles Napier is dreadfully feared by the Emperor and his troops.

We have letters here from some of the pilots the Duke of Wellington's guns are splendid. One of the pilots has returned from ill health, and he gave me a glowing description of her firing all her guns broadside. They can be brought to bear so as to strike a space no larger than a good door or window, and they can direct the shots with so much precision that a very small [t]arget, placed a mile distant, was shattered to pieces at the first shot.

The strength of the ground by nautical men that a broadside from the flag-ship was equal to, and would do as much damage to an enemy's fleet. I believe Sweaborg is the first place Sir Charles intends to attend to; but he will do nothing until the French fleet arrives to share in the glory."

THE QUESTION OF PRUSSIA.

Paris, Monday, May 8, 6 P. M.—It is stated on good authority here that Russia recently notified to Prussia that she had determined to address an ultimatum to Austria, calling upon her to explain her conduct, and summoning her, peremptorily, to declare herself either for or against, but, at all events, to declare herself. The Prussian minister replied, that the Emperor of Russia need not give himself the trouble of addressing an ultimatum to Austria, as he (the Prussian) well knew, and could tell beforehand, the nature of the answer that would be given.

Nearly at the same time, Austria informed Prussia that she also was about to address an ultimatum to Russia, calling upon her to account for her intrigues and her revolutionary attempts in the States of neighboring Sovereigns, and in particular Montenegro, where the (Austria) had determined to put down by the sword the aggressive Russia with her emissaries in the Principalities, and insisted upon their evacuation. What ultimatum of such a kind are passing to and fro we may soon expect something more serious.

The establishment of the camp between Montreuil and St. Omer is thought to be quite as much directed towards Prussia as towards the Baltic or the Gulf of Finland, and, in case Prussia showed symptoms of foul play, it is not improbable that this army, joined by a formidable force of contingent, would find its way to the banks of the Rhine. It is whispered that the Emperor reserves to himself the command of this fine army, and that he will establish his camp at Pont-de-Brie, where his uncle had once his quarters. He will have his guards with him. The corps of 50,000 men at Marseilles will, it is said, be commanded by General Ilctolen.

THE RUSSIAN ACCOUNT OF THE BOMBARDMENT OF ODESSA.

The following account of the bombardment of Odessa has been addressed by the Russian general Baron Osten Sacklin to the Russian troops in Bessarabia, Cherson, and on the Bug

ORDER OF THE DAY.

Odessa, April 23, (Christ has risen,) 1854.—On the 9th (21st) instant, an Anglo-French squadron, composed of six three deckers, thirteen two deckers, and nine steamers, carrying altogether 1,900 guns, anchored at the distance of three versts from Odessa.

About 4 P. M. Admirals Dundas and Hamelin sent me a flag of truce, with a letter demanding me to deliver up with the least possible delay, the Russian, English and French vessels in the pratique and quarantine ports. I gave no answer to this presumptuous demand, as they might reasonably have expected.

On 10th of April, 9 A. M. nine steamers of the enemy, one carry 54 guns, and 8 carrying for the most part 32, having passed beyond the reach of the first or right hand battery, attacked in turn, the five others, sending at the same time shells into the town, and then the whole stationed themselves in front of the 6th battery, thnt on the left placed on the point of the mole of the pratique port.

Our batteries on the bank mount 48 guns, as follows:

The 1st carrying	6 mortars,	calibre 96
" 2	3 howitzers, ...	42
" 3	6 guns, ...	24
" 4	10 do ...	24
" 5	3 do ...	42
" 6	6 howitzers, ...	24
" 6	4 do ...	24

The enemy taking advantage of the heavy calibre of his guns, and particularly of his paixhans of 68 and 95, kept for the most part out of range. For this reason the 4th and 5th batteries, being distant, took little part in the contest, although they were within range of the enemy's guns; but the 6th, or left battery, placed on the extremity of the pratique part, tought at first with four guns, and afterwards with two—one of its guns being dismounted, and the enemy being out of the range of the other.

This battery, commanded by Ensign Stohegolew, of the reserve battery, of the 14th brigade of artillery, maintained a contest of six hours against the enemy's steamers, which toward the conclusion of the battle were seven in number; in addition to these, they had a screw steamer of the line carrying 84 guns. The battery at length ceased firing, and Ensign Stohegolew only drew off his men when the vessels which were in the pratique port behind the batteries, as well as the fortification, caught fire.

In virtue of the powers which have devolved upon me, I have honored those who particularly distinguished themselves in the above mentioned battle with the order of "Military Knights." When the battle was finished, I reported to his highness the field marshal the brilliient exploit of Ensign Stchegolew.

The hostile steamers, being built of iron and drawing very little water, were enabled, in spite of opposition, to round the mole and approach the bank—one of them going toward the suburb of Peresipe, accompanied by boats, from which they threw Congreve rockets, which burned the vessel in the pratique port and the house in the suburb. They then attempted to effect a landing; but were repulsed by grape shot of four guns from the battery.

During the time the enemy's line-of-battle ships left their line and drew near the country house of General Luders to fire broadsides into it. They were received, however, by the fire of the batteries, 1, 2, 3, and after exchanging a few shots retreated to their line. The manœuvre they executed several times. The battle lasted about twelve hours. About seven o'clock in the evening the line-of-battle ship and the steamers left our left side, regained their position, at the same time that the vessel which was opposite batteries 2 and 3 withdrew to the line.

The relation of the brilliant manner in which the officers and troops condneted themselves is the best proof which I can give them of my livly gratitude.

May we always then, aided by divine grace continue to serve God, our Emperor, and our country as conscientiously as we have to-day.

Signed by the Aide-de-Camp of Gen. Baron Osten Sacken.

PARLIAMENTARY.

In the House of Commons on the 8th, the Chancellor of the Exchequer brought from his financial measures the sum which Mr. Gladstone had to raise for the purposes of the war was stated to be £6,850,000, and it was proposed to provide the money by continuing the double income tax to the end of the war, by engmenting the duty on spirits is per gallon in Scotland, and 8d per gallon in Ireland, by putting off the fall upon the duty on sugar, which would otherwise come into operation on the 5th of July, and by increasing the malt duty from 2s 9d to 4s per quarter.

ILLNESS OF THE POPE.

Rome, April 30.—The state of the Pope's health is still very unsatisfactory. His chest is considered to be affected, and the enormous enlargement of his person reveals a dropsical tendency, which is not likely to be much improved by the bleeding and Sangrado style of treatment prevalent here. On Monday his Holiness was anxious to be present nt the funeral mass performed at the Sixtine Chapel in honor of the late Queen of Portugal, as is customary in Rome on the demise of any Catholic Sovereign, but he was not strong enough to do eo.

THE LATEST.

RUMORED ATTACK ON SEBASTOPOL.

(By Submarine and European Telegraph.)

Constantinople, April 30.—Admiral Boyer arrived here yesterday.

After the bombardment of Odesse the united fleets left to cruise before Sebastopol. The Banshee which has arrived from Varna, brings no news.

A rumor is current at Galeta that the bombardment of Sebastopol began on the 28th, but the statement requires confirmation.

The dispute between the French Ambassador, General Baraguay, d'Hilliers and the Porte, respecting the contemplated expulsion of certain Greeks, had been adjusted, and Reshid Pacha, has made excuses. Certain individuals named by the General will enjoy his protection, these persons being Catholics and Greeks. The General being satisfied by this arrangement, will remain here.

A part of the troops in the camp of Hayder Pasha have received marching orders for Adrianople.

It appears that the hostilitiee against Russia are to be carried ont on a much larger and grander scale by the allied powers, and the Paris Moniteur of the 6th inst. announces that the French and British Governments have agreed on the adoption of all the measures and precantions which the present war may render necessary. With this object, the Emperor has decided on the formation of two camps—the first, of 100,000 men, will be established between Montreuil and St. Omer; and the second, of 50,000, near Marseilles. The English Government, on its side, says the Moniteur, are preparing troops and a fleet capable of transporting, in case of necessity, the forces necessary in the Baltic nr Black Seas. The Times prints that both Revel and Helsingfors are to be occapied, and the Gulf of Finland completely closed, till an attack on Cronstadt can be organized. In the Black Sea, a descent upon the Crimea and the capture of Sebastopol will be effected, and the Crimea held by the allied armies. There is scarcely a doubt that this is a correct programme of the intended operations. The formation, of the Northern camp is supposed to be also a demonstration against Prussia.

TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS DAMAGES.—A case was tried at the late term of the Circuit Court of Greene co., Ala., of a very aggravated seduction. It appears that one Dr. Seaborn P. Healy, a widower, of Tuscaloosa county, seduced the daughter of plaintiff, (Allen Malone,) and that Healy, by affidavit, removed the trial from Tuscaloosa where proceedings had been commenced, to Greene. It appears that another physician of the highest respectability and honor had been attending the mother of the girl, and that Healy happened by some means to call on the family, and ingratiated himself into the affections of the family by condemning the treatment of the former physician, who he finally supplanted in his practice in that family, and commenced a course that ended in the seduction of the daughter and ruin of the family. The jury rendered the full amount of damages laid in the prosecution. We understand the Doctor has suddenly divested himself of all means whereby the amount could be made.

Revolutionary Trophies.

The standards taken at the surrender of Yorktown, and presented by the Congress of the Revolution to Gen. Washington, commander-in-chief of the combined armies of American and France. These trophied memorials of the heroic age and the Father of his Country were, on Thursday last, brought over from Arlington House by the venerable Mr. Custis, the sole surviving executor of Washington, and last surviving member of his domestic family, and presented to the President, and through him to the Government and People of the United States.

The President, on receiving the venerable trophies, accompanied by the Secretary of War, escorted them to the War Office, where they will for the present remain under the especial care of the Secretary.

It is said that the President intends to submit the finel disposal of these Revolutionary relics to Congress, recommending that the mortial reminiscences of the ever-memorable event that was in truth the crowning glory of the war of American Independence, shall form a nucleus around which to be gnthered all the standards of the past and of the future triumphs of the American arms.

It has been suggested that a portion of the magnificent room in the eastern wing of the Patent Office would form a fitting site for the Hall of Triumph—the Temple of Victory—to contain all the trophies of the wers of the United States.

Among these old standards are a British and Hessian one. The British is the regimental colors of the 7th regiment of this line. In the centre of the far-famed red-orost banner is the Order of the Garter, surmounted by a crown, with the motto: "Honi soit qui mal y pense." The Hessian standard is elaborately worked. In the centre is an eagle soaring aloft, in one talon a trnncheon of command, in the other an olive brnnch. Motto: "Pro Princesse Patria. 1776."

Both flags are of silk, and nearly eighty years old, dilapidated by time, the British flag having suffered somewhat from relic-seekers, who have appropriated to themselves scraps of the renowned banner that once floated in terror over a continent, with a view to the revival in modern times of the ever-glorious memories of the surrender of Cornmallis.

CINCINNATI STEAM FIRE-ENGINES.—As the direction of our Councils has of late been directed to the question of the expediency of procuring for the use of our city one of the steam fire engines which have proved so efficacious in Cincinnati, we subjoin a brief description from the Pittsburg American, whose editor has recently returned from Cincinnati.

He says the steam fire engine is one of the greatest improvements of the day, and must lead to important results. To have a proper idea of its usefulness, you have but to imagine a machine brought to any part of the city where a fire has occurred, in as short a time as the common engine by hand is, generally in a much shorter time, and ready to act the moment it arrives—the steam being raised in five minutes from the first note of alarm, and capable of throwing six streams of water from 1¼ inch nozzles, two hundred and forty feet, for any required time, with no other menual labor than is required to give an occasional shovel full of coals. To throw the seme number of streams of water from the pipes of the hand engine, and a little more than half the distance, would require the labor of one hnndred and twenty men, and these to be relieved with an equal number at short intervels. This simple notice of the power of the machine gives at once a view of its capacity and usefulness.

It is constructed with locomotive powers, and drives itself to the fire, where its power is to be brought into use—Horses, however, are attached to it, thet it may be put in immediate motion—saving the five minutes required to raise steam, but more immediately and necessarily to guide its motion. The second engine, has several important improvements over the first, but nothing varying in its principle of action.

Since then snother engine hes been constructed, lighter by 3000 pounds, and costing $3000 less. It gives the fullest satisfaction to its builders and the public. The cost was $7000

REMARKABLE DISCOVERY.—A curious experiment was made on Thursday in the basin of the garden of the Palais Royal, Paris, in the presence of e numerous crowd of spectatore. A glass globe, containing a certain liquid, was thrown into the water, and then broke by the means of a polo. The liquid immediately spreed itself over the surfnce of the water and inflemed, and continued to burn with an intense fleme for fifty-six seconds, throwing out a thick smoke. The basin looked as if it was all on fire. The discoverers have enceeeded in composing a liquid, which is not costly, and which takes fire spontaneously in contact with water, as proved by the above experiment. Another experiment was made some days before on the Seine, near the Pont de Grenelle, and completely succeeded, notwithstauding a high wind and the agitation of the water. On that occasion the flames burnt for more than a minute. The importance of such a discovery, in the hands of those who attack or defend n place, and perticnlerly in a navni combat, may be readily conceived. [Gelignani.

☞ The following letter from the celebrated DR. JAMES C. AYER, gives the honest side of the Nostrum question. Since the Public will use these remedies we wish for the sake of suffering humanity there were more of them like his Cherry Pectoral and Cathartic Pills, which require no secresy to make them go down.

Lowell, 26th April, 1854.

Messrs. ——— & Co.,

New York City,

GENTLEMEN:—Yours of 23d inst., asking me to join the combination to put down the Ohio Nostrum Bill, comes duly to hand. I cannot accede to your request for the following reasons:

The law requiring that the composition shall be published, of every medicine sold in the State, cannot work to the injury of any body who deserves protection. I have published the recipes of my medicines for fifteen years, and believe this to be the honest way of making their virtues known to the community. The Medical Profession publish their discoveries to the world as soon as made, for the benefit of all mankind. Why should we not? The Law which you fear will destroy your business, can injure only those who falsely pretend to discoveries and secrets which they have not. It will expose the emptiness of such protensions as are found to be worthless when their composition is known. If medicines heve real worth, they will he only the better appreciated and the better patronized by laying their composition open to the Public, that all may judge for themselves. If they have not real merit, it is due in common justice, to the suffering sick, to the public health and to the cause of humanity, that the people should know them to avoid them.

Yours Respectfully,

JAMES C. AYER.

FRENCH PROTESTANT REFUGEES.

(EMIGRATION OF THE HUGUENOTS)

THIS profoundly interesting and supremely valuable work is already celebrated throughout the civilized world. Its popular character, together with its national attractions it possesses, must cause it to be more universally read even than the celebrated "History of the Reformation," to which, (says Alison in Blackwood,) "in spirit and treatment it bears such strong resemblance, and with which it must become a favorite companion." The most eminent divines of every denomination have compounded this thrilling narrative in the most rapturous and emphatic terms, and all the renowned reviews have pronounced it unqualifiedly the most rare production of modern times. This result of the able historian's twenty years' labor has been greeted with hearty approval by the most celebrated authors and scholars, such as D'Anbigne, Macaulay, Guizot, Miguet, Alison, etc., etc.

THE Second Term of the Louisville Female College (Seventh street, near Chestnut,) commenced on Monday, Feb 6, 1854.

This Institution (formerly the Albion Female College,) having obtained a new charter, with full college powers and privileges, and an incorporated board of council, composed of gentlemen of intelligence and standing, who will watch over the college as its constitutional supervisors, and having also secured the services of a full board of Professors and Teachers, together with a good Philosophical Apparatus, a cabinet of Minerals, and the nucleus of a good Library, we are prepared to furnish instruction to good advantage in all the branches—literary, scientific and ornamental—usually taught in the highest grade of female colleges.

The new college buildings having been completed, 30 to 40 boarding scholars can be accommodated in the college, and others in the immediate neighborhood.

The very flattering encouragement afforded during the first term induces the belief that the Louisville Female College is destined to take a position second to no similar institution East or West. Here young ladies may commence and complete a thorough education without the inconvenience of changing schools, and the annoying expense of two or three sets of text books.

EXPENSES—In the three classes of the Preparatory Department, the charges are as follows: Juvenile Class, $9; Second Class, $12; Third Class, $18 per term of 21 weeks.

In the four classes of the college—Primary class, $20; Dual class, $20; Junior class, $24; Senior class, $28.

"The Great Work of the Time."

JUST PUBLISHED.

PROFESSOR WEISS'S GREAT HISTORY OF THE FRENCH PROTESTANT REFUGEES—(Dispersion of the Huguenots.)—WITH AN AMERICAN APPENDIX. In Two Volumes, 12mo. Price $2 50.

This profoundly entertaining and instructive work has created an impression more deep and lasting than any other production of modern times. The universal welcome with which it has been received by all classes, must hereafter place its able author with the most favored historians, D'Aubigne and Macaulay. The Press in heralding its great fame, have predicted for it a popularity equal to that of "The History of the Reformation," to which "in spirit and treatment, it bears such strong resemblance." There are no dramas in the world's history of more thrilling interest than this intensely absorbing narrative of the fortunes of these noble Huguenot sufferers in the cause of religious freedom. Their influence upon agriculture, commerce, manufactures, literature, morals and religion, in the various countries of England, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Russia and America, to which they fled, is traced in a perspicuous and masterly manner. Of how important a part they took who came to this country, no American needs to be reminded to conjecture the value of such a record. The work is treated with a fullness of historical research from materials collected during twenty years of industry, and is written in a graphic style, which makes it a production of equal interest and value to the student of history and the general reader. The author treats the subject in a purely historical aspect, is candid, learned, impartial, and the story is sustained with an ability and vivacity, which excite in the mind the irresistible impression of romance. The period relates to one of "the most stirring and touching segments of the whole circle of French history." The record is taken up where it was left by Rapin and Rauwning, supplies the links in the grand historic chain that connects the past with the present, and binds the centuries into one harmonious whole; and thus has been supplied the long, marked deficiency in the annals of both Europe and America. Eulogies have been pronounced on this rare history by the highest critical authorities, as one of the most valuable contributions that has been made during this century, and one that must wield a more important influence on the public mind than any previous work. The costliest talent was engaged to translate the work. An able AMERICAN APPENDIX has been added, which much enhances its value to the American reader; and no pains have been spared to give the volumes every attraction. In the frontispiece is an accurate PORTRAIT of the cruel Pope Pius V, and a fac-simile of the execrable medal struck by Gregory XIII. to celebrate the frightful massacre of St. Bartholomew.

Hundreds of testimonials from eminent clergymen and laymen of every denomination, distinguished scholars, presidents of colleges, professors of history, and illustrious authors and statesman have been received, eulogizing and commending this pre-eminently popular history in the most emphatic terms. Among the names of illustrious foreigners are: D'Aubigne—Guizot—Mignet—Villeusin—Merle—Alison—Macaulay—and Hallam. Among the eminent American Divines are the Reverend Doctors Cheever—Potts—Spring—DeWitt—Knox, of N. Y.; Bethune, Brooklyn; Sprague, Albany; Murray, N. J.; Boardman—Berg—Dowling, author of "History of Romanism," Phil; Johns—Henry, Baltimore; Stone, Boston; Bacon, New Haven; Murdock, Hartford; Perry, Cleveland; Moore, Richmond; Gibson, Petersburg; Hanckle, Cuthbert, Charleston; Dwight, Portland. In British America, Omphlett—Matheson, Montreal; Macher, Kingston; O. W. March, Quebec. Among the distinguished Professors, Bush, Ripley and Wayland; and many others of like character and standing.

I write to inform you of the truly remarkable effects of your CHERRY PECTORAL in this place, and in my own family. One of my daughters was completely cured in three days of a dreadful Whooping Cough by taking it. Dr Means, one of our very best Physicians, freely states that he considers it the best remedy we have for pulmonary diseases, and that he has cured more cases of Croup with it than any other medicine he ever administered.

Our clergyman of the Baptist Church says that during the rnn of Influenza here this season, he has seen cures from your medicine he could scarcely have believed without seeing. Yours respectfully,

METHODIST CHURCH CASE.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

WILLIAM A. SMITH et al., Appls., vs. LEROY SWORMSTEDT et al.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Ohio.

Mr. Justice NELSON delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the district of Ohio.

The bill is filed by the complainants, for themselves, and in behalf of the traveling and worn-out preachers in connection with the society of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the United States against the defendants, to recover their share of a fund called the Book Concern, at the city of Cincinnati, consisting of houses, machinery, printing-presses, bookbindery, books, etc., claimed to be of the value of some $200,000.

The bill charges that at and before the year 1844, there existed in the United States a voluntary association, unincorporated, known as the Methodist Episcopal Church, composed of seven bishops, four thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight preachers, belonging to the traveling connection, and in bishops, ministers and members, about one million, one hundred and nine thousand, nine hundred and sixty, united and bound together in one organized body by certain doctrines of faith and morals, and by certain rules of government and discipline.

That the government of the Church was vested in one body, called the General Conference, and in certain subordinate bodies called annual conferences, and in bishops, traveling ministers and preachers.

The bill refers to a printed volume entitled "The doctrines and discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church," as containing the constitution, organization, form of government and rules of discipline, as well as the doctrines of faith of the association.

The complainants further charge that differences and disagreements having sprung up in the Church between what was called the northern and southern members, in respect to the administration of the government with reference to the ownership of slaves by the ministers of the Church, of such a character, and attended with such consequences, as threatened greatly to impair its usefulness, as well as permanently to disturb its harmony, and became and was a question of grave and serious importance, whether a separation ought not to take place according to some geographical boundary to be agreed upon, so as that the Methodist Episcopal Church should thereafter constitute two separate and distinct organizations. And that, accordingly, at a session of the General Conference, held in the city of New York, in May, 1844, a resolution was passed by a majority of over three-fourths of the body, by which it was determined that, if the annual conferences of the slaveholding States should find it necessary to unite in a distinct ecclesiastical connection, the following rule should be observed with regard to the northern boundary of such connection: all the societies, stations and conferences adhering to the Church in the south by a vote of a majority of the members, should remain under the pastoral care of the Southern Church; and all adhering to the Church, north, by a like vote, should remain under the pastoral care of that Church. This "plan of separation" contains eleven other resolutions, relating principally to the mode and terms of the division of the common property of the association between the two divisions, in case the separation contemplated should take place, and which, in effect, provide for a pro rata division, taking the number of the traveling preachers in the north and south as the basis upon which to make the partition.

The complainants further charge, that in pursuance of the above resolutions the annual conferences in the slaveholding States met and resolved in favor of a distinct and independent organization, and erected themselves into a separate ecclesiastical connection, under the provisional "plan of separation," based upon the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to be known as the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. And they insist that, in virtue of these proceedings, this Church, as it had existed in the United States previous to the year 1844, became and was divided into two separate Churches, with distinct and independent powers, and authority, composed of the several annual conferences, stations and societies lying north and south of the aforesaid line of division. And, also, that by force of the same proceedings, the division of the Church South became and was entitled to its proportion of the common property, real and personal, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which belonged to it at the time the separation took place; that the property and funds of the Church had been obtained by voluntary contributions, to which the members of the Church South had contributed more than their full share, and which down to the time of the separation belonged common to the Methodist Episcopal Church, as then organized.

The complainants charge that they are members of the Church South, and preachers, some of them supernumerary, and some superannuated preachers, and belonged to the traveling connection of said Church; and that, as such, have a personal interest in the property, real and personal, held by the Church, North, and in the hands of the defendants. And further, that there are about fifteen hundred traveling preachers belonging to the traveling connection of the Church, South, each of whom has a direct and personal interest in the same right with the complainants in the said property, the large number of whom make it inconvenient and impracticable to bring them all before the Court as complainants.

They also charge that the defendants are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North; and that each, as such, has a personal interest in the property; and further, that two of them have the custody and control of the fund in question; and that in addition to these defendants, there are nearly thirty-eight hundred preachers belonging to the traveling connection of the Church, North, each of whom has an interest in the fund in the same right, so that it is impossible, in view of sustaining a just decision in the matter, to make them all parties to the bill.

The complainants also aver that this bill is brought by the authority and under the direction of the General and Annual Conferences of the Church, South, and for the benefit of the same, and for themselves and all the preachers in the traveling connection, and all other ministers and persons having an interest in the property.

The defendants, in their answer, admit most of the facts charged in the bill, as it respects the organization, government, discipline and faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church as it existed at and previous to the year 1844. They admit the passage of the resolutions called the "plan of separation," at the session of the General Conference of that year, by the majority stated. But they deny that the resolutions were duly and legally passed; and also deny that the General Conference possessed the competent power to pass them, and submit that they were, therefore, null and void. They also submit, that if the General Conference possessed the power, the separation contemplated was made dependent upon certain conditions, and, among others, a change of the Sixth Restrictive Article in the constitution of the Church, by a vote of the annual conferences, which vote the said conferences refused.

The defendants admit the erection of the Church, South, into a distinct ecclesiastical organization; but deny that this was done agreeably to the "plan of separation." They deny that the Methodist Episcopal Church, as it existed in 1844, or at any time, has been divided into two distinct and separate ecclesiastical organizations; and submit that the separation and voluntary withdrawal from this Church of a portion of the bishops, ministers and members, and organization into a Church, South, was an unauthorized separation; and that they have thereby renounced and forfeited all claim, either in law or equity, to any portion of the property in question. The defendants admit that the Book Concern at Cincinnati, with all the houses, lots, printing-presses, etc., is now, and always has been, beneficially the property of the preachers belonging to the traveling connection of the Methodist Episcopal Church; but insist that if such preachers do not, during life, continue in such traveling connection and in the communion, and subject to the government of the Church, they forfeit, for themselves and their families, all ownership in, or claim to, the said Book Concern and the produce thereof; they admit that the Book Concern was originally commenced and established by the traveling preachers of this Church upon their own capital, with the design in the first place of circulating religious knowledge, and that at the General Conference of 1796, it was determined that the profits derived from the sale of books should in future be devoted wholly to the relief of traveling preachers, supernumerary and worn-out preachers, and the widows and orphans of such preachers; and the defendants submit, that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is not entitled, at law or in equity, to have a division of the property of the Book Concern, or the produce, or to any portion thereof; and that the ministers, preachers, or members, in connection with such Church, are not entitled to any portion of the same; and further, that being no longer traveling preachers belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church, they are not so entitled without a change of the Sixth Restrictive Article of the constitution of 1808, provided for in the "plan of separation," as a condition of the partition of said fund.

The proofs in the case consist chiefly of the proceedings of the General Conference of 1844, relating to the separation of the Church, and of the proceedings of the Southern Conferences, in pursuance of which a distinct and separate ecclesiastical organization, south, took place.

There is no material controversy between the parties as it respects the facts. The main difference lies in the interpretation and effect to be given to the acts and proceedings of these several bodies and authorities of the Church. Our opinion will be founded almost wholly upon facts alleged in the bill, and admitted in the answer.

An objection was taken, on the argument, to the bill for want of proper parties to maintain the suit. We think the objection not well founded.

The rule is well established, that where the parties interested are numerous, and the suit is for no object common to them all, some of the body may maintain a bill on behalf of themselves and of the others; and a bill may also be maintained against a portion of a numerous body of defendants, representing a common interest. (Story Eq. Pl., secs. 97, 98, 99, 103, 107, 110, 111, 116, 120; 2 Mitf. Pl. Jer. Ed. 167, 2 page 19, 4 Milne and Cr. 134, 619; 2 De Grex and Smale, 102 122.)

Mr. Justice Story, in his valuable treatise on Equity Pleadings, after discussing this subject with his usual research and fullness, arranges the exceptions to the general rule as follows: 1. Where the question is one of a common or general interest, and one or more sue or defend for the benefit of the whole; 2. Where the parties form a voluntary association for public or private purposes, and those who sue or defend may fairly be presumed to represent the rights and interests of the whole; and 3. Where the parties are very numerous, and though they have, or may have, separate and distinct interests, yet it is impracticable to bring them all before the court.

In this latter class, though the rights of the several persons may be seperate and distinct, yet there must be a common interest or a common right, which the bill seeks to establish or enforce. As an illustration, bills have been permitted to be brought by the lord of a manor against some of the tenants, and vice versa, by some of the tenants in behalf of themselves and the other tenants, to establish some right—such as suit to a mill, or right of common, or to cut turf. So by a parson of a parish against some of the parishioners to establish a general right to tithes—or, conversely, by some of the parishioners in behalf of all to establish a parochial modus.

In all cases where exceptions to the general rule are allowed, and a few are permitted to sue and defend on behalf of the many by representation, care must be taken that persons are brought on the record fairly representing the interest or right involved, so that it may be fully and honestly tried.

Where the parties interested in the suit are numerous, their rights and liabilities are so subject to change and fluctuation by death or otherwise, that it would not be possible without very great inconvenience to make all of them parties, and would oftentimes prevent the prosecution of the suit to a hearing. For convenience, therefore, and to prevent a failure of justice, a court of equity permits a portion of the parties in interest to represent the entire body, and the decree binds all of them the same as if all were before the court. The legal and equitable rights and liabilities of all being before the court by representation, and especially where the subject-matter of the suit is common to all, there can be very little danger but that the interest of all will be properly protected and maintained.

The case in hand illustrates the propriety and fitness of the rule. There are some fifteen hundred persons represented by the complainants, and over double that number by the defendants. It is manifest, that to require all the parties to be brought upon the record, as is required in a suit at law, would amount to a denial of justice. The right might be defeated by objections to parties, from the difficulty of ascertaining them, or if ascertained, from the changes constantly occurring by death or otherwise.

As it respects the persons into whose hands the fund in question should be delivered for the purpose of distribution among the beneficiaries, in case of a division of it, we shall recur to the subject in another part of this opinion.

We will now proceed to an examination of the merits of the case.

The Book Concern, the property in question, is a part of a fund which had its origin at a very early day from the voluntary contributions of the traveling preachers in the connection of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The establishment was at first small; but at present is one of very large capital, and of extensive operations, producing great profits. In 1796 the traveling preachers, in General Conference assembled, determined that these profits should be thereafter devoted to the relief of the traveling preachers and their families; and, accordingly, resolved that the produce of the sale of the books, after the debts were paid, and sufficient capital provided for carrying on the business, should be applied for the relief of distressed traveling preachers, for the families of traveling preachers, and for supernumerary and worn-out preachers, and the widows and orphans of preachers.

The establishment was placed under the care and superintendence of the General Conference, the highest authority in the Church, which was composed of the traveling preachers; and it has grown up to its present magnitude, its capital amounting to nearly a million of dollars, from the economy and skill with which the Concern has been managed, and from the labors and fidelity of the traveling preachers, who have always had the charge of the circulation and sale of the books in the Methodist connection throughout the United States, accounting to the proper authorities for the proceeds. The agents who have the immediate charge of the establishment make up a yearly account of the profits and transmit the same to the several annual conferences, each an amount in proportion to the number of travelling preachers, their widows and orphans, comprehended within it, which bodies distribute the fund to the beneficiaries individually, agreeably to the design of the original founders. These several annual conference, are composed of the traveling preachers residing or located within certain districts assigned to them; and comprehended, in the aggregate, the entire body in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church. The fund has been thus faithfully administered since its foundation down to 1846, when the portion belonging to the complainants in this suit, and those they represent, was withheld, embracing some thirteen of the annual conferences.

In the year 1844, the traveling preachers in General conference assembled, for cause which it is not important particularly to refer to, agreed upon a plan for a division of the Methodist Episcopal Church in case the annual conferences in the slaveholding states should deem it necessary; and to the erection of two separate and distinct ecclesiastical organizations. And according to this plan, it was agreed, that all the societies, stations, and conferences, adhering to the Church, South by a majority of their respective members, should remain under the pastoral care of that Church; and all these several bodies adhering by a majority of its members to the Church, North, should remain under the pastoral care of that Church; and, further, that the ministers, local and traveling, should, as they might prefer, attach themselves without blame, to the Church, North or South. It was, also, agreed that the common property of the Church, including the Book Concern, that belonged specially to the body of traveling preachers, should, in case the separation took place, be divided between the two Churches, in proportion to the number of traveling preachers falling within the respective divisions. This was in 1844. In the following year the southern annual conferences met in convention in pursuance of the "plan of separation," and determined upon a division, and resolved that the annual conferences should be constituted into a separate ecclesiastical connection, and based upon the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, comprehending the doctrines and entire moral, ecclesiastical, and economical rules and regulations of said Discipline, except only so far as verbal alterations might be necessary, and to be known by the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The division of the Church, as originally constituted, thus became complete; and from this time two separate and distinct organizations have taken the place of the one previously existing.

The Methodist Episcopal Church having been thus divided with the authority and according to the plan of the General conference, it is claimed, on the part of the complainants, who represent the traveling preachers in the Church, South, that they are entitled to their share of the capital stock and profits of this Book Concern; and that the withholding of it from them is a violation of the fundamental law prescribed by the founders, and, consequently, of the trust upon which it was placed in the hands of the defendants.

The principal answer set up to this claim, is, that, according to the original constitution, and appropriation of the fund, the beneficiaries must be traveling preachers, or the widows and orphans of traveling preachers, in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church as organized and established in the United States at the time of the foundation of the fund; and that, as the complainants, and those they represent, are not shewn to be travelling preachers in that connection, but traveling preachers in connection with a different ecclesiastical organization, they have forfeited their right, and are no longer within the description of its beneficiaries.

This argument, we apprehend, if it proves any thing, proves too much; for if sound, the necessary consequence is, that the beneficiaries connected with the Church, North as well as South, have forfeited their right to the fund. It can no more be affirmed, either in point of fact, or of law, that they are traveling preachers in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church as originally constituted, since the division, than of those in connection with the Church, South. Their organization covers but about half of the territory embraced within that of the former Church; and includes within it but a little over two-thirds of the traveling preachers. Their General conference is not the General conference of the old Church, nor does it represent the interest, or possess, territorially, the authority of the same; nor are they the body, under whose care this fund was placed by its founders. It may be admitted, that, within the restricted limits the organization and authority are the same as the former Church: But, the same is equally true in respect to the organization of the Church, South.

Assuming, therefore, that this argument is well founded, the consequence is, that all the beneficiaries of the fund, whether in the southern or northern division, are deprived of any right to a distribution, not being in a condition to bring themselves within the description of persons for whose benefit it was established; in which event, the foundation of the fund would become broken up, and the capital revert to the original proprietors a result that would differ little in its effect, from that sought to be produced by the complainants in their bill.

It is insisted, however, that the General conference of 1844 possessed no power to divide the Methodist Episcopal Church as then organized, or to consent to such division; and, hence, that the organization of the Church, South, was without authority, and the traveling preachers within it separated from ecclesiastical connection which is essential to enable them to participate as beneficiaries. Even if this were admitted, we do not perceive that it would change the relative position and rights of the traveling preachers within the divisions north and south, from that which we have just endeavored to explain. If the division under the direction of the General conference has been made without the proper authority, and for that reason the traveling preachers within the southern division are wrongfully separated from their connection with the Church, and thereby have lost the character of beneficiaries, those within the northern division are equally wrongfully separated from the connection; as both divisions have been brought into existence by the same authority. The same consequence would follow in respect to them, that is imputable to the traveling preachers in the other division; and, hence, each would be obliged to fall back upon their rights as original proprietors of the fund.

But we do not agree that this division was made without the proper authority. On the contrary, we entertain no doubt but that the General conference of 1844 was competent to make it; and that each division of the Church under the separate organization is just as legitimate, and can claim as high a sanction, ecclesiastical and temporal, as the Methodist Episcopal Church first founded in the United States. The same authority which founded the Church in 1784 has divided it, and established two separate and independent organizations occupying the place of the old one.

In 1784, when this Church was first established, and down till 1808, the General conference was composed of all the traveling preachers in that connection. This body of preachers founded it by organizing its government, ecclesiastical and temporal, established its doctrines and Discipline, appointed its superintendents, or bishops, its ministers and preachers, and other subordinate authorities, to administer its polity, and promulgate its doctrines and teachings throughout the land.

It cannot therefore be denied, indeed it has scarcely been denied, that this body, while composed of all the traveling preachers, possessed the power to divide it and authorize the organization and establishment of the two separate, independent Churches. The power must necessarily be regarded as inherent in the General conference. As they might have constructed two ecclesiastical organizations over the territory of the United States originally, if deemed expedient, in the place of one, so they might at any subsequent period, the power remaining unchanged.

But, it is insisted that this power has been taken away or given up, by the action of the General conference of 1808. In that year, the constitution of this body was changed, so as to be composed thereafter of traveling preachers, to be elected by the annual conferences, in the ratio of one for every five members. This has been altered from time to time, so that, in 1844, the representation was one for every twenty-one members. At the time of this change, and as part of it, certain limitations were imposed upon the powers of this General conference, called the six Restrictive Articles: 1. That they should not alter or change the articles of religion, or establish any new standard of doctrine. 2. Nor allow of more than one representative for every fourteen members of the annual conferences, nor less than one for every thirty. 3. Nor alter the government so as to do away with Episcopacy, or destroy the plan of itinerant superintendencies. 4. Nor change the rules of the united societies. 5. Nor deprive the ministers or preachers of trial by a committee, and of appeal; nor members before the society, or by committee, and appeal. And, 6. Nor appropriate the proceeds of the Book Concern, nor the Chartered Fund, to any purpose other than for the benefit of the traveling, supernumerary, superannuated, and worn-out preachers, their wives, widows, and children. Subject to these restrictions, the delegated conference possessed the same powers as when composed of the entire body of preachers. And it will be seen, that these relate only to the doctrine of the Church, its representation in the General conference, the Episcopacy, discipline of its preachers, and members, the Book Concern, and Chartered Fund. In all other respects, and in every thing else that concerns the welfare of the Church, the General conference represents the sovereign power, the same as before. This is the view taken by the General conference itself, as exemplified by the usage and practice of that body. In 1820 they set off to the British conference of Wesleyan Methodists the several circuits and societies in Lower Canada. And in 1828 they separated the annual conference of Upper Canada from their jurisdiction, and erected the same into a district and independent Church. These instances, together with the present division in 1844, furnish evidence of the opinions of the eminent and experienced men of this Church in these several conferences of the power claimed, which, if the question was otherwise doubtful, should be regarded as decisive in favor of it. We will add, that all the northern bishops, five in number, in council in July, 1845, acting under the "plan of separation," regarded it as of binding obligation, and conformed their action accordingly.

It has also been urged on the part of the defendants, that the division of the Church, according to the "plan of separation," was made to depend, not only upon the determination of the southern annual conferences, but also upon the consent of the annual conference north, as well as south, to a change of the Sixth Restrictive Article, and as this was refused, the division which took place there is unauthorized. But this is a misapprehension. The change of this article was not made a condition of the division. That depended alone upon the decision of the southern conferences.

The division of the Methodist Episcopal Church having thus taken place, in pursuance of the proper authority, it carried with it, as matter of law, a division of the common property belonging to the ecclesiastical organization, and especially of the property in this Book Concern—which belonged to the traveling preachers. It would be strange if it could be otherwise, as it respects the Book Concern, inasmuch as the division of the association was effected under the authority of a body of preachers who were themselves the proprietors and founders of the fund.

It has been argued, however, that, according to the "plan of separation," the division of the property in this Book Concern was made to depend upon the vote of the annual conferences to change the Sixth Restrictive Article, and that, whatever might be the legal effect of the division of the Church upon the common property otherwise, this stipulation controls it and prevents a division till the consent is obtained.

We do not understand the "plan of separation." It admits the right of the Church South to its share of the common property, in case of a separation, and provides for a partition of it among the two divisions, upon just and equitable principles; but, regarding the Sixth Restrictive Article as a limitation upon the power of the General Conference as it respected a division of the property in the Book Concern, provision is made to obtain a removal of it. The removal of this limitation is not a condition to the right of the Church South to its share of the property; but is a step taken in order to enable the General Conference to complete the partition of the property.

We will simply add, that as a division of the common property followed, as a matter of law, a division of the Church organization, nothing short of an agreement or stipulation of the Church South to give up their share of it could preclude the assertion of their right; and, it is quite clear, no such agreement, or stipulation, is to be found in the "plan of separation." The contrary intent is manifest from a perusal of it.

Without pursuing the case further, our conclusion is, that the complaints and those they represent are entitled to their share of the property in this Book Concern. And the proper decree will be entered to carry this decision into effect.

The complainants represent, not only all the beneficiaries in the division of the Church South, but, also, the General Conference and the annual conferences of the same. The share, therefore, of this Book Concern belonging to the beneficiaries in that Church, and which its authorities are entitled to the safe-keeping and charge of, for their benefit, may be properly paid over to the complainants as the authorized agents for this purpose.

We shall accordingly direct a decree to be entered reversing the decree of the court below, and remanding the proceedings to that court, directing a decree to be entered for the complainants against the defendants; and a reference of the case to a master to take an account of the property belonging to the Book Concern; and report to the court its cash value, and to ascertain the portion belonging to the complainants, which portion shall bear to the whole amount of the fund, the proportion that the traveling preachers in the division of the Church South bore to the traveling preachers in the Church, North, at the time of the division of said Church. And, on the coming in of the report, and confirmation of the same, a decree shall be entered in favor of the complainants for that amount.

INFLUX OF IMMIGRANTS.—The N. Y. Courier and Enquirer says:

The immigration from the Old World continues with augmenting force. We learn from the books of the Commissioners of Immigration that the total number of aliens who arrived at this port from the 1st of January to the 24th inst., was 87,922, being an increase of 18,883 over the same period last year. The immigration this month is already larger than ever before during an equal length of time, with few exceptions. A striking feature in the movement is the great increase in the German element of immigration, and which now, as it has done since the year 1852, exceeds any other. By many interested in the prosperity of the country, this circumstance is viewed with gratification, on account of the neutralizing influence which the Germans and Irish exert upon each other. For many years the Irish immigration greatly preponderated, till, in 1851, the Germans suddenly increased from 68,883 to 118,126 in 1852, placing the Irish slightly in the background. Here are the figures for the last six years:

	Year 1849.	1850.	1851.
Irish	112,691	116,582	163,256
Germans	55,706	45,402	69,888
	Year 1852.	1853.	1854 5 mos.
Irish	115,587	113,104	17,649
Germans	118,126	119,644	44,248

The number of immigrants who have arrived at this port the present month, up to the 24th instant, is 36,590; of whom, 8995 are Irish, and 18,560 Germans.

The health of immigrants thus far has been very good, notwithstanding the frequency of long passages. There has been no ship-fever, but the cholera has prevailed in two instances on Liverpool ships, the North Amarles and Progress having lost about forty passengers each. Since the survivors were landed about a dozen additional deaths have occurred among those who were attacked at sea. The remainder are recovering.

The Gold Mines of Maine are likely to turn out the genuine article to a considerable extent, though not to realize much for individual diggers. They are located in Madrid and Salem towns, or townships, Franklin county, and the editor of the Farmington Chronicle, who says that he is familiar with the geological features of the region, declares it to be an auriferous formation. He tells us that, years before gold was discovered in California, he predicted to some scientific friends that the precious metal would some day be found in that section of Maine, and that now he has no doubt the owners of certain tracts of land will realize handsome fortunes. Further he expresses the opinion that there is more gold in the vicinity of certain localities there, which he names, than has ever yet been dug from a similar section in California. This sounds very much like exaggeration, especially in view of the caution that the editor gives, that much labor and vast expense will be required to get at the gold. Nevertheless, he makes it out very plausibly thus:

"To speak in the language of geology, the stratum containing the original deposit of the gold—and where alone it will be found in large quantities—is, in most instances, overlaid by masses of debris from the cloud-capt summits and slopes of the mountains, which will occasion enormous expense in reaching it. Hence, though in some small tracts where it 'crops out,' fortunes possibly may be made suddenly, we are of opinion that there is very little inducement for multitudes, without capital, to rush to the diggings. Most of the profit that will be realized from the gold mines of Franklin will be obtained by companies who have sufficient capital to enable them to spend thousands of dollars, often, perhaps, in ineffectual attempts to reach the original deposit."

REPEAL OF THE FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.—Boston, Monday, April 20, 5 P. M.—A petition to Congress, for the repeal of the Fugitive Slave Law, was placed in the Exchange Reading Room to-day, and has already received a large number of signatures, embracing many well-known merchants, who in the case of the fugitive Sims, two or three years since, were among the most prominent and active upholders of the law.

DEATH OF MRS. MEAGHER.—We regret to learn that news has arrived to-day of the death of Mrs T. F. Meagher, who was on a visit to her friends in Ireland. Her husband, we believe, has recently arrived in New York, from his California and Southern tour. [N. Y. Mirror.

Buried Alive for Three Weeks.

The English and French papers arrived by the last steamer, give an exciting account of a man buried alive for three weeks:

"Great excitement has been felt at Lyons respecting the efforts made to rescue a poor fellow named Girnud from the dreadful position in which he has been for nearly three weeks, namely, at the bottom of a well, with the dead body of a companion by his side. It is supposed that the latter sank under the violence of his emotions, and, in particular, of fear. At one moment he used to shout, at another he gave way to the most terrible apprehensions; and, again, he made use of the most violent and abusive language towards the persons who were endeavoring to save him.

"Between three and four o'clock in the morning of the 21st, he had taken some soup, and in one hour after, without any thing leading to the supposition of his speedy death, he breathed his last, without any pain, but in a state of great mental depression. 'Evidently,' said a late number of the Gazette de Lyon, 'the uncultivated nature of this man was far from having the strength and composure which the resignation of his young companion in misfortune now gives proof of. Girnud has his back towards the East, with a plank under his feet. As it is loaded with sand, every movement from below, upwards is interlotted. The sand in which he is buried to the waist, and which presses on him tightly, renders it impossible for him also to make any movement in a horizontal position. A plank lies against his stomach, and another against his back. However, he has succeeded in introducing between the first of these and his stomach the ends of a blanket, which afford him some warmth. His hands and arms are at liberty.

"'Above his head, and in various directions about his body, a net-work of planks, of barrel-hoops, of gravel, and of sand, held together only by the most artificial means; and it is through this mass of rubbish that he receives what he wants, that he hears what is said to him, and dimly sees a kind of twilight. On the 14th of April, the sandy soil, in rushing in on the two unfortunate men like a torrent of water, produced a large excavation, which forms, as it were, a sort of well, with a wide chimney above, made by the bore of the well. The sides of the bore were stayed up by pieces of planks, arranged at certain distances, and it is these which, by crossing each other, form over Girnud's head a sort of roof, of which the slightest shock may destroy the equilibrium, and bring down the whole mass on the unfortunate man.

"'It is that circumstance which renders the attempt to rescue him so exceedingly delicate and difficult. The soil in which the workmen are endeavoring to effect their excavation is a mixture of pebbles and coarse sand, and not possessing the slightest cohesion. It is sufficient to touch any part of it with the finger to cause a portion of it to tumble down; and when a sharp blow is given, a considerable quantity is at once detached, even from the highest part of the cutting.'

"On Monday the parish priest paid poor Girand a visit. Lying down upon the ground, his gray head close to the orifice of the well, at the bottom of which Girand hangs on the confines between life and death, he addressed him as follows:

"'My dear Girand, I come to bring you consolation and encouragement. Your deliverance approaches. The brave soldiers who are striving night and day to accomplish it do not work alone. They are assisted on all sides by fervent prayers, in which I pray you to join with all your heart. Invoke the help of Mary, whose special fête in this month is now about to be celebrated. To your present state it is not possible for you to confess in the ordinary way, but you need only desire to confess, as soon as you are delivered, and to have a lively contrition for your sins, and that will be sufficient to entitle you to receive the absolution which I now give you.'

"On being asked whether he understood this exhortation, Girand answered that he did so perfectly, and on the assurance in a firm voice that he was in the frame of mind desired, the cure pronounced the absolution. An iron mask has been lowered to protect his face from the earth that crumbles down upon him when the engineers sound the earth by which he is surrounded."

Among the foreign items brought by the America, we find that a rumor is afloat, that the land of Palestine has been mortgaged by the Sultan to the house of Rothschilds for a loan to aid in the Turkish war. Among other things it is hinted that it is possible that it will be set apart as a Jewish Kingdom under the dynasty of the Rothschilds.

GENTEEL TIPPLING.—The Philadelphia Evening Mail says: "It may surprise some of our readers to be made aware of the fact, but a fact it is notwithstanding, that the ladies in our large cities have their fashionable drinking-houses as well as gentlemen. 'Gardens;' so called in deference to a harder or two of grass, a gravel walk, and a dwarf shrub; 'confectionary establishments,' 'saloons,' and other like fashionable resorts, some of them rivalling in tinsel splendor the London 'Gin Palaces,' furnish ladies with stimulants. 'Sherry-cobblers' are now sipped through straws, even in this, our said city; and ladies call for their wine, or 'correctives,' after ice-cream. The initiative to intemperance for our daughters and sisters furnished in 'brandy-balls,' which are globules of sugar, with the 'creature' reposing within; and this description of 'confectionary' is furnished to whoever will call for it.

AGE OF ANIMALS.—A bear rarely exceeds twenty years; a dog lives twenty years; a fox fourteen or sixteen; lions are long lived; Pompey lived to the age of seventy. The average age of cats is fifteen years, a squirrel and hare seven or eight years, rabbits seven. Elephants have been known to live to the great age of four hundred years. When Alexander the Great had conquered one Porus, King of India, he took a great elephant, which had fought very valiantly for the King, named him Ajax, dedicated him to the sun, and then let him go with this inscription; "Alexander, the son of Jupiter, hath dedicated Ajax to the Sun." This elephant was found with the inscription three hundred and fifty years after. Pigs have been known to live to the age of thirty years; the rhinoceros to twenty. A horse has been known to live to the age of sixty-two, but averages twenty-five or thirty. Camels sometimes live to the age of one hundred. Stags are long lived. Sheep seldom exceed the age of ten. Cows live about fifteen years. Cuvier considers it probable that whales sometimes live one thousand years. The dolphin and porpoise attain the age of thirty. An eagle died at Vienna at the age of one hundred, and four years. Ravens frequently reach the age of one hundred. Swans have been known to live three hundred years. Mr. Malherton has the skeleton of a swan that attained the age of two hundred. Pelicans are long lived. A tortoise has been known to live to the age of one hundred and seven.

CARRYING BUNDLES.—Many people have a contemptible fear of being seen to carry a bundle, however small, having the absurd idea that there is a social degradation in the act. The most trifling as well as weighty packages must be sent to them, no matter how much to the inconvenience of others. This arises from a low kind of pride. There is a pride that is higher; that arises from a consciousness of there being something in the individual not to be affected by such accidents—worth and weight of character. This latter pride was exhibited by the American son of Jerome Bonaparte. While he was in the College, at Cambridge, he was one day carrying to his room a broom he had just purchased, when he met a friend, who, noticing the broom with surprise, exclaimed: "Why did you not have it sent home?" "I am not ashamed to carry anything which belongs to me," was the very sensible reply of young Bonaparte.

CHOLERA.—This dreadful scourge seems to be progressively descending the Tensas, and is now within six miles of us. On Sunday evening last, we understand, three cases occurred at the plantation of Mr. William Stanton, (formerly Lowry's), two of which proved, speedily, fatal. [Trinity Advocate.

THE SEASON.—For some time past, the rains have been very frequent, occurring almost daily, and sometimes several times a day. Notwithstanding, the citizens of the parish are quite healthy, with the exception of those cases of cholera on Tensas, previously reported.

The corn crop grows rapidly, but the presumption is, that if the above-mentioned state of things continues much longer, the cotton plant will be a mere barren weed.

Our rivers, in spite of the [illegible], have not yet risen, comparatively, and probably they will soon commence seeking their summer level. The weather, as is usual at this time of year, is very warm. [Ib.

THE WEATHER.—It has rained here every day for the past week, and we hear a good deal of complaint among the farmers that the corn crop is good, but the cotton is sorry. The [illegible] Dardonne is rising. [Farmerville Equirer.

SERIOUS AFFRAY.—A difficulty occurred last Saturday, at Smithport, in this parish, between Mr. Prevyat and Mr. Sebastian Robleau, in which the former was dangerously cut with a knife, the blade penetrating his abdomen, and inflicting a wound from which recovery is uncertain. The parties are neighbors, and the quarrel arose from momentary impulse, no previous difficulty, we believe, having existed between them. [Mansfield Advocate.

RAIN.—For several days back we have been visited with continuous showers of rain, and as yet we have little prospect of fair weather. Corn and cotton are suffering. [Ib.

MISSISSIPPI.—We regret very much to learn that the diarrhœa is prevailing to an alarming extent at French Camps, in Choctaw county. Mr. Irving has lost a daughter, and several others of his family are lying in a critical condition. Mr. Cushman's school has been temporarily suspended on account of it, but we are happy to state that it is not abating. [Kosciusko (Miss.) Sun, May 27.

A branch of the Know-Nothings has been established at Natchez, Miss.

On the 20th ult., about twelve miles from Canton, James Lee shot Hugh W. Erwin, killing him almost instantly. We are not sufficiently informed, says the Canton Mississippian, to venture to give particulars. Lee, we understand, has made his escape.

THE FUGITIVE SLAVE CASE IN BOSTON.—The Slave returned to his Master.—The American Flag draped in Mourning.—U. S. Military still on Duty.—Boston, June 2.—The United States Commissioner gave his decision in favor of the claimant of the fugitive slave Burns yesterday. He spoke as follows, when announcing his decision, the remarks we give being the concluding portion of his speech: "I think the fugitive slave law constitutional, and that the evidence before me applying to the escape and indemnity of the slave, are all the court has to consider. I am satisfied that the claimant has fully established his claim, and he is, therefore, entitled to a certificate of his right to the fugitive."

On the announcement of the decision of the Commissioner, the Abolitionists draped the American Flag in mourning and hung it across Court street.

There has been no outbreak as yet. Cannon have been placed so as to sweep Court Square, a detachment of U. S. marines are on guard at the Court House. The fugitive Burns will be taken down to State street central wharf, between one and two o'clock to-day, guarded by one hundred U. S. troops, under command of Major Ridgley. A detachment of U. S. artillery with nine pounders will form a portion of the escort. The guns are loaded with grape-shot and the men all provided with twenty-four round of cartridges.

A large body of police is stationed on central wharf, and an immense number of people are now assembling there. Boats will be taken by steamer on board the U. S. Revenue cutter Morris, which will then be towed to sea.

A coffin has just been suspended from a building at the corner of Washington and State streets.

State Military under Arms.—The entire brigade of State Military is out, and now marching down State street with standards, etc. The various companies are greeted with hisses, groans and cries of shame by the mob. Fully 2,000 people are assembled in State and Court streets. Applications have been made to the Mayor to have the bells tolled, but he has refused to allow it.

More Arrests Made.—A witness in the case of the slave Burns, named W. H. Jones, was arrested for addressing the populace in exciting language. While being taken up State street, he was enthusiastically cheered all the way. The people are wild with excitement.

Twelve o'clock, M.—The light dragoons, under Col. Wright, are closing the passage through State street, the whole space being crowded by dense masses of people.

Half-past 12.—The line of troops extends from Court Square to long wharf. In some cases the pressure of the crowd has caused collisions with the military. Groans and hisses are continual.

Three o'clock, P. M.—Burns was escorted to Long Wharf, between two and three o'clock, and put on board the steamer John Taylor, which conveyed him to the revenue cutter Morris, then lying in the stream. The Morris was immediately towed to sea, and started on her voyage to Norfolk direct. The escort which conducted Burns to the wharf consisted of twelve hundred troops, besides one hundred and fifty citizens, armed with cutlasses and revolvers.

The Anti-Slavery Convention.—The second day of the anti-Slavery Convention, the audience was only about thirty, and the [illegible] tame.

Foster denounced the free-soilers as traitors to liberty, in elevating Caleb Cushing to the supreme bench of the State of Massachusetts. Resolution were passed, complimenting the counsel of Burns for skill and eloquence in conducting the defence.

Steamboat Burned.—Nashville, June 3.—The steamer Bedford, bound from this city for Cincinnati, took fire on Harpeth shoals on Thursday night, and burned to the water's edge. Boat and cargo a total loss. No lives are reported to have been lost.

It is a gratifying and forcible fact that every paper in Boston has spoken out against the kidnappers of that city, except the organ of the Summer and Phillips demagogues.

SHEEP.—A large drove of sheep, part of a flock of 14,000, purchased for the California market, by E. H. Staggs, of Memphis, passed through this city yesterday. We learn that Mr S. has invested $60,000 in sheep in this State. This drove numbers 2200. [Nashville Whig.

THE ERICSSON.—The Ericsson has been removed from the Government Dry Dock at Brooklyn, and now lies at Hogg & Delamater's dock, undergoing repairs. Her timbers are found to be perfectly sound. The degree of injury to her machinery cannot as yet be ascertained. It is believed, however, that the expense of repair will be comparatively slight, and that the ship will be ready for her trial trip in the course of a few weeks. The refitting of the cabins and state rooms will prove a heavy bill of expense to the owners. The carpets, cushions and plate were nearly all destroyed by the immersion in the river, and the principal delay will be occasioned by the necessity of renewing the elegant appointments of

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Cartersville, Ga., May 27.

Under a rule which compels taking the vote on the pending question when two-thirds ask for it, the Conference is getting through business with dispatch. The rule was adopted a few days ago, and while it cuts off some speaking that might be profitable and now and then in addition to the operation; yet, on the whole, it is unobjectionable.

Among the things done, I may enumerate the adoption of the report of committee on Missions, which provides, as a new feature in the Constitution of the Society, for a General Missionary Committee. The Conferences are [illegible] in the Eastern, Northwestern District. From each one of these Missionary Districts, the General Conference elects two traveling elders; this General Missionary Committee of six, representing the various sections of the work, meets with the Bishops and Secretary once a year in autumn, when appropriations are to be made, and in conjunction with them, determine what Foreign Missions are to be established or maintained, and the number of Missionaries to be employed; also, in conjunction with the Board of Managers, they fix the appropriations. Formerly, this was determined by the Board, who were local and mainly laymen, and necessarily without a wide range of information about the field they appropriated out. The present arrangement will bring wide information together in surveying the wants of the world and the most eligible points of operation. Moreover, it will give satisfaction to the patrons of the Society who have not thought it just as it ought to be, that while the money was contributed from all sections of the Church, its direction and appropriation was with a few residing at the seat of the Society, forming the Board of Managers. From the Eastern District, H. B. Bascom and W. J. Parks have been elected to serve the next four years; from the South-western, J. Hamilton and R. Alexander; from the South-western, S. Johnson and Wm. McMahon—the ablest committee.

To-day the report of the committee on Books and Periodicals was adopted, settling an important principle:—the Bishops draw their supports from the proceeds of the Book Concern; that the deficient preachers, widows and orphans and superannuates are thrown upon the contributions of the Church directly. Then they will be better supported, and our literature not being taxed for their support, can be cheapened.

Yesterday afternoon session was thrown into a small fluster by a motion to strike out Nashville and insert Memphis, as the location of the Book Concern. Went Nashville to [illegible] after all! The Conference cemented to reconsider a motion to "strike out" by a majority that alarmed the friends of Nashville. The telegraph had brought news that Memphis would give $70,000 to the Book Concern if located there. To assure those who suspect the wires of lying sometimes, responsible gentlemen on the spot stood ready to endorse for the amount. Seventy thousand dollars was not to be despised, as it would set the Concern in buildings and fixtures. But Nashville had said she would give us much as any other place, and Nashville stuck to it. It had not moved from Nashville. Does not Nashville stand committed for seventy thousand dollars? So I understand it. Memphis has provoked her will. Her offer was done fair.

[illegible] refreshed from a refreshing and profitable [illegible] vacation from Conference labor. Great is Peabody! And who is Peabody, you will say. Why, a scientific agriculturist, who is doing more for the world's comfort than the Czar of all the Russias. About five miles from Cartersville, on the opposite side of the river, is his strawberry plantation. Mind, now, don't print it puff. For [illegible] five years he has been showing the people of the South what use these pine hills can be put to in raising life's luxuries; and experiment amid his strawberries. 'Tis [illegible] pleasing them nearly every month in the year. 'Tis certain, that from May to July he supplies them to the market. And such strawberries!

An invitation, accompanied with some Edisto strawberries, was, early in the week, extended to the Conference to visit and partake of them this afternoon. About thirty carriages might have been counted on the spot. I inquired for Mr. Peabody—and for his Canvas-back. The evening was fine; a shower had laid the dust; the company was large of invited guests. Perhaps he might give us a dinner full cooked. A glance at the satisfied face of the generous proprietor, as he was conducting the Bishops about the premises; and more, a glance at the cordial [illegible] wife, as she received her crowding guests in the rural style, dissipated my anxiety. Enough for all," was an unspoken part of the welcome. Tables extended the yard, under shade, covered with constant white cloths, upon which [illegible] water, iced cake, and cream and milk [illegible] berries, great in size and [illegible] flavor. Help yourself. Will you have it in them? Down at the spring sat another table, with a servant to wait on any [illegible] might be taken with an appetite in passing. Whole [illegible] large tower were arranged tables with even more care and luxury—spanning under strawberries. It was strawberries every where. The eyes were surfeited with seeing. The company were invited to visit the plantation, where plats had been left ungathered for a day or two. Pick off and eat, fresh and ripe from the stem. They are as big as small apples. Great is Peabody!

And if you can pollute your palate with a cigar, after these delicacies, here they are. A servant is holding them out to you. Will you take one? Not now.

Before dispersing, the chastened cheerfulness of the company was contributed to by an impromptu speech called out from Dr. Green, of Tennessee, who adopted his remarks happily to the occasion, and the venerable Bishop Soule returned thanks to our Heavenly Father for the fruits of the earth.

Ladies sought their husbands; company after company disappeared through the wide gate town-ward; and the bower, ere night-fall, was deserted. An appropriate inscription was over its entrance—"In the triumphs of the Cross all the arts of peace do flourish." Hardly an impression seemed to have been made on the provisions garnered for the occasion; and it was altogether the greatest strawberrying I ever saw before, or expect to see again.

Mr. Peabody is a scientific cultivator, as is seen in the quantity, size and flavor of his fruit. He gathers on an average 200 quarts daily, and supplies this market, and by railroad sends to Savannah and other places when extra pickings occur. Last winter, his sale of strawberry vines, in New Orleans alone, reached $1,000. The result of his horticultural experiments and observations are published in the "Soil of the South," a monthly periodical of merit, issued in this city—of which he is part proprietor and editor. The strawberry offers a fair subject for science. The mere planter often finds his vines to fail; and that, too, when there is no late frost and no lack of blossoms. The existence of sex, even in the vegetable kingdom, must be recognized in its culture. I remember once a visit paid by a plain country woman to her friend's house in the village. There were no strawberries in the garden, and yet the bed has been stimulated by the best manures and the vines flourishing. The village housewife did not understand this, but concluded with others that the cultivation was a chance business—happened to miss that year. Her more observing friend remarked, as she cast eyes on the fruitless luxuriance—"Why, they are all he's—that's the reason." 'Twould have been a like failure, had they been all she's. Now Mr. Peabody has reduced all this to rule, and works by it and makes no chance work of it. About every sixth row is planted with a set of vines whose only office is to act as impregnators. He detects by the blossom a fruit-bearing or barren vine. But those who would know more, must take the "Soil of the South."

The ordination of Bishops on account of Bishop Andrew's necessitated absence since Friday, took place on Thursday, instead of to-morrow, as first set. A striking feature of the solemn occasion was the presentation of Bishop-elect Pierce by his father. We desired to see it so. There was moral sublimity in it. The venerable man as he used the words of the liturgy—"We present you this holy man to be ordained a Bishop"—could not command his clear, ringing voice. And there was emotion in many bosoms besides his; and many a tear.

It is understood that Bishop Pierce's post as President of Emory College, will be filled by Dr. Means. Our excellent confrere of the press, Dr. Wightman, retires from the Advocate at Charleston, to fill the presidential chair of Wofford College. The Doctor has been an honor to the editorial staff of the Church. May he succeed as well in the next sphere as in that he leaves. Rev. E. H. Myers, now President of Wesleyan Female College, will succeed to the Southern Christian Advocate. And he is such an one as all will welcome. For the first time, I have met with him here. As a finished scholar, Christian gentleman, sound divine, and ready writer, he will enter upon his new duties to the fullest advantage.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

"WEAK LUNGS," AGAIN.

"Preacher's Friend" and "Alpha" seem to have waked up some of the preachers to the propriety of making the abdominal muscles assist the gutterals in performing the duty of preaching. The latter has been frequently asked "How this is to be done." Many of the preachers can't understand it. Neither do we in all its ramifications. But, as the blind man said after he had been restored to sight, "One thing I know, that whereas I was once blind, I now see." So with "Alpha," one thing he knows, that whereas he was once killing himself by that gutteral preaching he now lives, and not the remotest symptom of becoming a young superannuate.

If you and your readers will pardon the coarseness of the following illustration, it will give the principle of the whole matter. Take a horn or trumpet and endeavor to sound it; you will find the whole of the abdominal muscles brought into operation, assisting the throat in performing its duty. Or, take an example from the crying infant. How long and loud it can cry! and yet how few, exceedingly few of them ever become hoarse; or to keep up the subject before us, how few of them are upon the list of infantile superannuates. They can cry longer than the long-est apostolic sermon ever preached, and yet not be "begun to be broken down."

Now take the principle, act on it while preaching, observe its performances and effects, and govern yourself accordingly, and the work is done. Without this last, all your knowledge of its principle will be of no avail.

Where is "Preacher's Friend?" Tell him to be of good cheer, and cry aloud and spare not. The subject is eliciting attention. May it increase an hundred fold.

Alabama Conference, 1854. ALPHA.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.—This body adjourned on Wednesday the 31st ultimo, after a session of one month. We conclude the proceedings with the present number of the Advocate. It will be seen that the 9th Section has gone by the board, with but one dissenting voice. This places Southern Methodism in its true character at home, and frees it from the embarrassment which this fragment of inoperative and injudicious legislation might, and sometimes has, produced.

We regret that the action of the Conference, providing for a general Missionary Committee, and noticed in the Editorial Correspondence, was reconsidered, and the Constitution restored to its former reading. This we regard as a grave error—indeed a grievance, which we fear will ultimately react, to the detriment of our Collections. All sections contribute the means of carrying on our Missionary operations—all are alike interested in them; and justice, not less than expediency, suggests that all sections should have a direct representative voice in directing its policy and appropriating its funds.

BOOK NOTICES.

DANIEL, A MODEL FOR YOUNG MEN: By the Rev. W. A. SCOTT, D. D. Carter & Brothers, Publishers: New York.

We are indebted to Mr. Heman Packard for this handsome volume of 340 pages. It comprises a series of Lectures, sixteen in all, delivered in the first Presbyterian Church of New Orleans, and, we believe, during the winter and spring of 1852. In these lectures, the character of Daniel is portrayed with great felicity of style and vigor of thought; all the salient points of his history are brought out with power and discrimination; and the whole subject is directed to an affectionate and practical application. Although not designedly critical and theological, they embody a large amount of hermeneutical, historical and scientific information—not for more display, but for the exposition and vindication of scriptural truth. In reading them, we are not only impressed with the greatness and goodness of the captive Prophet, but we are convinced that the Bible is indeed the Word of God. The materials of the present lectures are in the main taken from the first six chapters of the Book of Daniel, but the scope of exegesis, in some respects, takes in the whole. The Bible is presented as a book of resources; and the idea is wonderfully strengthened by the fact, that our author has made so much out of so small a portion of it. The capital excellency of the work, and one we are glad to attest—not more distinctive of the author than the preacher—is the thorough practicalness and deep evangelism which pervades it. The Cross is not buried in a rubbish of words, and learning falsely so called.

Take the lectures altogether, there is in them, from first to last, considerable repetition, which, in the course of weekly delivery from the pulpit to large and miscellaneous congregations, was scarcely a fault, but rather a necessity. It will recur to the reader that there is frequently a needless expansion of topic, a prolixity of amplification, a wearisome variety and length of illustration, and an uncalled for absorption of popular sentiment and contemporary events in the drift of discourse; but when he changes his position to a hearer, these faults are measurably dissipated, if they do not become real excellencies. We could commend the book more heartily if there were in it none of Calvin's foot-prints; but these are few, less numerous than could be expected of that school of divinity of which the distinguished author is at once a disciple and an ornament.

THE DIVINE CHARACTER VINDICATED. A REVIEW of some of the principal features of Rev. Dr. E. Beecher's recent work, entitled "The Conflict of Ages; or the great debate on the moral relations of God and Man": By Rev. MOSES BALLOU. Redfield: New York.

Those who have read "The Conflict of Ages," will remember that Dr. Beecher reconciles the supposed conflict between the moral principles of the Divine character and the doctrine of original sin, by the vaguery of man's pre-existence. Mr. Ballou is a Universalist, and turns Dr. Beecher's work to account against the orthodox view of the subject. He refutes the notion of human pre-existence; then, according to the Doctor's admission, the conflict goes on, and must be settled by the tenets of universalism. The spirit of the writer is kind, the style lucid, and the argumentation as good as so bad a cause can admit.

We regard this as a real contribution to the religious reading of the day, and one that will reach down to other generations. Dr. Cumming is a very prolific author, but he does not write with a jaded pen. The subject of this work invites perusal, from which few will retire in disappointment.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY—MAY 27.

Conference met at 9 o'clock, Bishop Paine in the chair; religious exercises by Mr. Jones.

After reading the journals of yesterday, Bishop Early took the chair.

Dr. Wightman, chairman of the committee on Episcopacy, offered report No. 7, providing for the support of the Bishops, which was read; the rule requiring it to lie on the table for one day, was suspended, and the report was adopted.

Dr. W. A. Smith, chairman of the committee on Books, offered report No. 4. This report contemplated the publication of a monthly paper on the basis proposed in the memorial of C. K. Marshall, heretofore presented to the Conference. The report was, on motion, laid on the table.

Dr. Smith also offered an appendix to report No. 3, which contemplated the establishment of a German paper, to be published in Texas; which was laid on the table for the present.

Dr. Doggett, chairman of the committee on Education, presented the report of said committee, which was read, and a motion to lay it on the table having failed, an amendment was offered by Dr. Drake, which, on motion of Mr. Dorman, was laid on the table.

Mr. McTyeire moved to strike out the 3d resolution, which recognized, under specified restrictions, the appointment of traveling preachers to literary institutions; which the mover advocated in some pertinent remarks, in which he took the ground that the profession of teaching and that of preaching the gospel, were in themselves separate and distinct, and that men engaged in the latter, should not turn aside to the former, at least as a general thing.

Mr. McMahon hoped the report would pass as it was. It was pertinent, proper, and its provisions were necessary to meet the existing wants of the Church and people. Knowledge should be sanctified, and through what medium would this be more likely to be done than by many of God's ministers. They had proved themselves worthy and useful, and he hoped no such restrictions as those contemplated by the motion would ever be put upon them.

Mr. Crouch had but few words to say. No one pretended to affirm that we could, as a Church, do what we should, without bearing our part in the work of popular education; and he believed it was equally clear, that to do this work as we should, we must call in the aid of the ministry.

After a remark or two from Mr. Burton, the motion to amend was withdrawn.

Mr. Johnson moved the previous question, which was sustained; the question was taken and the report was adopted.

Mr. McMahon, chairman of the committee on Missions, offered report No. 5, which was read, and, on motion, adopted.

Dr. Summers, chairman of the committee on the Tract Cause, offered a report embracing a constitution for a Tract Society of the M. E. Church, South, which was, on motion, adopted.

A paper on the subject of colportage was presented and laid on the table.

Mr. Pearce, from the committee on the American Bible Society, offered a report, which was read, and the rule which required it to lay on the table for one day being suspended, it was, on motion, adopted.

Mr. Carson presented a memorial from A. McKay, in reference to the boundary between the North and South Carolina Conferences; which memorial was, on motion, laid on the table.

On motion of Dr. W. A. Smith, the consideration of the report No. 1, of the committee on Books, was resumed. Item 6th, which was under consideration at the time of adjournment on yesterday afternoon, was read. This item referred to the rates at which books should be sold by the Agents.

Dr. Winans moved that the closing member of the last sentence in the item be stricken out. He moved this because he was opposed to any plan which proposed doing away annual dividends to worn-out preachers, etc. To this he was opposed, because this conference could not, without violation of right, take the course proposed by the report. A sacred obligation rested upon the Church to make such dividends to worn-out preachers, etc., as the increase of the book operation might warrant. If he were satisfied that expediency were against him, he would still occupy the stand he did; it was a principle of right, and not expediency, which was involved in the question, and it was right which governed him. He did not believe the U. S. Court would have given a decision in our favor but for the belief that the funds would have been used agreeably to the discipline of the Church.

Mr. Crouch wished to state a fact. The discipline required that the proceeds of the Book Concern should not be applied in any but one specified way; but it was perfectly competent for the General Conference to direct such a management of the Book Concern as that there should be no material profits. This was what the report proposed to do. He, therefore, favored it.

Dr. Green did not think that such dividends tended to assist those for whose benefit they were set apart; as, when such claimants were thrown upon the sense of justice in the Church, they fared the best. Besides, as the report provided for the support of the Bishops from the Book Concern, it would relieve the several annual conferences to at least the extent of $500 each a year, and allow the larger appropriations to worn-out preachers.

Dr. W. A. Smith agreed with Dr. Green, and explained the object of the committee in reporting as they had. He was satisfied; he knew Dr. Winans was mistaken in his suppositions as to the grounds on which the Church suit was decided. The principles alluded to by Dr. W. did not enter into the decision of the suit. He (Dr. S.) was concerned, and knew what he said.

Mr. Langhorne was surprised to hear the opinions expressed by those who advocated the report. He thought their course was in direct opposition to the course of the ministers and doctrines of the Church since 1844, as well as before.

Mr. Evans called for the previous question, which call was sustained; the main question was put, and the 6th item of the report was adopted.

The 7th item in the report was read. This referred, among other things, to the number of which the Book Committee should consist.

Dr. Hamilton moved to strike out the number five and insert seven.

Mr. Rodford moved that the proposed amendment lie on the table, which prevailed; and the question was taken on the adoption of the item, and it was adopted.

The 8th item was read. This referred to the publication of a Quarterly Review, Lady's Companion, etc.

Mr. Allen proposed to strike out "Lady's Companion," and insert Monthly Magazine.

Mr. Allen advocated the change, because he believed a monthly, such as he proposed, would do all that the other did, and more; it would be better in every respect.

Dr. Henkle hoped they would not displace the Lady's Companion. It had a large subscription list, and its assets were above its liabilities.

Dr. Drake hoped we would have both papers; we needed both, and he thought both could be sustained.

Mr. Johnson was not satisfied that it was best to continue the Lady's Companion. It had been shown that the collections on subscriptions had not met the liabilities by several thousand dollars. If the subscription list were valuable, it could be transferred to a good Monthly; if not valuable, it was not desirable. He was satisfied that we had no need of so many different papers.

Dr. Whitford Smith wished to know in reference to this, and all other papers, whether they were or were not paying their own way. This would determine his vote.

Dr. Green explained in reference to the Lady's Companion, and hoped it would be continued.

Dr. Hamilton thought it obvious that the Lady's Companion had not met the wants or expectations of the Church and the community; and hoped it might be merged into a monthly of a high character.

Mr. Dorman concurred with Dr. Hamilton.

Dr. Henkle explained; expectation had not been met, because the means had not been at command. He hoped the paper would be continued, and the means afforded by which it would be elevated in its character.

Dr. Boring thought the question in reference to all Church papers was, whether they did good, and not whether they made money; if they did good, they should be sustained.

Mr. Ferguson called for the main question, which was put, and the 8th item of the report was adopted.

Conference then adjourned.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY—MAY 29.

Conference met at 9 o'clock, Bishop Early in the chair; and was opened with divine service by Dr. Parsons.

The Secretary read the following resolution of Dr. Wightman, which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That the thanks of the General Conference be, and they are hereby respectfully tendered to Mr. and Mrs. Peabody for the cordial and elegant entertainment given to the members on Saturday afternoon last, at their Strawberry Plantation; and for the high gratification thus furnished us in witnessing so worthy a specimen of the horticultural resources of the South, in the development of which, Mr. Peabody has long been recognized by the country as an ardent and successful pioneer, both in his editorial labors in the horticultural department of that excellent journal, the "Soil of the South," and in the practical operations of his theories of improvement. And further, that the Secretary of Conference be instructed to furnish this resolution to our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Peabody.

Bishop Kavanaugh took the chair, and called for reports from standing committees.

Dr. W. A. Smith, chairman of the committee on Books, presented report No. 5, which was read, and, on motion, adopted.

Mr. McMahon, chairman of the committee on Missions, offered a report, which was, on motion, laid on the table.

Dr. Winans offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That when any member shall move that the pending question be now put, the vote on such motion shall be taken without debate, and if two-thirds of the members voting shall sustain the call for the previous question, the chair shall put it without debate, and that the resolution providing for taking the previous question be, and hereby is, rescinded.

Mr. Stevenson offered a resolution referring to a claim preferred against this conference by the widow of the late Dr. Latta, for services rendered by her husband as editor of the Louisville Advocate; which resolution was referred to the committee on Books.

Dr. W. A. Smith moved to take up the unfinished business in report No. 1 of the committee on Books, which was agreed to; and the 9th item of said report was taken up. The item referred to the establishment of Depositories.

On motion of Dr. Wightman, the report was amended by adding Charleston to the list of places at which Depositories should be established.

Dr. Drake moved to further amend the report by striking out the names of Memphis and Knoxville; which motion was subsequently withdrawn, and Dr. Whiteford Smith offered a substitute, referring the whole subject of Depositories to the judgment and subsequent action of the Book Agent; which substitute was, on motion of T. Johnson, laid on the table.

It was then moved to read the names of places proposed for Depositories, one by one, and act on them separately.

Mr. Rosser offered an amendment, which was laid on the table.

The names of the places were called, and Richmond, Va., Cherleston, S. C., Louisville, Ky., New Orleans, La., Memphis, Tenn., St. Louis, Mo., Galveston, Texas, San Francisco, Cal., were selected as places for Book Depositories.

Mr. Hoard moved to add Prattsville, Ala., to the list, which motion was lost, and after an effort at verbal alterations, the 9th item of the report was adopted.

The 10th item was then taken up. This item provides for the appointment of editors of Church papers at Richmond, Va., Charleston, S. C., Nashville, Knoxville and Memphis, Tenn., St. Louis, Mo., New Orleans, La., Galveston, Texas, and San Francisco, Cal.

After some discussion, the 10th item was laid on the table in order to first settle a principle involved in the 12th item; which item was then taken up, and Dr. Drake moved to strike out all the proviso of the item.

Mr. Walker offered an amendment to this, which was laid on the table.

The vote being taken on Dr. Drake's motion, it was lost, and the 12th item of the report was adopted.

The 10th and 11th items were read and adopted.

The report was then adopted as a whole.

Dr. Winans offered a resolution calling for an afternoon session, and providing that the election for book agents, editors, etc., be made the order of the day.

Mr. Keener offered a substitute, which was laid on the table, and the resolution of Dr. Winans was adopted.

On motion, conference then proceeded to the consideration of report No 3 of the committee on Books. That part of the report which had not been previously acted on, was read.

The first item, referring to loans to be granted to certain papers, was taken up.

Mr. Langhorne was opposed to making any such loans. He did not believe the conference had any right to act thus.

Dr. Drake agreed in the main with Mr. Langhorne.

Dr. W. A. Smith explained, and showed that such a measure as was contemplated by the report, would benefit the Church as well as the papers. Such a course had been pursued in other instances heretofore with great profit to the Church. In reference to the sacredness of the book fund, he thought he understood that as well as others. There was no difficulty from that quarter. He was sure of this, though he might be unable to satisfy some others of the fact.

Mr. Rosser had constitutional difficulties in this case. The conference could appropriate the produce of the book concern only in one way; while in this instance we had no produce to divide, and such loans could not be made from the capital until the constitution was changed.

Dr. Green had only to say, that as we had no proceeds, the best we could do with our capital, was to put it to work; and he believed that it would be as profitable to the Church in this as any other way; loans of this kind had been made by the Church, and subsequently returned; while the use of it was made profitable to the Church. He was in favor of the report.

Dr. Winans did not think there was any constitutional difficulty in the way of the proposition. If we believed such loans were right and necessary, we could make them. The book concern had two objects—first, an instrument of distributing religious knowledge, and, secondly, to afford, when possible, something to aid superannuated preachers, etc. Wherever the first design was properly carried out, there would always be proceeds, and these should of course be applied as contemplated in the discipline. But, were it otherwise, where there are no proceeds to be so considered, its affairs should be so managed as to create profits to be applied as contemplated.

Mr. Whipple was from one of the younger conferences, and they had some interest in the matter. Their papers had contributed much to an increase in the annual collections for the superannuated preachers missionary society, etc. Give them a little assistance, and they would do more for the Church and themselves.

Mr. Pierce, of Miss., would vote for the report provided it were distinctly understood that these papers thus aided should be tendered to this conference at its next session.

As the time for adjournment was near, Mr. Burton obtained the floor and made some observations.

Leave of absence was granted to Messrs. Redford and McDaniel after to-day.

After which, on motion, conference adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met at 3½ o'clock, Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair; divine service by Dr. L. Pierce.

The journals of the morning session were read and approved.

Bishop Capers then took the chair.

Dr. Winans moved that conference proceed to the order of the day, which was the election of book agents, editors, etc.

Dr. W. A. Smith offered, as a substitute, that we resume the consideration of report No. 3 of the committee on Books. This prevailed, and the report was taken up. The item immediately before the conference was that which proposed loans for the aid of certain church papers.

Mr. Parks stated his objections to the policy of loaning amounts to destitute papers. He was in favor of giving what might be deemed necessary. The main object of the book Concern was to furnish the country with cheap religious literature; dividends were secondary altogether.

Dr. W. A. Smith agreed fully in this view of the main object of the book fund. What might be deemed advisable, years hence, was matter for future action; at present our duty to use the fund in its appropriate way. He went for giving the papers the aid they asked for.

Bishop Soule, without attempting to give reasons for his opinion, stated that the question was one of no ordinary interest, which involving a principle or precedent. He understood that the decision of the conference in regard to the property, had a tall bearing on consideration of the claims of superannuated preachers, etc. He conceived that the application of the funds was to be governed by the chapter laid down in the book of Discipline. With regard to the appropriation of the profits of the book fund in a loan to certain papers as a financial operation, so far as it was a business transaction, we must look to the probable profits. He was glad to hear that these papers were financially sound and prosperous; he could not see why they should not insure. He feared that there would not be much profit.

It was then moved that the several items be called one by one, and action be taken by reference to them separately. This was provailed, and the New Orleans Advocate was called. The report proposed to loan the paper $6,000.

Mr. McDaniel moved to strike out and insert $2,000.

Mr. Keener explained the condition of the paper, its wants, etc., stating that at present, it had been published by the Book Committee. He wished the Church to provide an office with fixtures, and make the paper its own, by increasing the subscription price from $1,50 to $2,00 per annum, if deemed expedient. The present subscription list was near 6,000, and he thought with the prospect fair for an extensive circulation.

Mr. McDaniel withdrew his motion.

Dr. Drake offered, as a substitute, that the Book Committee procure the paper, and establish it under the control of the General Conference, provided that not more than $6,000 be expended upon the paper.

The Memphis Advocate was then called, which the committee proposed loaning $6,000.

Mr. Harris set forth the condition and prospects of this paper.

Mr. Cobb also spoke in reference to the Memphis paper, and set forth an exhibit of its assets and liabilities, the amount of subscription, etc.

Mr. Harris then moved that the Memphis Christian Advocate be adopted as a Conference paper.

After remarks by sundry brethren, Mr. Ferguson called for the pending question, the call being sustained, the question was put, and the resolution adopted.

St. Louis Advocate was called; the committee reported in favor of lending it $6,000, which report was adopted, and the loan granted.

The Holston Advocate was called; the committee proposed loaning $5,000.

Dr. Patton explained the condition of the paper; the report was adopted and the loan granted.

The Christian Observer, a paper proposed to be published at San Francisco, Cal., was called. The committee recommended a loan of $5,000 for this purpose.

Dr. Boring moved to amend the report by striking out 5 and inserting $10,000. This motion he sustained by some remarks, setting forth the present condition and prospects of the Church in that country.

Bishop Soule concurred in the remarks of Dr. Boring, and stated that it must not be given up, never! A paper and book depository were needed there, and ought to be granted.

Dr. Green thought we should be careful in matters of this kind, we were about to appropriate more money than we had, and had got ourselves in serious difficulties. He thought the whole work of California and the adjacent had better be thrown on the Missionary Society.

Dr. Boring's amendment, on motion of Mr. Cowles, was laid on the table.

The vote was taken and the report was adopted, and $5000 ordered to be loaned. On motion the report was then adopted as a whole.

Dr. Parsons moved that when conference adjourn, it adjourn to meet at 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. Cowles moved to amend by making it 8½ o'clock to-morrow; which motion prevailed.

Conference then, on motion, proceeded to the election of two book agents.

The result of the first ballot was as follows:

The journals of the preceding day were read and approved.

Dr. Parsons, by leave of conference, presented a resolution in reference to the Pacific Conference, which was adopted.

Dr. Wightman moved that the Bishops be requested to select from the reports on the Secretary's table, such business as in their judgment demanded immediate notion, and present them for the consideration of the conference. On this, the previous question was called and sustained. The question was taken and the motion adopted.

It was then moved to suspend the regular order of the day, to take up certain reports of committees, which motion was sustained.

The chair then called for the reports of standing committees.

Dr. Lee presented report No. 7, from the committee on Ittineracy, which was read, together with a substitute presented by two members of the committee.

A motion was made to suspend the rule, in order to take action on the substitute.

Mr. Thorn on offered an amendment, which was laid on the table.

Mr. Garrett then moved to lay the substitute on the table, which motion prevailed, and the substitute was laid on the table.

Dr. Lee then offered report No. 8, which was read.

Mr. Nicholson offered a substitute, but the conference refusing to suspend the rule requiring it to lie on the table one day, no action was had upon it.

The report of the committee then came up for action.

Several substitutes were voted down, and the report was finally adopted.

It was then, on motion of Mr. Dermen, resolved that the vote fixing the time of adjournment for to-day, be reconsidered.

On motion of Dr. Lee, it was resolved that the time of adjournment be indefinitely postponed.

It was then moved, that the resolution requesting the Bishops to bring forward business, etc., be reconsidered, which was not adopted.

The chair, then under the rule previously adopted, presented report No. 7, of the committee on Revisals, which was read and adopted.

The report of the committee to whom was referred the report of commissioners in the church suit, was then presented, and its several items adopted—the 2d unanimously by a rising vote.

The report No. 1, of the committee on Boundaries, was then presented and taken up item by item and adopted.

This report provides for a division of the Arkansas conference, so as to form an Arkansas and Washita conference.

The Pacific Conference boundary was so changed as to embrace the whole of the State of California, and all that part of the Territory of New Mexico lying west of the Rocky Mountains.

The Kansas Mission Conference includes the Territory of Kansas, and that part of the Territory of New Mexico on the east of the Rocky Mountains.

By resolution, the preachers of the Kansas Mission Conference, were instructed to meet with the St. Louis Conference, until such time as the Bishops may direct otherwise.

The report of the committee on Biographies of Bishops McKendree and Soule, was presented for the action of the conference.

The report proposes that Bishop Paine prepare the work for publication, and tenders to Bishop Soule the respectful acknowledgments of the General Conference for his proffered aid and the papers of Bishop McKendree, which he has put at the disposal of the Biographer. The report was adopted.

The report No. 1, of the committee on Revisals, was presented for action. It was considered item by item, and after some amendments and verbal alterations, it was adopted. The report provides for a new section in the Discipline, in reference to the office of Trustees to church property, defining more clearly their duties, mode of appointment, powers, etc.

It was then resolved, that when conference adjourn, it adjourn to meet at 3½ o'clock.

OBITUARY.

Died—Of Congestive Fever, in Bossier parish, La., on the 22d May, Mrs. Mary B. Hodges, wife of Gen. John L. Hodges, in the 36th year of her age—leaving a husband, seven children, and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn their irreparable loss.

The subject of this notice was amiable in all the relations of life. As a wife she was affectionate and confiding; as a mother, fond and devoted; as a friend, kind and generous; as a mistress, humane and just; and as a Christian, zealous and consistent.

She had been a pious and acceptable member of the Baptist Church since the year 1846; and it is a source of consolation to her friends to believe that she died in the exercise of that Christian faith by which she seemed ever sustained, and that she has gone to that rest which awaits the finally faithful.

At the family residence in Rankin county, Miss., on the 14th day of March, 1854, in bright hope of a blissful immortality beyond the grave, Mrs. Charlotte Lane Evans, wife of Dr. H. G. Evans.

Sister Evans was born near Winchester, Tennessee, on the 27th day of May, 1805; was converted at Ebenezer Camp-ground; joined the M. E. Church in Shelby county, Ala., in 1823, and was attached to what was known as Ashley's Church, of which Richard Hillsy was Class-leader. She was married to her now bereaved husband on the 5th day of November, 1829, in Shelby county, Alabama. Since which time she has lived in Winston and Neshoba counties, Miss., and in Claiborne and Washita parishes, La., where her house has always been the home of the Methodist preacher. She cherished and honored the rules and doctrines of her Church, and felt them to be almost of as binding obligation to her as the teachings of the Bible. She was a Methodist in reality; always arranging her domestic affairs on Saturday so that each member of the family could enjoy the privileges and immunities of the Sabbath. She was exemplary in all the relations of life—being, as wife, mother, mistress and friend, a model for imitation. As a Christian, she was consistent—living in the enjoyment of religion, and never expressing a doubt as to her acceptance. She was a friend to the friendless, and a helper of the distressed.

Sister Evans's health has been quite feeble during the last four years; frequently very low from palpitation of the heart; and though in very poor health, she expressed a strong desire to take part in tenting at Sinai camp-ground last fall, saying that she knew it would be her last. She was confined by severe sickness for about two months before her death; during which she invariably said she would never get well again; and when speaking of any thing that was to take place during the year, she always observed that the family would live to see it, but she would not. Shortly before her death, she called her children and servants around her bed, and seeing them weep, she told them that they ought to rejoice and not weep, because she would soon exchange a life of suffering for one of everlasting enjoyment—exhorting them and the neighbors present, individually, to meet her in Heaven. She seemed to have had a presentiment that she would die at 4 o'clock. On the day of her death, and while looking at the clock about 1 o'clock, she remarked that it was a long time until 4 o'clock. Shortly before which hour, placing herself in a proper position, and arranging her hands upon her breast, she soon afterwards (and as she had expected at that hour) quietly and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus; realizing indeed that

Feel soft as downy pillows are"

So far seven or eight Americans are reported to have been killed, and fifty or sixty wounded. An Irish company known as the "Shields Guards" is out in full force, shooting down the Americans in the streets. The excitement is tremendous and extends to this city.

ARRIVAL OF THE NIAGARA.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

Liverpool Markets.

Liverpool, May 24.—Holders have been pressing in the market during the past week, and the sales, since the departure of the Asia, embrace 41,000 bales, of which 2000 have been taken for speculation, and 5000 for export. Prices according to the circular of Messrs. Milligan, Evans & Co., have declined about ¼d., and they quote as follows: Fair Orleans 6¼c., Middling 5½c., Fair Uplands 6¼c., and Middling Orleans 5d. Other circulars quote the rates as nominal, and others again make the decline ¼ to ½d., the principal deduction being on the Middling and lower grades.

The market for Breadstuffs has been dull and drooping. Dennistoun & Co. say the market opened at the beginning of the week with a good demand, but prices fell off toward the close, though the demand continued fair. They quote Flour as having declined 1s. per barrel, closing at 38s. 6d. for Western Canal and 40s. 3d. per barrel for Ohio.

The same house reports that Corn had advanced 6d per quarter, with a fair demand and quote yellow and mixed at 42s, and white at 42s 6d per quarter, the demand being fair from the trade and holders firm at these rates at the close. Other circulars, however, quote white at 40s to 41s per quarter.

Gardner & Co. report the Pork market firm, while Lard has declined 8s. per cwt.

Money Market.

The Money market at London has been more stringent, but the rates for Consols have advanced.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARCTIC.

Four Days Later from Europe.

New York, June 7.—The Collins steamer Arctic has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 31st May, being four days later than the accounts brought by the Niagara. The following summary of her news embraces the only items of special interest.

The Greek Bishop had arrived at Pesth as a Russian emissary. Important papers were were found on him. [We give this as it came over the wires, without attempting to explain its meaning. Eds.]

The rebellion in Thessaly continued to make headway.

It was rumored that the Russians had found themselves unable to defend the seaboard and had evacuated their positions on the Caucasus, but afterwards returned to an important post, where they were attacked by the Circnsians, with the loss of 1500 men taken prisoners.

The Castle of Gustafschun had been destroyed, and 1500 men made prisoners.

[From some cause, which we do not understand, we have failed to receive our usual dispatch of the commercial news by the Arctic.—Eds.]

Philadelphia Election.

Philadelphia, June 7.—The first municipal election since the consolidation of the city took place yesterday, and resulted in favor of the Whigs and Know-Nothings, which two parties have acted together. Conrad, the Whig candidate for Mayor, has been elected by a majority of about 8500 votes, and the other Whig candidates on the charter ticket have similar majorities. The returns so far show 19 Whigs and 3 Democrats and Reformers elected to the Select Board, and 43 Whigs, 11 Democrats and 3 Reformers to the Common Council.

The Indiana State Sentinel gives, from reliable data, the population of the principal cities and towns of Indiana. In this statement New Albany is set down as containing a population of 17,000; Indianapolis 16,100; Madison 14,000; Evansville 10,000; Lafayette 9,000.

Details of the News by the Asia.

The mail steamer Asia, from Liverpool, afternoon of Saturday, 20th, arrived at New York about 5½ o'clock on the afternoon of the 1st inst.

The United States mail steamer Arctic sailed from Liverpool at half past 1 o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday, 17th, with 120 passengers, a full cargo, and the usual mails. When about ten miles west of Tuskar light, she struck upon a sunken wreck or rock, and was found to be sinking water. Capt. Luce immediately put about, and telegraphed to the shore. The information was at once sent forward to Liverpool. The steam-tug Dreadnaught was dispatched to meet the Arctic returning off Point Lynas, and accompanied her back to the Mersey. About twenty of her passengers got on board the Dreadnaught, but the rest, having every confidence in the noble ship, remained on board. The Arctic arrived in the river at 3 o'clock on Friday morning, and was taken into dock. Her machinery is but slightly injured. Such of the passengers as could procure berths have come on in the Asia, but the majority will await the Arctic's return. Her mails are forwarded by the Asia.

Another absurd story about the wreck of the City of Glasgow, and the carrying of her passengers to the coast of Africa, had been ascertained to be a pure fabrication.

The steamship Sarah Sands, from Portland, Me., arrived at Liverpool on Friday, the 19th. On the 8th and 9th, in lat. 44:52, lon. 48:58, fell in with large quantities of ice; was detained 24 hours, but received no injury.

The steamer Unicorn was spoken 3 P. M. of Friday, 19th, six miles east of Eddystone, all well, and has, no doubt, since arrived at Southampton, though not telegraphed.

Intelligence from the Falkland Islands states that the United States corvette Germantown had demanded from Her British Majesty's brig Express some prisoners who had been detained for trespassing on British fishing grounds. The captain of the Express refused, when the captain of the Germantown wrote an imperious demand for them, threatening, if it was not complied with, he would fire in the Express, and he beat to quarters and run his guns out. The captain of the Express, however, maintained his position, and delivered up the prisoners to the civil authorities, by whom they were fined. The affair is stated to have occasioned some acrid correspondence between the United States and British authorities, which had been forwarded to the respective Governments.

A decree in the Madrid Gazette authorizes the firm of Zangroniz & Co. to establish a line of eight steamers between Havana and Havre or Liverpool, or any other ports of France and England.

The following summary of news was, in part, prepared by our Liverpool correspondent for the steamer Arctic.

Austria is reported to have sent her ultimatum to Russia. Prussia's position is unchanged.

Spain refuses to meet Mr. Soulé's demand, but will remit the fine of $6000, levied on the owners of the Black Warrior.

Via Trieste, it is stated that the British and French ministers left Athens May 3.

Greece will be occupied by 15,000 Anglo-French and is blockaded by the fleet.

The war news, by the Asia, is interesting, and the next will be more so if France and England, as reported, intend to invade Russia.

The number of Greeks expelled from Constantinople, during the month of April, was 14,000, and 2000 had become Ottoman subjects, to escape the operation of the decree.

A great fire had occurred at Constantinople; nearly 1000 wooden houses were destroyed.

It is announced that on the 7th January the French took possession of the Isles of Pines.

Prussia is reported to have ordered a levy of 100,000 men.

One hundred thousand men are to be encamped in the Pas de Calais, namely: 60,000 around Boulogne in four camps, 25,000 at Hellaut and St. Omer, and the cavalry in the villages nearest to the sea-coast. The destination of this force is unknown to the public.

A steam gun-boat, named the Jasper, on the way to join Napier's fleet, blew up at Beachy Head. The crew, thirty-three in number, escaped in the boats, and were picked up at sea by a Liverpool ship.

On the 12th, the British Baltic fleet took possession of Boomersund, on the Island of Aland.

Capt. Barclay, of Ury, a celebrated sporting character in his day, and the inventor of walking one thousand miles in one thousand hours, died at his residence at Ury, Scotland, 8th inst., aged 75.

The War.

A dispatch from Constantinople, dated the 10th, announces that the outer works of Sebastopol has been cannonaded by the French and English fleets, with guns of long range, with a view to destroy the advanced works of the place, previous to a general attack. The Russians retire from the exposed forts.

Dispatches have been received at Vienna, from the head-quarters of Omar Pasha, giving a favorable account of the recent operations of his forces on more than one point of his position.

The Russian corps which was known to have been collected at Turnu, near the mouth of the Aluta, is stated to have been repulsed on the 28th of April, with a loss of 1500 men, by the Turks quartered at Nicopolis under Sali Pacha.

On the 2d of May another Russian detachment was beaten at Radova, not far from Krajevo. There is every reason to believe these reports to be accurate and authentic.

It was further reported that the Russians had received a severe check at Silistria, but the news requires confirmation.

From Kalafat, an engagement is reported between six squadrons of Cossacks and five of Turkish Hussars, near Radasn, on the 4th of May. The Cossacks were defeated, and lost 60 horses, 2 guns, and 130 men killed.

Twenty-two merchant ships have been captured since the bombardment of Odessa.

The Turkish fleet had entered the Black Sea. Ferik Ahmet Pacha is in command, and Hassan Pacha (Egyptian) second. The fleet had on board 5000 men, 50,000 stand of arms, and 200 cannon; also, money and stores for disembarkation at Abasia.

Mushaver Pacha (Capt. Slade,) was on board as Vice Admiral. Sefer Pacha, the celebrated Circassian chief, accompanied by forty officers, among them Major de Georgis, of the Sardinian Rifles, accompanied the expedition. The fleet numbered 24 sail, carrying 1030 guns, and was to bombard Redout, Kaleh, Soukhum, Kaleh, and Anapa; also to disembark a land force under Selar Pache, to effect a junction with the Circassians.

Five Turkish, one English, and two French ships-of-war were cruising off Prevesa. Three Greco-Russian ships in the port of Santa Croce, near Ragusa, were watched by a French frigate.

Joseph Varady and Franz Bartalis, agents of Kossuth, were hanged at St. George, in Transylvania, on the 27th ult. Two of their associates were sentenced to 18 years imprisonment.

Eighteen thousand Russians have been put hors du combat by fever since the occupation of the Dobradsche.

El Hamee Pashe, 17 years of age, son of the Viceroy Abbas Pasha of Egypt, left Alexandria for Constantinople on the 4th, in the steam yacht Faid Gahaad, on a State visit to the Sultan, and the Sultan's daughter, his bride. In consequence of the tightness of money the young bridegroom could only scrape together about $500,000 as a present to his father-in-law, which sum, being considerably less than expected, makes it doubtful if his reception will be very cordial.

The trial of the Wards for the murder of Butler has been copied into the principal newspapers of Europe, giving but a mean opinion of American law and justice. The worst of it is that the whole country, instead of the guilty section, shares in the disgrace.

The Baltic.

From St. Petersburg, 9th, letters state that the British fleet had been seen within twenty-five miles of Cronstadt, and had captured a number of gun-boats.

A Stettin letter of the 15th mentions that the Russian fleet had left Helsingfors, in order to join the division lying at Cronstadt. It was the object of Charles Napier to prevent this junction.

Advices from St. Petersburg are to the 8th. One American and two Russian ships had arrived at Cronstadt, and the navigation, therefore, must have been completely open. Ships were being laden at Odessa, and several have been sent to the Sea of Azoff, where cargoes were awaiting. At Riga, also, a large fleet was taken in readiness, and at Archangel a number of ships were expected.

Asia.

The forts Novorossik and Gelendjik, on the Circassian coast, have been evacuated by the Russians. Soochaim Kaleh was also deserted.

An English officer had been sent on a special mission to Schamyl.

A troop ship with horses had been attacked by Greek pirates.

The British steam frigate Tiger, 16 guns and 200 men, went ashore near Odessa, and was taken and burned by the Russians. The crew made a gallant resistance. Capt. Giffard, in command, was wounded.

Minor Incidents.

Namik Pashn is appointed Turkish Minister at Paris, and Mashun Pasha his successor as Minister of Commerce. Vely Pasha is made Governor of Candia.

The Kreutz Zeitung contains the following from Constantinople, May 1:

An Algerian frigate is said to have passed the Dardanelles, laden with eleven steam engines for Russia. In the Black Sea she hoisted the English colors and got close toward Sebastopol, when she ran up the American flag and got safely with her cargo into port. It was reported that the frigate was ordered in America for Russia, to which both ship and cargo belong.

It was reported that the French Government had received from Prussia a note of explanation which had given great satisfaction, but its exact tenor had not transpired. This note pressed on the way an energetic note from France.

The overtures of Russia for a commercial alliance with Prussia have completely failed.

Hanover, Wurtemberg and Bavaria have sent in their adherence to the Austrio-Prussian treaty.

Britain.

In the House of Commons, on Tuesday evening, the 16th ultimo, Milner Gibson called attention to the present state of the laws of the press, and moved a resolution to the effect that the laws in reference to the periodical press and newspaper stamp are ill-defined and unequally enforced, and demand the early consideration of Parliament. Mr. Kinnaird seconded the motion, which, after some debate, was agreed to. Mr. Bruce, as usual, took the ground that the restrictive laws which fetter intelligence should be altogether repealed, as their sole effect is to keep the people ignorant and brutal. Mr Bright, in course of remarks, made the humiliating statement that there are seventy-five boroughs in Britain returning members to Parliament, in not one of which is a newspaper published. One of London there is but one daily paper published in the whole of England. He drew a contrast between the circulation of newspapers in the United States and in Britain, and laid before the House a copy of the London Times, price 5d sterling, retail price in England equal to 12½ cents; the Melbourne Argus, price 3 cents, and the New York Tribune, price 2 cents.

Mr. Hume has called for "a copy of the existing postal engagements agreed to between the United States and England, and of the correspondence for a modification of the terms of the present agreements." This debate on the nomination of the Committee on Government Inspection of Nunneries, which was adjourned from 3d May, was resumed, and after a long debate, the order of the Committee was discharged.

The Queen has approved Augustus W. Soloett as Consul at Falmouth for the United States of America.

By letters from India, via Marseilles, we have reports of the total loss of the American clipper Oriental on the 25th of February, in the river Min, for New York, with a full cargo of tea. The Oriental was in the act of dropping down the river, when she came in contact with sunken rocks, and, before assistance could be procured, sunk in twenty fathoms water. Proposals had been made to raise her, but it was very unlikely than any such attempt would be successful.

Commissioner McLane arrived at Hong Kong on the 12th of March.

The Russian squadron, from Japan, arrived at Manilla on the 1st of March, and sailed on the 11th, destination not known. Nothing was said of the Japan treaty.

At Hong Kong the United States sloops Portsmouth and Vincennes were in the harbor; steamer Queen at Chuton, and ship Plymouth at Shanghai.

The militia of Great Britain were called out by proclamation of the Queen on the 15th inst., to take the place of the regular troops sent to the war.

An Impost on beer has been decided upon, and causes great excitement.

France.

The domestic news is almost a total blank.

An allowance is granted to Consuls and Ministers who have been forced by the war to return to France—50,000 francs for Embassadors, 15,000 to 40,000f. for Ministers, and 2400 to 14,000 francs for other Agents.

There is a rumor afloat that the Emperor intends to divorce Eugenia on account of the probable failure of issue.

A Constantinople letter says it is believed to be the intention of the Commander-in-Chief of the Anglo-French expedition to the East to carry the war into the heart of Russia, and to raise an insurrection in the Crimea and Circassia, as soon as Soukem Kaleh and Redoubt Kaleh, on the coast of Asia Minor, shall have been bombarded by the fleets, and to land a body of 20,000 troops near Sebastopol, which would at the same time be attacked by sea.

The inhabitants of St. Petersburg are obliged to find quarters for the troops, and there are in the environs of the city 20,000 Cossacks.

It is stated that the Russian Government has insured to the Greek Government a subversion of 1,000,000 drachmas per month.

It is also stated that the Greek Government has granted Letters of Marque to the pirates who at the present moment invest the Levant.

Spain.

The news from Spain is of an interesting cast. Six thousand men are immediately to embark in three divisions of two thousand each for Porto Rico, there to be drafted for service where wanted.

This will raise the garrison of Cuba to 30,000 of the best troops of Spain. Pulxban gave aid such like hollow were ere to be sent out in due supply, and the Spaniards think they will whip all America—easy!

Napoleon is reported to have expressed sympathy with Spain in its present dilemma—but this is doubtful. Here is the story in the very words it is told: "During a recent interview granted to a foreign diplomatic agent, then on his way to a distant mission, Louis Napoleon is said to have expressed himself very openly and earnestly upon the project of aggrandizement attributed to the Americans, and directed against the Spanish colonies. The Emperor manifested his decided disapprobation of the ambitious and encroaching spirit which has characterized the American Government. He declared that so far as his foreign policy was concerned, it should be the same in the West as in the East—his policy was based on the faithful observance of treaties, and was opposed to attempts on the part of any power to take advantage of the weakness of a neighbor, to rob it of its territory. It is even said that assurances were given that Spain has nothing to fear respecting Cuba."

Russia.

Letters from St. Petersburg, of the 7th, state that the Czar is far from enjoying good health at the present moment. The Grand Duke Alexander is living very much retired, while his brother Constantine is indefatigable in superintending naval matters in the Baltic. A large amount of attention seems to be paid to military affairs just now at St. Petersburg. Perhaps the hereditary Prince is not much pleased to see his own inheritance jeopardized for the furtherance of ambitious projects which are more particularly connected with the future of his younger brother. It was believed that General Grunwald brought back unfavorable accounts from Vienna, as important orders were immediately dispatched to the Danube.

The Latest.

A dispatch dated Vienna, May 19, states that a Government messenger had reached Galatz, in Moldavia, on the 11th inst., with reliable intelligence that the Russian stronghold, Sebastopol, on the Black Sea, had been bombarded by the allied fleets for four days.

Bucharest, May 15.—The English war steamer Tiger, of 16 guns, was stranded close to Odessa, and had to surrender to the Russians. Two other steamers went to her assistance, and bombarded the Russian works, but with little effect.

Cardinal Lambruschini died at Roma on the 11th May.

Commercial News.

Liverpool, Saturday, May 20, 2 P. M.—The Cunard steamship Arabia, from Boston on the 10th inst., was off the Bell Buoy at noon to-day, and reached her dock at 1 this P. M.

The cotton market is dull to-day, and the sales will not reach more than 5000 bales, including 1000 on speculation and for export. No change in prices.

In flour and wheat there is less doing to-day, the trade being supplied, but the full rates of yesterday are maintained. Fine descriptions of American wheat are not to be had, and would command more than the advance quoted yesterday.

Cotton.—The accounts per Asia did not alter the position of the market, which throughout the week continued dull and inanimate, and closed with almost a reduction of ⅛ per pound on American current qualities.

Breadstuffs.—At Mark Lane, on Monday, the market closed firm for English wheat, at an advance of 1s. to 2s per quarter.

On Wednesday there was an advance reported of 6d. to 1s. per pound for American flour.

Liverpool Breadstuffs.—At our Corn Exchange on Tuesday, a very active demand continued for fresh wheat, and for such, an advance of 4d. per bushel over the rates of the previous Tuesday was readily established.

Letter from New Mexico.

PROCLAMATION OF THE GOVERNOR.

By the last Western mail we received a file of the Santa Fe Gazette, to the 29th of April, from which we proceed to collate all matters of general interest.

The Gazette of the 15th notices a report that a party of Indians had attacked, some three or four days previous, the rancho of Mr. Maxwell on the Raynlds, distant about forty miles from Taos, and killed every body living in it, in all, eight women and ten men, and two or three children, not leaving a soul to bear witness to the terrible details. The Indians, it appears must have crossed the mountains immediately after their fight with Lieut. Davidson, and proceeded direct to the rancho, and finding it comparatively defenceless, they perpetrated the inhuman act recorded above.

The Indian question in New Mexico is regarded to tend, as well as in other parts of the country. The Gazette notices one case:

"At the present term of the Santa Fé court, an important question was settled, in reference to the land claims of this Territory, founded upon Mexican grants. In the case of Pino vs. Haith, the plaintiff claimed a grant of territory, several miles square, under a grant from the then Governor of New Mexico. It bore date in 1828, soon after the revolution between Mexico and old Spain, and before the former had achieved her independence. The court ruled out the evidence of the paper title, deciding that the grant, under the laws as they then existed, was not valid one. There are many other claims of this kind in the Territory, embracing the best part of the country.

WITCHCRAFT AND SORCERY.

The Gazette furnishes the evidence in a trial before the U. S. District Court for the Territory, in which four Pueblo Indians were charged with having murdered two others, accused of witchcraft and sorcery.

This case, the Gazette says, presents the most singular state of facts that could be imagined, and will be considered by our readers in the United States as something both new and strange. The offence for which the two deceased, Romera and Tafolla, were put to death was that of witchcraft and sorcery. They were shot by the defendant named in the indictment with a gun, a short distance beyond the borders of the Pueblo. Who would have imagined that the scenes of the early days of Salem would be re-enacted in the middle of the nineteenth century, and that too, among a class of people hardly one step more civilized than the savage? But our limits will not further understand [illegible] may a word or two in relation to these Indians.

They are a class of people who are supposed to have been originally wild and savage, like the other Indian tribes of the Territory, but were converted to Catholicism in the early days of the Spaniards, when they first occupied this country. They were then gathered into small villages, and so have always remained up to the present time, scattered throughout the length and breadth of the country. For all local purposes, they have been recognized as distinct communities, and are a quiet, and harmless race of people. They elect their own officers, but are not taxed, nor enjoy any of the rights nor bear any of the burdens of citizens. They retain their primitive dress of skins, and in general appearance differ but little from the wild Indians of the plains and mountains.

Such, in brief, are this singular people, who put four of their number to death for the supposed crime of witchcraft. They profess the Catholic religion, but are wretchedly ignorant and superstitious. Many have supposed them totally independent of the laws of the United States Territory, but this point, when [illegible] by the defence on the trial, was not [illegible] by the Court, which decided that all persons within the limits of the Territory, were liable to subject to the criminal laws of the country. This is an important point settled; as regards these Pueblo Indians, and henceforward they will be sensible of the fact that they cannot commit crimes without being liable to punishment. And we hope that the non-recognition by our laws of the supposed crime of sorcery and witchcraft, and that those who injure witches are liable to be punished, will have a tendency to prevent similar proceedings in the future.

The Pueblo Indians were as much frightened when they had been found guilty, and the [illegible] to the same purpose as though they had [illegible] with death or imprisonment; [illegible] to say that in future no more witches will be killed in Pueblo. Although the fact of the killing was sufficiently proved to the jury, there was no evidence that it was done in the county of Santa Fé, without which they could not find them guilty. The trial was conducted by [illegible] Portuguese, English, Spanish and the dialect of Nambe, and during its continuance a deep interest was manifested.

On the trial the principal witness for the Territory—Juan Ignacio Tafolla—deposed: I live in Nambe, I knew Luis Romero, he lived in this place; I also knew Antonio Tafolla, he lived in this place. They are now both dead. I know Juan Diego Tafolla, Juan Jose Trujillo, Juan Jose Tafolla, and Juan de los Reyes Mirabal. These four men came and reported to me they had killed Luis Romero and Antonio Tafolla, in accordance with the order of the Pueblo. It was done in the evening of this month. They only said that they killed them; did not see them after they killed them. They were killed not quite a league from the Pueblo in a North direction. They killed them at twilight. I saw them going out with the deceased; they had a shot gun, Juan Diego carried the gun; I saw them when they came back to report to me. They returned very soon; Luis Romera and Antonio Tafolla did not return with them. Romero and Tafolla walking along before them and were loose.

Cross-examined.—They were killed by order of the Pueblo. They were killed because the two deceased had done great damage to the Pueblo. I am the Governor of the Pueblo, and Juan Diego is the Fiscal (constable) of the Pueblo. It was the duty of the Fiscal to execute the order of the Pueblo—they commanded him to kill these two men. The had not spoken of were, that they were detected in the act of witchcraft. The deceased confessed they had been guilty of witchcraft and sorcery—they had eaten up the little children of the Pueblo. It has always been our custom to put a stop to and check bad acts. We have not exercised this custom of killing witches, since the Americans came here, because these had not been such bad doings before. We have always governed ourselves as an independent community; and Governor Calhoan said, as we were poor and ignorant, and could not [illegible] ourselves, we might govern ourselves. [illegible] I am Governor, and this act was done by the command of myself, and the whole of the Pueblo. By my order, and with the consent of all the principal men of the Pueblo, the two men were put to death. They were killed on my command.

COL. COOKE'S MOVEMENTS.

The Gazette of the 22d says:

In our last paper we gave an account of the [illegible] under the command of Col. Cooke, [illegible] in pursuit of the enemy, and of the party [illegible] prize, flight and defeat of the Indians, [illegible] we left the gallant Colonel at Ojo Caliente, [illegible] following up his advantage. Through the kindness of Gen. Garland and Maj Nichols we are able to give a few more particulars. On the 15th of this month, Col. C. and escort and arrived at the town of Abiqui, where he intended to refit, receive provisions and otherwise prepare for a determined and successful war with the Indians. Owing to the activity of Gen. Garland, and the promptness with which his orders were issued and executed, all things were in readiness at Abiquiu for the expedition, and no unnecessary delay was caused.

On the 16th the command again started, with buoyant hopes and a determined will to succeed. From this point we have heard nothing further [illegible] the manner in which every thing is being conducted, from the disposition of the various troops. From the zeal and activity manifested by both officers and men, and from the known experience and determination of our gallant General, we cannot doubt the issue for a moment, should the troops succeed in bringing them to an engagement. And when we reflect that the Indians have lost all their [illegible] equipage, and many of their animals, that [illegible] leave, [illegible] the settlements in the rear in their flight before the fleet troops, and that they will have to depend on the chase for a subsistence, their condition is considered hopeless indeed.

A long wished for crisis appears to be opening in all its glory and exciting circumstances of war, between the Indians and [illegible]—and that bloody and chastisement [illegible] are about to be given them by [illegible] not spare the red. It is some [illegible] they have had to deal with [illegible] as Gen. Garland, and his prompt [illegible] will already stricken contemplation and terror in their ranks, and they quail beneath his mandates. The rapid movement and concentration of the troops from all parts of the Territory has revealed to them the fact that the Indians, and entertains sanguine hopes of success. One party of foot are to make the attack, the other party of horse are to cut off their retreat. The Indians are completely cornered, and success seems certain.

LATE FROM CALIFORNIA.

From San Francisco we have news by the Golden Gate up to the evening of the 10th ult. Col. Walker and his small band, consisting of thirty-three men, had arrived at San Francisco, having cut their way through the Mexican forces to the boundary line of the United States, and there gave themselves up to Major McKenstry. Walker and his party are now in San Francisco, relieved on their parole of honor, awaiting the action of the civil authorities.

A most destructive fire occurred on the 10th ult., in the city of Yreka, by which property to the amount of $150,000 was destroyed.

The Golden Gate on her run down to Panama put into Acapulco for her usual supply of coal and provisions. All that could be learned about Santa Anna and his opponent, Gen. Alvarez, was to effect that 800 of Santa Anna's men had deserted him, and Alvarez taking advantage of the former's weakness took 300 prisoners, and it was said continued his pursuit of Santa Anna towards the city of Mexico, whither he had gone for reinforcements.

From Lima we have news up to the 11th of May. The Peruvian transport Mercedie, bound from Casina, to Callio, with eight hundred troops on board, struck a rock near the mouth of Casina harbor, and went down almost immediately, drowning the Captain (Noel) and seven hundred and thirty-one of his countrymen. The Government steamer Ranzo rendered every possible assistance, but without effect.

By the way of Lima we have news from Callio up to the 8th ult. A murder was committed upon the person of a man said to be connected with the revolutionary movement, and who, at the time, was under the protection of the French Consul. While standing at the door of the latter, he was dragged into the street and shot. The French Minister lowered his flag immediately, and returned on board the frigate La Forte in Callo harbor.

From the San Francisco Chronicle of the 10th ult. we extract the following intelligence:

The total disbanding of the Lower California filibusters, should be regarded as the most important event of the past fortnight. Walker and the remnants of his party arrived in this city last evening, having surrendered themselves prisoners to the United States authorities. The particulars will be found fully detailed below.

The gold mines continue to yield abundantly, and the recent exports exhibit an increase over the corresponding month in 1853.

The discovery of gold in the coast range of mountains, east of San Jose Valley, has produced great excitement in Santa Clary county. The number of persons at the diggings has been estimated at 800, and the average yield at eight dollars a day.

A thirty-pound "nugget" was found at Volcito on the 6th inst.

We have news from the Sandwich Islands to April 23d. The population of the Islands is decreasing at a fearful rate. The census just taken shows that the decrease last year was 6513. Between five and six thousand of the native population were swept away by the small pox.

About a thousand Chinese emigrants have arrived at this port within the fortnight, and information is received that nearly six thousand more are on the way here.

A difficulty on board the steamar America, a few days since, caused the arrest of all concerned—owners, agents and masters. The matter will be investigated in the U. S. District Court.

The fifth Legislature of California has adjourned sine die. A bill providing for the election of a State Printer in the year 1855 has become a law. In the meantime Mr. B. B. Redding, of the Democratic State Journal, has been elected the State Printer.

In an affray in a gambling house in Los Angeles, April 30, a man named Franklin Daun was killed, and three Californians wounded. All the parties engaged in the affray were gamblers.

There have been a number of squatter disturbances recently, in one of which W. T. Foreman was shot and killed, on his own rancho, in Placer county. The house of Mr. Meres, on the Pulgas Rancho, was set fire to and burned, together with its furniture and contents. Capt. Alonzo Coy was also ill-treated, in a most shameful manner, by a gang of men living near the Pulgas.

Lieut. Beale, the Superintendent of Indian Affairs in this State, arrived on the steamer Oregon last week, from a hasty trip to the Eastern States. He will proceed in a few days to the Southern Reservation.

Our dates from Oregon are to May 5th, but the news is almost entirely devoid of interest. Some Indian skirmishing is mentioned, and the Indian Superintendent, has gone south to quiet them.

The Legislature of Washington Territory has been discussing the Maine Liquor Law. A prohibitory law (to take effect when approved by the people) has passed the Council, and will probably pass the House.

The Governor states, in a message to the Legislature, that the public lands appropriated, to educational purposes in California amount to more than seven and a half millions of acres.

The site selected in this city for a Custom-house has been appraised at $300,000, and the State offers it to the Federal Government at half price, $150,000.

Black truffles have been found in Santa Cruz county, and it is supposed that they are abundant.

Silas E. Burrows, a wealthy citizen, and formerly a prominent merchant of New York, sailed from San Francisco on the 11th ult., in the clipper Lady Pierce, for Japan, on a peaceable mission to the Emperor. The Lady Pierce, formerly the Race Horse, is a fine clipper of 500 tons, and the inside works are very elegant. Mr. Burrows took with him a quantity of fine goods for presents, and declared his intention to present his vessel to the Emperor, if he was well received and permitted to remain. The vessel took no goods except stores and presents, and no passengers except Mr. Burrows and his son.

Avery, the young man from Springfield, Mass., who murdered Susanna Rensell on the Yankee Blade, has been examined and committed. From the course taken by his attorneys, it is likely that his defence will be insanity.

It was asserted that a vessel now in the harbor of San Francisco is being fitted up to act as a privateer under the Russian flag as soon as the final declaration of war shall have reached here.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.—The Snohomish Indians hung two of their tribe at Seattle on the 27th of April, for murdering a white man last summer.

Olympia, at the head of Puget Sound, is said to be improving rapidly, and to have bright prospects for the future.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.—We have dates from Honolulu to the 22d of April.

A great many petitions have been sent into Parliament against annexation to the United States, so that there is no doubt about the present feelings of the Kannkas on that subject. It is said that they have been told that Annexation would bring on them the fate which has befallen the red men in the Mississippi valley, and therefore fear the supremacy of the Americans.

During 1853, 12,000 acres of public land were sold for $15,000.

TAHITI.—We have dates to the 20th of April.

A meeting among the passengers and crew of the American ship Auckland, in the harbor of Papeete, was suppressed by the police.

The natives on the island of Huebine had been at war; had a battle, and left 7 killed and 20 wounded.

HIGHLY INTERESTING FROM BOGOTA.—General Herrera is invested with the Executive Power.

Obando still continues prisoner, together with the Secretaries of State.

The Vice-President, Obaldia, had taken refuge in the American Minister's house.

Various rencontres had taken place between Melo and Herrera's forces.

General Herera is occupied in Tunje, incorporating some 1500 armed men, with the Governors of Velez and Socorro at their head, to operate with him (Herrera.)

General Melo, by order of Herrera, has been decreed broken in the army.

The constitutional party, as they title themselves, seem very sanguine as to their ultimate success.

The city of Honda was captured by a constitutional party of 300 citizens, partisans of Herrera. The troops, to the amount of 70, who occupied the place in favor of Melo, retired on their approach, contenting themselves with only firing a few shots.

Melo had left Bogota, with 600 cavalry and all his artillery, to give battle to Herrera and Frenoo, who are in Cipaquira.

FROM THE SOUTH PACIFIC.

CHILI.—The editor of the Mercurio at Valparaiso has been arrested for sending a challenge to Senor Pardo, the Peruvian Minister.

The American bark Emily Taylor, which sailed on the 20th of March for New Bedford direct, with 5000 barrels of oil, was not many days at sea when symptome of mutiny broke out, and shortly afterwards the captain discovered an auger hole bored in the ship's side, nearly opposite the inboard main swifter, about two feet below the water line. He immediately returned to port, and with assistance from the U. S. storeship Fredonie, placed the crew in irons, until the matter was investigated by the U. S. Consul, which ended in two of the crew being allowed to return to duty and the rest confined in irons, until they could be sent to the United States for trial.

PERU.—The Austrian miners who have been attracted to Peru by the report of the gold mines, found themselves very much deceived. The Peruvian Government give them no encouragement, and dread their entrance into the interior.

A decree was lately passed prohibiting them from carrying arms into the interior, but, by the exertions of the United States Minister, it has been modified as far as regards United States citizens.

The French ship of-war L'Obligado arrived at Lima on the 1st of May, from Central America.

The Russian frigate Aurora sailed on the 26th of April on a cruise.

H. B. M.'s frigate President arrived from the Island of San Lorenzo on the 9th.

The Russian ship of "Eagle of Prussia" had arrived at Callao, April 23, from the Chinchas, with a cargo of guano.

From the Plains.

[From the St Louis Evening News, 31st ult.]

S. M. Blair, Esq., U. S. District Attorney for Utah, and J Ferguson, Territorial Attorney, together with Rev. Messrs. Audrows, Dunbar, Wheelock, and others, missionaries, arrived in our city this morning by the Sam Cloon, direct from Salt Lake, and from them we derive the following intelligence, which we present to our readers:

The party left Salt Lake on the 1st of May, making the trip to St. Louis in one month, having arrived at Fort Leavenworth on the 24th inst., with the mail. Their accounts from the emigrants crossing the Plains is quite favorable, general good health prevailing, with few or no cases of sickness, and an abundance of food. They met the first trains near the Crossing of the Platte, on the 12th. From the number of trains they counted, and facts gathered by observation and conversation with the emigrants, they estimate that the emigration this season will be about two-thirds of what it was last. They saw no buffalo on the route. All the Indians they met were perfectly friendly, giving them no trouble, and evincing no hostility, and the tribes on the Plains are generally reported as peaceable.

At Salt Lake, the best health was prevailing at the date of their departure, prospects for bountiful crops flattering, and vegetation unusually forward—cucumbers and radishes of edible dimensions being generally procurable in the Valley on the first of May.

They met many merchant trains on the Plains en route for Salt Lake, from which fact is inferred that goods will be abundant after their arrival, though there was a great scarcity at the time of departure of the party. Money is reported to be plentiful at Salt Lake City, and from this fact, in connection with the present scarcity of goods, it is reasonable to infer that the transportation of merchandise to the Valley this season will prove a highly lucrative speculation.

Maj. E. A. Bredell, Indian agent for Utah, died at Green River on the 5th, on his way home. Capt Morris, the commander of the military escort of Gunnison's party, was on the eve of departure for California. The party had made several surveys, the report of which is highly favorable to the route, whose practicability is now established beyond dispute.

PROFESSOR WEISS'S GREAT HISTORY OF THE FRENCH PROTESTANT REFUGEES.—(Dispersion of the Huguenots)—WITH AN AMERICAN APPENDIX. In Two Volumes, 12mo Price $2 50.

This profoundly entertaining and instructive work has created an impression more deep and lasting than any other production of modern times. The universal welcome with which it has been received by all classes, must hereafter place its able author with the most favored historians, D'Aubigne and Macaulay. The press in heralding its great fame, have predicted for it a popularity equal to that of "The History of the Reformation," to which "in spirit and treatment, it bears such strong resemblance." These are no dramas in the world's history of more thrilling interest than this intensely absorbing narrative of the fortunes of these noble Huguenot sufferers in the cause of religious freedom. Their influence upon agriculture, commerce, manufactures, literature, morals and religion, in the various countries of England, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Russia and America, to which they fled, is traced in a perspicuous and masterly manner. Of how important a part they took who remain this country, no American needs to be reminded to conjecture the value of such a record. The work is treated with a fullness of historical research, from materials collected during twenty years of industry; and is written in a graphic style in which makes it a production of equal interest and value to the student of history and the general reader. The author treats the subject in a purely historical aspect, is candid, learned, impartial, and the story is sustained with an ability and vivacity, which excite in the mind the irresistible impression of romance. The period relates to one of the most stirring and touching segments of the whole circle of French history. The record is taken up where it was left by Ranke and Bedrmond, supplies the links in the grand historic chain that connects the past with the present, and binds the oceturies into one harmonious whole; and thus has been supplied the long marked deficiency in the annals of both Europe and America. Eulogies have been pronounced on this rare history by the highest ecclesiastic authorities, as one of the most valuable contributions that has been made during this century, and one that must wield a more important influence on the public mind than any previous work. The costliest talent was engaged to translate the work. An able American Appendix has been added, which much enhances its value to the American reader; and no pains have been spared to give the volumes every attraction. In the frontispiece is an accurate Portrait of the cruel Pope Pius V, and a fac-simile of the execrable medal struck by Gregory XIII, to celebrate the frightful massacre of St. Bartholomew.

Hundreds of testimonials from eminent clergymen and laymen of every denomination, distinguished scholars, presidents of colleges, professors of history, and illustrious authors and statesmen have been received, eulogizing and commending this pre-eminently popular history in the most emphatic terms. Among the names of illustrious foreigners are: D'Aubigne, Guizot, Miguet, Villemain—Merle—Alison—Macaulay—and Hallam. Among the eminent American Divines are the Reverend Doctors Cheever—Potts—Spring—DeWitt—Knox, of N. Y.; Bethune, Brooklyn; Sprague, Albany; Murray, N. J.; Boardman—Berg—Dewling, author of "History of Romanism," Phil; Johns—Henry, Baltimore; Stow, Boston; Bacon, New Haven; Murdock, Hartford; Perry, Cleveland; Moore, Richmond; Gibson, Petersburg; Hawkins, Cuttbert, Charleston; Dwight, Portland, in British America. CHERRY PECTORAL,
COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS,
BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING COUGH,
CROUP, ASTHMA AND CONSUMPTION.

FOR CROUP, give an emetic of antimony, to be followed by large and frequent doses of the CHERRY PECTORAL, until it subdues the disease. If taken in season, it will not fail to cure.

WHOOPING COUGH may be broken up and soon cured by the use of CHERRY PECTORAL.

THE INFLUENZA is speedily removed by this remedy. Numerous instances have been noticed where whole families were protected from any serious consequences while their neighbors, without the CHERRY PECTORAL were suffering from the disease.

SALEM, Ohio, 11th June, 1851.

Doct. J. C. AYER:

I write to inform you of the truly remarkable effects of your CHERRY PECTORAL in this place, and in my own family. One of my daughters was completely cured in three days of a dreadful Whooping Cough by taking it. Dr Means, one of our very best Physicians, freely states that he considers it the best remedy we have for pulmonary diseases, and that he has cured more cases of Croup with it than any other medicine he ever administered.

Our clergyman of the Baptist Church says that during the run of Influenza here this season, he has seen cures from your medicine he could scarcely have believed without seeing.

Yours respectfully,
J. D. SINCLAIR, Deputy Postmaster

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

I have found the CHERRY PECTORAL, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for Colds and Coughs, and Pulmonary diseases. PARKER CLEVELAND, M. D.

BRUNSWICK, Me., Feb. 5, 1847.

DR VALENTINE MOTT,
The widely celebrated Professor of Surgery in the Medical College, New York City, says:

"It gives me pleasure to certify the value and efficacy of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which I consider peculiarly adapted to cure diseases of the Throat and Lungs."

Cures of severe diseases upon the Lungs have been effected by CHERRY PECTORAL in such extreme cases as warrant the belief that a remedy has at length been found that can be depended on to cure the Coughs, Colds and Consumption which carry from our midst thousands every year. It is indeed a medicine to which the afflicted can look with confidence for relief, and they should not fail to avail themselves of it.

UNIVERSALISM DEFINED.

MR. EDITOR—Believing as we do that modern Universalism is the worst feature of Infidelity with which we have any thing to do, and that it is fraught with more danger to its believers and supporters than most other features of Infidelity, we have thought that it would not be amiss to examine and expose some of its dangerous principles through the columns of the Advocate. First. The doctrine that man is to be saved without contrition, repentance, and faith, is one filled with great danger to those who receive it. 1. Because it tends to make them dwell in seeming safety in an unregenerate state; whereas the Bible teaches "Ye must be born again." What would be the necessity of the new birth if all mankind were to be saved irrespective of conditions? For if the conditions of repentance and faith are not essential to the new birth, neither is the new birth essential as a condition to final salvation; for the necessity of both are taught by the same authority. But that man is to be saved on certain conditions, is a doctrine clearly set forth in the Scriptures in plain terms; conditions, too, to be exercised according to man's own will and choice. St. Peter teaches those who wish salvation in Christ to "Repent and be baptised every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Here are conditions recommended as expressive of the desire, and without which the gift of the Holy Ghost is not promised. We consider it useless to multiply evidence from the Scriptures, for every Bible reader is aware that its pages are filled with such evidence from beginning to end.

2. Again, this doctrine destroys the moral agency of man, and makes him a mere machine without any will or choice of his own. For if salvation is given through Christ without any conditions, to be exercised or rejected at will, then man is saved by compulsion, whether he believes in Christ or not; and thus his free agency is entirely taken from him, and he unable to do good or bad. Yea, he is taken to heaven though a disbeliever. And what glory think you could be given to Christ by one thus denying His being, though forcibly taken to Heaven? Or could the Son present such to the Father as having "washed their robes end made them whits in the blood of the Lamb?" (This was the condition of all those that St. John saw in the Revelation going into life.) Can he present such without spot or blemish—those who have denied him just as much through life as the Roman soldiers did under the cross. What an absurdity, if not a profanity, to make such presumptions on the character of the Divine Lord and Seviour. And are the individuals who maintain that Christ will take them sins and all (unregenerated) to heaven, in a better condition or on safer ground? We think not, if the Scriptures be true.

3. And again, the doctrine that man is to be saved without the concurrence of his own will and conditions expressive thereof, places him in a far better state than that from which he fell. It is true, man in his first estate was happy, peaceful and wise, filled with all the comforts that was natural to arise in a creature perfect in its nature; but what was all this when the fact that man was a probationer, was asserted, and that his future happiness and life depended on certain conditions, compared with what he enjoys now? For if he is saved new without conditions, or if he is forced to use them, he is no longer a probationer, but is now in a state of final and everlasting salvation. Thus man would be a very great gainer by doing that which God told him he should die for; and if this dreadful error ware established as a fact, would it not be best to try, if possible, to hurst ever the bands of God's command again, that we may gain something more by transgression? Who knews but God would take us all to heaven for it at once, seeing we gained so much by the first transgression? Such are the erroneous doctrines held by Universalists when unmasked of their subtlety.

Second. 1. The doctrine that maintains that sin is unremitable, and that all men are punished in this life, or purgatory, according to the magnitude of their crimes, and after which they will be delivered, sets Christ the Saviour entirely out of the question; which infidelity unmasked and in its proper light. "It is finished," were the words of our blessed Saviour on the cross—man's redemption and salvation were finished there upon the condition of His own will. But this doctrine declares that man has to commence and finish his own salvation, in maintaining that sin is unremitable. If man has to suffer the punishment due to his sins, under all circumstances, how can it be said that Jesus will save his people from their sins? In what does this salvation consist—in man's suffering the death of Christ? If in man's suffering, then what avails the death of Christ, if it does not release the penitent from the curse of the broken law and place him on grounds of reconciliation with the Father.

2. Christ suffered for the sins of the whole world, and, consequently, believers in Christ will not have to suffer again for that which he has suffered for. Otherwise it could not have been said that man's redemption was finished, completed. They who are born again, receive the Spirit of God; and so long as they obey the Son, his Spirit dwelleth in them; than if they suffer for their sins, and God has not remitted them, the Spirit of God suffers in them, and Christ is crucified afresh: and if this be the case, what was gained by the first crucifixion?

3. That man must suffer the punishment due to his crimes under all circumstances, is an assumption that makes him his own redeemer, and so he has no use for any other; for we can not think that God requires a double payment of the debt—once by himself, and then by man. Thus the complicated system of error, termed "Universalism," commences by maintaining that all men are saved through Christ, continues by setting him entirely out of the matter, and ends by maintaining that there is no place of future punishment; and, consequently, there is no need of redemption in the matter at all, either by God or man, seeing there is no danger of going to a place that has no existence. And what is the use of our denying ourselves, if it will not through the mercy of God change our relationship in a future state? Why not gratify the whole evil propensity of our sinful natures? Such are the errors into which many have fallen. But it can not endure long. Truth is powerful, and will prevail.

Bible and Tract Colporteurs vs. the Texian Ministry.

RHO. McTYEIRE:—I saw an article recently in the Southwestern Baptist, written by some one in Houston, ostensibly in praise of the rapidly improving condition of the morals of the people in Texas. As this said article is rather a singular production, although in keeping with the yawntings we sometimes hear from certain quarters, I propose by your leave to bestow upon it a passing notice. Referring to the fact that the "public taste rejects" the current light literature, and demands for its reading good books, the writer adds: "And how was the public taste of Texas purified? For many years the agents and colporteurs of the American Bible and Tract Societies, and the American Sunday School Union, supplied to a considerable extent, gratuitously, the reading of the country, and the bushel being thus filled with wheat, the tares may be thus poured on with impunity."

Now I wish to know if a stranger reading this could come to any other conclusion than that we in Texas are indebted for our present purified state entirely to the agents of the Societies above named? Such, to me, seems to be the inevitable inference. Without saying a word to the disparagement of these Societies, or of the pious gentlemen by whom they have been represented, let us briefly look the matter in the face.

For the last seventeen years the Methodist Itinerants have been laboring in Texas; during the greater part of which time their network of stations and circuits has embraced almost every county in the State. At the present this body exceeds one hundred men, and it is their business to endeavor to purify the public taste by preaching a pure Gospel, and in connection therewith, to supply the people with good books. Will any one pretend to say that the labor of these Itinerants, with the assistance of twice their number of local ministers, has had no agency in effecting the blessing said to exist among us?

Then there are the clergy of other Churches, the Baptists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians, some of whom in considerable force have occupied the country for years, and with zeal and distinguished success battled against impurity and sin. Are they to be left out of the account in enumerating the agencies and results of efforts to improve the moral tone of public sentiment?

What the agents of these Societies have done in their department, I presume not to say. I suppose them to have been faithful to their trust, and to have labored to the utmost of their ability. All I wish to show is, that the agencies claimed to have wrought such wonders, bear quite an insignificant relation in numerical force to the whole strength of the corps engaged in the great work of purifying the public tastes.

It has fallen to my lot to be a resident of Texas for the last nineteen years, in which time I have traveled from Red River to the Rio Grande, and from the Gulf of Mexico to the Cross-timbers, and to the best of my recollection, in all that period I have met with but three Bible agents, colporteurs of the American Tract Society, and one agent of the American S. School Union. I do not say there never were more, but in my extensive travels and long residence, these are all I have fallen in with. So, Mr. Editor, you and your readers may judge from a comparison of this force with the other agencies at work, how much these agents are entitled to the credit so freely lavished upon them by our unknown writer in the "Southwestern Baptist."

Perhaps it was unnecessary to notice this affair; but I felt it due to the people of our State, and the Church of which I am an humble member, that our friends abroad should know that we have a ministry in Texas, and that we are not entirely dependant upon a few agents of benevolent societies for our moral and spiritual blessings.

Texas, May 8, 1854. DANIEL.

PERSONALITY AN AWFUL GIFT.—The short verse, "every man shall bear his own burden," opens to our consideration one of the deepest principles of our being. It singles us out from the multitude around us. It sets us alone with our own spiritual and moral character, as we have fashioned it, and reminds us that we must bear for ourselves that burden. It bids us remember that great truth which the world is ever seeking to hide from us, that we are each of us one; that we have that in us which does truly separate us from every other beside; that we are in reality alone. There is something awful in the truth, in whatever light we look at it. Though this is, indeed, our greatness—though it is in this, in a great measure, that our likeness to God consists, yet it is an awful thought. Our very greatness is appalling to us—but we can not shake it off. We may, indeed, strive in our shrinking weakness to break in upon the stillness of our solitary being by crowding others around us, but we can not. We may forget our loneliness for a season in the whirl of pleasure, or the fever of excitement, or the warm gushes of a lovely sympathy; but in all the pauses of outward things, the solemn voice comes back again upon the ear; the multitude of shadows fade into nothingness; and the great vision of our single, proper, solitary being, again overshadows our spirits. We have each one this burden of a separate soul, and we must bear it. Even ordinary life utters voices which add their voices to this truth, if we listen for them. How do all deep-thinking people, in the inmost current of their spirits, live apart from others, and, more or less, even feel that they do so.

PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

MR. EDITOR—Knowing you to be an anti-liquor man, I thought it probably would meet with your approbation to publish an article occasionally upon that important question. My reasons for seeking to promulgate my views through the medium of the Advocate, are these: The Advocate, I believe, has a more general circulation than any Temperance paper or periodical; and as an additional reason, its circulation is confined, principally, to that class of persons whose efforts I wish to engage in behalf of the Temperance cause, namely, Methodists. What! are you going to write at this late day to arouse your Methodist brethren to duty on this question! Even so. Sorry am I to say, there are Methodists who not only oppose the doctrine of prohibition, but to show us the sincerity of their opposition, engage in the sale of the execrable stuff.

Charity would incline us to the opinion that these brethren are ignorant of the evil they do. If so, let them examine the following positions in all candor and honesty.

1st. No man has a right to engage in the traffic of ardent spirits. If this position is sustained, every Methodist of course must renounce the traffic. But why has not a man the right to do with his own as he chooses? For the simple reason that he may choose to do with his own something to the injury of his fellow-beings. But let us examine this plea; for, simple and absurd as it is, there are some who still urge it with a flourish which goes to show it is their strong forte. Now, my friend, your physical strength is your own in the same sense of your money; also, your gun and your cane are your own; and if your argument be valid, you may take your gun and blow your neighbor's brains out, and excuse yourself by saying, I used my own gun, my own ammunition, that I had bought with my own money. Now you see the absurdity of supposing you may do as you please with your own. If you please to do right with your own, then you may do as you choose with your own. Let an objector may say, "it still remains to be proved that I have no right to sell spirituous liquors; for although you have proved that I have not an unrestricted right to do as I please with my own, that is not proving that I have not the right to sell spirituous liquors." I am apprised of that. But submit this right, as you are pleased to call it, to the following test, viz: do I, by engaging in this business, interfere with the rights of my fellow-beings; and does the law of God condemn the practice? If your sense of moral obligation compel you to answer in the affirmative, you must, to be consistent, confess you have not a moral right to engage in the business.

But some may not see how they interfere with the rights of their fellow-beings by selling ardent spirits; for, say they, "the drunkard is such by his own voluntary act, and in the exercise of his rights, he has made himself what he is." The plausibility of this plea is owing to the error of supposing the inebriate has the right to get drunk. The drunkard commits a sin against God, himself and his family, by drinking to inebriation, therefore he has no right to get drunk. "I own, continues the objector, that the inebriate commits a sin by getting drunk, but am I, who sold him the poison, partaker of his sin?" I think it can be made apparent that you are accessory to all the crimes that the drunkard commits while under the influence of the intoxicating draught you furnished him; besides, being in some degree responsible for the remote effects to his family. You knew the ordinary effects of liquor before you sold it to the inebriate, consequently you can not excuse yourself upon the ground of ignorance. With your eyes open to the consequences, you deliberately furnished him with the poisonous liquid, knowing that it often results in irreparable injury to the inebriate himself, his family, and society at large. "But if I had not furnished it, some other person would; therefore I do not think I am responsible for the consequences." If you knew your neighbor would be murdered at a certainn time, and should before that time murder him yourself, would justice acquit you of the crime of murder? Then a thing that is in itself wrong, can not be made right for you because there are others who will perform the act. The sin of another is no excuse for your sin. Thus, we see, all the excuses by which the traffic is commonly defended, prove utterly unavailing. It is believed the position is sustained; hence it is needless to add more.

If this article should be admitted as suitable to appear in the columns of the Advocate, I shall in my next attempt to show the duty of a Legislator in reference to this question.

D. G. W. ELLIS.

Helicon, Ala., May 26, 1854.

Errors in life are the worst of all errors. They are of the heart, and corrupt the whole man, and cannot remain long without corrupting the intellect also. True life is true prayer, and without it the prayer of the lips brings little benediction.

AN INTERESTING DISCOVERY.—The long-sought entrance into the Egyptian Sphynx has been discovered by a Frenchman. It leads into beautiful marble rooms, which are supposed to be connected by subterranean passages with chambers in the adjacent pyramids.

RICHARD WATSON IN THE PULPIT.

We wish we could present to our readers a real sketch of a religious service conducted by this eminent minister. This, we feel, is prodigiously difficult. Twenty years have passed away since his voice has been heard in the Church below. A new generation has sprung up, who knew him not, or only recollect him as children. Time and change unite to throw the past into a distance which is ever increasing. Impressions, perceptions, and opinions, existing vividly at the time, become less and less vivid; and the dead are often like the last cliffs of fatherland to the voyager, as he passes away to another clime; for a while seen distinctly, then in the midst of haze, then as a speck, and then not at all. Let us, then, endeavor to recall Mr. Watson to those who knew him, and convey some idea of a religious service conducted by him to those who never enjoyed this privilege. Let City-road Chapel be the scene; the occasion a missionary sermon; and the text, "Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord: for he is raised up out of his holy habitation." The spacious chapel is full long before the time announced for the commencement of the sermon. Many strangers are present, evidently of an intellectual cast; they have not much the appearance of Methodists in dress and manner; the Hymn-Book is absent—that never-failing symbol of the Methodist when in the house of God; the audience is still and thoughtful, but apparently anxious, as if eager to witness something in which they have a deep interest. At length the clock strikes six, and out of the side-door leading to the pulpit a tall figure walks forth; his step is deliberate and easy; he throws no furtive glance around, but goes straight to his place of prayer and of prophesying, as if only thoughts of God and his message filled his mind. His countenance is serene, but somewhat flushed, and not devoid of anxiety. As he ascends the pulpit steps, every eye is fixed upon him; the home part of the congregation have smiles of delight depicted on their countenances, while the strangers look with intense curiosity, outstretched necks, and dilated eyes, to obtain a fair view; then whisper to one another; then fall back into their seats, as if saying, "Well, report is true." This majestic figure prostrates himself in prayer when he has reached the pulpit, and is lost to the gaze of the congregation for some minutes. This does not seem unmeaning—a form—a shadow; he appears to be really engaged with God, to be penetrated with a sense of the responsibility of his position, and to be seeking divine aid. This ended, the preacher stands up, and presents himself fairly to his audience. No gown hides the symmetry of his person; his figure is fully seen. Thoughtfulness is impressed on every feature, but there is no agitation, no nervous contortion. The whole body is at ease; every limb moves naturally; grace is in every action; and there is not the shadow of affectation. Surely, this man understands his vocation, and is the master of his work. The hymn-book is opened, and the worship proceeds. But what is this? We never understood these hymns before. They are living; they speak; they have meaning; they reveal things sacred; a fire, a spirit, a sincerity is in them; they are poetry; they strike our imagination; they come home to our faith; they thrill through our souls; they are like sunshine upon our affections; they enrapture and excite our devotions. Surely, this is worship. The secret of this is seen. The soul of the preacher passes into the hymn; touches the sense; gives inspiration to the sentiment; impresses with emphasis the meaning of every syllable; and infuses its own feeling through the whole. The voice aids the effect; it is clear, full, deep, sonorous, finely modulated—its softer tones relieved by a deep bass.

The prayer begins—begins with great deliberation. Reverence is manifest, and this inspires reverence in the whole congregation. Not a movement is heard; all is still and motionless. Words are few, and slowly uttered at first; but every word contains a thought; these thoughts accumulate in the exercise, and as they increase, seem to expand the views and elevate the feelings—devotion gathers volume in the exercise. Gradually the world seems to be left behind; sensible things disappear; even the idea of the presence of the congregation is lost in the idea of the presence of God. Pleading is heard; the Divine Majesty seems near; the blood of the covenant is appealed to, and the "Man at the right hand of God" sought. Confession of sin, deprecation of the divine wrath and anger, the blessings of grace, the joys of salvation, are themes of importunate supplication. Then passing on to the state of the world, the spread of the gospel, the overthrow of idolatry and superstition become the subjects of intercession of the prophet upon his knees before God. This is not eloquence; it is more than eloquence; it is compassion—it is love—it is faith. The preacher is subdued—the people are subdued—all hearts are stirred—the preacher looks different—the people look different: the serene air of mental power which sat upon the one is gone; and the curiosity and sense of delight, a little while ago manifested by the others, are also gone. A new element has evidently entered the mind of both. Deep emotions have taken the place of pleasurable and tranquil feelings; something profoundly agitating is going on in the soul of the preacher, and the contagion has extended to the people. He is still calm and self-possessed; but look at that eye, see the quiver of those lips, listen to that voice. What is this? He has obtained a glimpse of Calvary, of the spiritual world, of eternity, and now his mental conceptions are fused with the new element of a living faith.

The sermon comes at length. The exordium is clear; the subject is opened; the basis of the discourse is plainly laid down; the divisions are announced, so that the audience may follow the preacher in his arguments and illustrations. "The Lord is raised up out of his holy habitation;" this is the theme: "Be silent before him;" this is the duty. The manner of the "rising up of the Lord" is discussed. A wide range is sketched; the operations of God in nations, in the Church, in the Christian field, are elucidated; the signs of this are given, and the proofs and evidence exhibited. He is now rising up; events indicate this; the world is in a transition state; all are looking for the coming of the Lord. Silence is observed, and this silence is the duty of all. The argument is clear, but cumulative; thought follows thought; all appropriate; and the last always strengthening the one preceding. But there is more than thought. Genius begins to kindle; coruscation after coruscation flashes forth; figures, symbols—not in a series; not as an elaborate and prepared performance, but as jets of sparkling sentiment thrown, as diamonds, into the body of the sermon, which would have been complete without them; or as stars in the pure ether, which is yet perfect in its own wondrous simplicity. These beauties grow out of emotion—they are the effect of deep feeling; impassioned reason becomes poetic; and though the discourse began in prose, it ends in poetry. Reason retains her place all through, as the pathway of the soul in her progress; but the road is not the only object looked at; the heavens above, and the earth beneath, are all brought in to complete the picture. Pathos is intermingled with beauty and sublimity; and of all the peculiarities belonging to Mr. Watson, pathos was the finest. It did not on this occasion, or on any other, manifest itself in tears—he never wept; it did not display itself in sighs, groans, or exclamations—he never vociferated; it did not show itself by any extravagant gesture or violent action; he never became the actor. No: it was simply the pathos of the heart—tender, delicate, deep; it mingled itself in his words, which became gentle as the dying breezes of evening: the fire became spent; the glow of genius subsided; the loftp flights of imagination ended; the orator ceased his entrancing fascinations; the heart seemed subdued into the affectionate palpitations of the chile; he spoke of love, and felt all its tenderness.

In this sermon some peculiarities of manner were observable. The action was never great, and in the beginning rather slow and measured, but a perfect model of its kind. As the difficulties of a beginning, however, were cleared, and the depths reached, the right hand began to move; then it was stretched out, but never raised higher than the breast; it was never clinched, but the forefinger of a most delicate and beautiful hand stretched out, as in a pointing attitude. Only one deviation from this gesture was observable. When greatly excited, when profoundly feeling the weight of some great truth before giving utterance to it, and as if pausing for a moment to find for it a more perfect form, he thrust his right hand into his bosom, and then announced the thought in that peculiar posture. One other singularity may be noticed; when he had finished one of his most beautiful climaxes of reasoning or fancy, he gave his head a majestic nod, with a sort of backward movement, as if he intended to signify to his hearers that they were then, at that point, to consider the matter finished; and, moreover, this nod, it must be confessed, had somewhat of a defiant air about it, as if to intimate to the sceptic that he had no fear of his criticism. In this service there was that mixture of goodness and greatness which constitutes the perfection of such hallowed exercises. The devotional part was as exalted as the intellectual: a solemnity and a sweetness combined characterized the prayers; while the sermon conveyed to the mind the most exalted truths of the gospel.

Silence followed. The congregation appeared profoundly moved. They seemed in no haste to go away. None smiled, or exchanged greetings with each other. They retired with gravity; and as they passed along, no one heard a word of criticism. The impression seemed too deep for garrullty; the doctrine of the discourse had passed from the imagination to the heart and consoience; and conscience is always more silent than fancy.

Longings for the Conversion of Sinners.

It is said of the learned John Smith, "that he had resolved very much to lay aside other studies, and to travail in the salvation of men's souls, after whose good he most earnestly thirsted." Of Alleine, author of the "Alarm to Unconverted Sinners," it is said, that "he was infinitely and insatiably greedy of the conversion of souls; and to this end he poured out his very heart in prayer and in preaching." Bunyan said, "in my preaching, I could not be satisfied unless some fruits did appear in my work." "I would think it a greater happiness," said Matthew Henry, "to gain one soul to Christ, than mountains of silver and gold to myself. If I do not gain souls, I shall enjoy all my other gains with very little satisfaction, and I would rather beg my bread from door to door, than undertake this great work." Doddridge, writing to a friend, remarked, "I long for the conversion of souls more sensibly than for any thing besides. Methinks I could not only labor, but die for it with pleasure." Similar is the death-bed testimony of the sainted Brown, of Haddington: "Now, after near forty years' preaching of Christ, I think I would rather beg my bread all the laboring days of the week, for an opportunity of publishing the Gospel on the Sabbath, than, without such a privilege, to enjoy the richest possessions on earth. O labor, labor," said he to his sons, "to win souls to Christ." Rutherford "could assure his flock that they were the objects of his tears, cares, fears, and daily prayers; that he labored among them early and late. And my witness," said he, "is above, that your heaven would be two heavens to me, and the salvation of you all as two salvations to me." Fleming, in his "Fulfilment of Scripture," mentions one John Welch, "often in the cold-est winter nights rising for prayer, found weeping on the ground, and wrestling with the Lord on account of his people, and saying to his wife, when she pressed him for an explanation of his distress, 'I have the souls of three thousand to answer for, while I know not how it is with many of them.'" Brainerd could say of himself, on more than one occasion, "I cared not where or how I lived, or what hardships I went through, so that I could but gain souls to Christ. While I was asleep, I dreamed of these things; and when I waked, the first thing I thought of was this great work. All my desire was for the conversion of the heathen, and all my hope was in God. New Discoveries at Nineveh.

The London Assyrian Excavation Society have just issued a most satisfactory report of the progress of their agent at Babylonia. The following extract is of the highest interest:

In addition to the discoveries mentioned by Mr. Loftus, the committee have to announce that a new palace has been found at Nineveh, in the mound of Kouyunjhik, of which Col. Rawlinson reports in the following terms:

"A most beautiful palace has recently been discovered in Nineveh, belonging to the son of Esar Haddon. The sculptures are infinitely superior in variety of subject, in artistic treatment, and in skill and delicacy of execution, to every thing which has been before found. The palace, also, is of great extent, containing, perhaps, five hundred sculptured slabs, and the marbles are generally in a good state of preservation."

In another letter, he adds:

"The new palace is by far the most magnificent thing yet discovered in Assyria. Each hall, room and passage is devoted to a separate subject, and where the series is complete, and the sculpture well preserved, as not infrequently happens, is of extraordinary interest. In fact, the variety of subject, artistic grouping and treatment, high relief, richness of detail and delicacy of execution, entitle the palace to be reckoned the chef-d'œuvre of Assyrian art. Some of the pavement slabs are most superb; and the animals, trees, and flowers, even the human figures, are much more natural and free from conventionalities than in any of the earlier palaces. There are between two and three hundred sculptured slabs already uncovered, and not above one-half of the palace's yet explored.

Colossal bulls and lions there are none, but monsters, centaurs, hippogryphs, etc., there are as many as you please.

"At one of the entrances there are a pair of round ornamented pedestals, which certainly supported columns; but as there are no remains of such columns, they must have been formed, I suppose, of wood.

"On one slab there is a city with a double wall, and within, a temple, faced with a row of columns supported on the back of animals. On another there is a mound, on the top of which is a castle; and, to give more extent to the upper platform, a causeway is run out from the top of the masonry, with sharp-pointed arches stretching down the side of the mound."

Another private letter, from a gentleman residing at Mosul, speaks in the same terms of praise of these new discoveries, and adds some further particulars regarding the subjects of the sculptures. In speaking of the slab representing the palace or temple, alluded to above, he says: "It represents very minutely the exterior architecture. The second story is built with pillars, which have their bases on the backs of lions and human-headed bulls, with their heads turned like those found at Khorsabad." He also mentions the representation of a bridge with three pointed arches, and other particulars illustrative of the architecture of the period.

One of the best executed slabs represents a lion-hunt.

"In this scene," he says, "the king is the principal huntsman, and is in the act of striking a lance into a lion springing upon his chariot, while seven others, already pierced by many arrows, some of which are dead and others dying, are most beautifully and naturally portrayed upon the slabs. On another slab they have represented a park, with an open gate, through which is seen the king hunting lions, executed on a very minute scale, as if they intended it to appear far in the distance."

He concludes by saying "that the art displayed in the treatment of both men and animals in these bas-reliefs surpasses every thing discovered in the ruins of Assyria."

The committee take this opportunity of calling the attention of subscribers to the progress recently made in the deciphering of the inscriptions, which comprise the identification of all the Assyrian kings mentioned in the Bible—of many of those whose names occur in profane history—extending the chronology of Assyria to a period of about two thousand years before Christ. An almost perfect series of the names of the ancient kings of Assyria has also been discovered, and numerous illustrations of the sacred Scriptures, of the highest interest.

An Empire of Thieves.

Mr. German Delagny tells a story with dramatic interest. He is a Frenchman, and has spent many years in St. Petersburg, and has much to say about the venality and corruption of the members of the Government. The following is to the point and admirably told:

"The Czar charged two intelligent men, belonging to his staff of secretaries—two Germans from Courland, in whom he placed implicit confidence—to investigate most thoroughly all the branches of the public administration; to observe, to see, to judge every thing for themselves, and boldly to take the soundings of this ocean of corruption, however deep it might be. The will of the Czar is law, and is often attended with beneficial results. The task was no easy one; thousands of obstacles were shattered to pieces and overcome. The work was long, and, contrary to his expectations, conscientious. It is true that it would not have been easy to disguise the evil. The portrait was not flattered. Instances of bribery, shuffling and venality were pointed out to the Czar, without any respect for persons. Names were written in full, and proofs were abundant. The sore gaped as wide as a gulf. Punishment was out of the question, for it would have been necessary to let the knout fall upon the noblest shoulders in the empire, and his vengeance almost every where—to open the gates of Siberia to the majority of those who surrounded him; for, figuratively speaking, the very doors of his palace threatened to fall, eaten away with corruption! The Czar shed a tear or two, and threw the report into the fire. In a country of this kind, justice, before being severe, must be prudent.

"The very same evening, weighed down with grief, he went, according to his usual custom, to the house of one of his favorite ministers, Count ——. The sombre, discontented air of the Autocrat, completely stupefied the mind of the favorite, who, in a stammering voice, plucked up sufficient courage to ask his august master what had occurred to affect his mind to such a degree, and stamp upon his face the marks of such profound sadness. The Czar, with that sharp, abrupt tone for which he is celebrated, related to his minister-general all he had just learned, told him the revelations recently made, and exclaimed with concentrated indignation:

"Every one robs throughout the empire!—Every one around me robs! In whatever direction I choose to glance, I behold only pilferers and robbers! There is only one person, a single one, who can walk proudly with head erect. Of this person, at least, I am sure," he added, looking at his favorite very fixedly and very strangely.

Count ——, imagined that the Emperor was alluding to him, bowed and bent himself almost to the ground, in order to thank his most august master for having had the goodness to think him an honest servant.

But the Czar, striking his breast, added the following words:

"And that person who does not rob is myself! I am the only person throughout the empire who does not steal!"

Submarine Telegraph Across the Atlantic.

Lieut. Maury, of the Navy, and Superintendent of the National Observatory at Washington, has addressed the following letter to the editor of De Bow's Review:

SIR: The U. S. brig Dolphin, Lieut. Com'g O. H. Berryman, was employed last Summer upon special service connected with the researches that are carried on at this office concerning the winds and currents of the sea.

Her observations were confined principally to that part of the ocean which the merchantmen, as they pass to and fro upon the business of trade between Europe and the United States, use as their great thoroughfare.

Lieut. Berryman availed himself of this opportunity to carry along also a line of deep-sea soundings from the shores of Newfoundland to those of Ireland.

The result is highly interesting, in so far as the bottom of the sea is concerned, upon the question of a submarine telegraph across the Atlantic, and, I therefore beg leave to make it the subject of a special report.

This line of deep-sea soundings seems to be decisive of the question as to the practicability of a submarine telegraph between the two continents, in so far as the bottom of the deep sea is concerned.

From Newfoundland to Ireland the distance between the nearest points is about 1600 miles; and the bottom of the sea between the two places is a plateau, which seems to have been placed there especially for the purpose of holding the wires of a submarine telegraph, and of keeping them out of harm's way. It is neither too deep nor too shallow; yet it is so deep that the wires, but once landed, will remain for ever beyond the reach of vessels' anchors, icebergs, and drifts of any kind; and so shallow that the wires may be readily lodged upon the bottom.

The depth of this plateau is quite regular, gradually increasing from the shores of Newfoundland to the depth of 1500 to 2000 fathoms, as you approach the other side.

The distance between Ireland and Cape St. Charles, or Cape St. Louis, in Labrador, is somewhat less than the distance from any point of Ireland to the nearest point of Newfoundland.

But whether it would be better to lead the wires from Newfoundland or Labrador is not now the question; nor do I pretend to consider the question as to the possibility of finding a time calm enough, the sea smooth enough, a wire long enough, a ship big enough, to lay a coil of wire 1600 miles in length; though I have no fear that the enterprise and ingenuity of the age, whenever called on with these problems, will be ready with a satisfactory and practical solution of them.

I simply address myself at this time to the question in so far as the bottom of the sea is concerned, and as far as that the greatest practical difficulties will, I apprehend, be found after reaching soundings at either end of the line, and not in the deep sea.

I submit herewith a chart showing the depth of the Atlantic according to the deep-sea soundings, made from time to time on board of vessels of the Navy, by authority of the Department, and according to instructions issued by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography. This chart is Plate XIV of the sixth edition of Maury's Sailing Directions.

By an examination of it, it will be perceived that we have acquired by these simple means a pretty good idea as to the depression below the sea level of that portion of the solid crust of our planet which underlies the Atlantic Ocean, and constitutes the basin that holds its waters.

A wire laid across from either of the above-named places on this side will pass to the north of the Grand Banks, and rest on that beautiful plateau to which I have alluded, and where the water of the sea appears to be as quiet and as completely at rest as it is at the bottom of a mill-pond.

It is proper that the reasons should be stated for the inference that there are no perceptible currents, and no abrading agents at work at the bottom of the sea upon this telegraphic plateau.

I derive this inference from a study of a physical fact, which I little deemed, when I sought it, had any such bearings.

It is unnecessary to speak on this occasion of the germs which physical facts, even apparently the most trifling, are often found to contain.

Lieut. Berryman brought up, with Brooke's deep-sea sounding apparatus, specimens of the bottom from this plateau.

I sent them to Professor Bailey, of West Point, for examination under his microscope. This he kindly gave, and that eminent microscopist was quite as much surprised to find, as I was to learn, that all these specimens of deep-sea soundings are filled with microscopic shells; to use his own words, "not a particle of sand or gravel exists in them."

These little shells, therefore, suggest the fact that there are no currents at the bottom of the sea whence they came; that Brooke's lead found them where they were deposited in their burial place, after having lived and died on the surface, and by gradual sinking were lodged on the bottom.

Had there been currents at the bottom, these would have swept and abraded, and mingled up with these microscopic remains the debris of the bottom of the sea, such as ooze, sand, gravel, and other matter; but not a particle of sand or gravel was found among them. Hence, the inference that these depths of the sea are not disturbed either by waves or currents.

Consequently, a telegraphic wire once laid there, there it would remain, as completely beyond the reach of accident as it would be if buried in air-tight cases. Therefore, so far as the bottom of the deep sea between Newfoundland, or the North Cape at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, and Ireland, is concerned, the practicability of a submarine telegraph across the Atlantic is proved.

The present state of Europe invests the subject of a line of telegraphic wires across the Atlantic with a high degree of interest to the Government and people of the United States. A general European war seems now almost inevitable; the attitude which this Government will assume with regard to all the belligerent powers that may be involved in that war is that of strict, impartial neutrality.

The better to enable this Government to maintain that position, and the people of the United States to avail themselves of all the advantages of such a position, a line of daily telegraphic communication with Europe would be of incalculable service.

In this view of the subject, and for the purpose of hastening the completion of such a line, I take the liberty of suggesting for your consideration the propriety of an offer from the proper source of a prize to the company through whose telegraphic wire the first message shall be passed across the Atlantic.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, etc.,

M. F. MAURY, Lieut. U. S. Navy.

GREAT GATHERING OF THE SIX NATIONS OF INDIANS.—The Christian Indians of the ancient confederacy, well known in history as the "Six Nations"—Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists—are to have a great gathering on the 6th of June, at the Mission Church, on the Onondaga Indian Reservation, N. Y. The convention is expected to continue in session one week.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $1 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1854.

ERRATA.—An obituary notice, sent on a few weeks since by Rev. L. M. Wilson, contained a material error as printed: the subject, instead of N. J. Kitt, should have been N. J. Kitt Ages. Again—"While life was thus passed," should have been "poised."

MONEY WANTED.—It is very much wanted at this time. The printer is behind-hand; to say nothing of other operatives. Remittances have been unusually slow for five weeks. This is easily accounted for—preachers and people have been so busy reading they have forgot collecting and paying. Though insisting on the cash principle, we have only been able to carry it out perfectly in the case of new subscribers for the first year. Somehow or other there has accumulated on our books the sum of $5,000—due on back subscriptions. How much owest thou? It is counted, now.

AT HOME.

The Editor, in behalf of readers and in his own, would take the earliest opportunity of returning thanks to Pro tem., better known in these columns as Woodsman—the Rev. L. PARSON—for his supervision of the Advocate these two months past.

He returns to his post, having enjoyed the vacation abundantly: stronger in heart, if not otherwise strengthened. His late opportunities have not been unappreciated or unimproved, of estimating the spirit and resources of our beloved Methodism, of reviewing its foundation principles of polity and doctrine—their capacity of adaptation and development—and of pledging a new devotion to their defense and propagation.

Four years! God willing. To his brethren of the traveling and local ministry, who thus far have most generously sustained him, and to his brethren of the laity, he looks for a continued cooperation.

In the election of the General Conference for this year, there was no opposition:—whether because it was not thought worth having, or the yellow fever drove competition off the track, or there was general satisfaction with his past services, is an open question. Nevertheless, he makes his cleverest anger for the unanimity of their election.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate has many friends and well-wishers at a distance as well as at home. The eligibility of its position, as a center of moral influence, news facilities, and Church operation, is by all conceded. What forbids its increased usefulness and prosperity?

METHODIST PRESS.

During our late absence, we confess to a sort of mischievous curiosity to see what our Northern exchanges were letting off over the church suit. curiosity has given place to sadness. We did hope that the highest tribunals of the land—the world, would inspire some respect in those who took their religious doctrines from the Bible. A body of men graduated in wisdom and honor, removed so carefully as humanity can be from biasing dependencies; to whose decisions the Congress, President and Cabinet of the nation submit without a murmur of distrust or dissatisfaction; made up, if section must be spoken of, mostly from the free States; the only one refusing to sit on the case a Methodist, belonging to the Northern church, and he refusing because his views were known to be favorable to the other party; the rest of the judges unanimous in their opinions:—this body of men, this Supreme Court of the land are spoken of contemptuously. This is Abolitionism. We looked for some nicely-worded retraction, some graceful submission, some sort of confession that they were in the wrong, when by every test and every disinterested and lofty judgment their opponents were declared in the right. None of it. The Judges are taint and their opinion is spit upon. Never before have we seen abolition fanaticism in such a hopeless light. It hardens and smites with blindness. And such men offer to lead public opinion; to settle questions of duty and conscience for us!

The Western Christian Advocate, 31st ult., referring to the decision:

> The only claim it has to a judicial decision is its title, and this is properly no part of the decision, but the mere name of the paper. There is prefixed to it the name of "the Supreme Court of the United States," and after this christening of the paper the Supreme Judges all disappear, and Judge Nelson alone, who decided in a similar case, sits the second time on its merits, and decides according to his former unjudicial inconsistencies. The Judges of the Supreme Court, in referring the decision to Judge Nelson, have, contrary to all other like cases, thrown dishonor on the District Judge of Ohio. They have acted disrespectfully, if not contemptuously, toward the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Christian Churches of America, and Christianity itself, in thus totally disregarding the great important case of the kind ever before them. The Methodist Episcopal Church South itself is treated injuriously on a decision which, if it could have the least feature of authority, would prove the means of endless divisions among them. And though this decision is a mere arbitrary act of legislation in its character, it is a reproach to the Supreme Bench to have so weak, so contradictory, and so unjudicial a decision to even bear their name. All the harm the decision can do, will be the trifling one of transferring a few thousand dollars from the proper owners to a new quasi corporation, which never owned a cent of it. This case can never, in future, be quoted as authority in any judicial decisions, because it is totally wanting in reasons and judicial analogies.

Zion's Herald, of the same date, gives a large heading, and thus opens:

> The decision of the Supreme Court, which grants the Church South its "pound of flesh," doubtless excited the surprise of such of our readers as have taken the pains to peruse it. Not that the decision itself was altogether unexpected; for, knowing how completely the atmosphere at Washington is filled with the miasma of slavery, thinking men had little hope that, on a question in which the slave power is so deeply interested, an unbiased judgement could be obtained, even from the bench of the Supreme Court; but it was expected that the decree, although it might be adverse to the North, would be at least worthy of the high character of the court itself. It was thought, that the regard, which those who wear the ermine on that bench, are supposed to cherish for their judicial reputation, would indnce them to support their decree by a process of reasoning, that should, at least, have the appearance of plausibility; and which, whatever might be thought of its justice, would do credit to the intellect of the bench. But instead of this there is little in this decree, aside from its statements of the facts involved, but bold and dogmatic assertions, entirely unsupported by sound reasoning or convincing facts.

The Northern Advocate reserves its best wrath for the Nebraska Bill, but has some to spare on the "opinion." We are sorry that our Northern friends, after paying for that opinion and insisting on paying for it, don't like it any better:

> The opinion was delivered by Judge Nelson, and is substantially the same document that was prepared for the Eastern suit. It exhibits the same stolidity, and is only better than its predecessor from the fact that it is shorter. After reading the paper carefully, we are more than ever confirmed in the views we expressed week before last—namely, that the case did not come under the jurisdiction of the United States Court, nor of any secular tribunal. It is not within the purview of the civil law—being a matter exclusively ecclesiastical. The question should not have been entertained by the United States Court for a moment, as that Court had no more to do with this question, than it has with who shall be Bishops in the M. E. Church, and what their salaries shall be—whether one, or two thousand dollars per annum. The whole action of the Judges was a gross blunder. They might as well have adjudicated suits in the moon. Certainly we cannot admit that unincorporated bodies like the Annual and General Conferences of the M. E. Church, violated any chartered rights, for they have no such rights; and if they violate no rights, what has the Court to do with them? It was never been intimated that the M. E. Church has, in the least, infracted the civil law by withholding the Southern claim. No attempt has been made to recover, except by a new interpretation of the ecclesiastical law!—an interpretation, too, made by men who are not members of the Church, and who know nothing of the law which they attempt to apply. Before these honorable Judges decided against the M. E. Church, they should have shown what particular law or laws of the United States had been disregarded by our Church authorities. But no; they do nothing of the kind, and for the best reason in the world—they could not because there is no violation of the civil law. We have, then, as the sum total of this august proceeding, the opinion of the United States Judges as to how Methodist Discipline should be administered—an opinion which, besides being a work of supererogation on their part, is necessarily of the least possible consequence, owing to their ignorance of ecclesiastical law. Who constituted them judges of such law? Did they ever study it—were they ever examined in it? None—never, never. We ask, then, who required this stupendous folly at their hands? Surely the Court stands in a most ridiculous attitude—it has volunteered to do a work, not only beyond its jurisdiction, but beyond its capacity also.

PROTESTANT METHODISM.—The General Conference of the Protestant Methodist Church has been in session during May in Steubenville, Ohio. The "vexed question" of slavery comes in for a measure of attention; and that other great question, the salary question, has been debated and acted upon.

In fixing the Ministers' salaries, our Protestant brethren have entirely departed from the old land mark. The pressure had become too heavy on the old establishment of one hundred dollars to a preacher and as much to his wife;—and as will be seen from the following preamble and resolution it has given way upon all sides.

> "WHEREAS, By reason of the great difference which exists in the expenses of living in the various parts of our wide-spread work in the United States, it is impracticable to fix a uniform salary for our itinerant ministers, preachers, etc.
> "Resolved, That this General Conference recommend the different annual conferences to regulate and fix the salaries and allowances of their itinerant ministers and preachers, etc., as the peculiarities of their different sections of country may require.
> "Resolved, That those parts of the Discipline which relate to the support, etc., of itinerant ministers, etc., be so altered as to agree with the foregoing resolution."

CLEANSING.—The California Christian Advocate, commenting upon the great temptations to the sin of profanity in that country, says: "An intelligent lady of our acquaintance, whose little boy was beginning this strange talk, anxious to express to her child her horror of profanity, hit upon the novel process of washing out its mouth with soapsuds whenever he swore. It was an effectual cure. The boy understood his mother's sense of the corruption of an oath, and the taste of suds, which together produced the desired result."

DESERTION.—The Presbytery of South Alabama, at a pro re nata meeting convened in the city of Mobile, Ala., on the 18th ult., adopted the following resolutions:

> Resolved, That in view of the confessions of the Rev. William T. Hamilton, D.D. made by him, and contained in his letters addressed to the session and congregation of the Government Street Church, and to this Presbytery, he be and is hereby deposed from the ministry, and also suspended from the sacraments of the church, till he give satisfactory evidence of the sincerity of his repentance.
> Resolved, That the Government Street Church be and is hereby declared vacant.

WEATHER AND HEALTH.—Alternations of very warm and unseasonably cool weather, accompanied with showers. The total interments in this city for the week ending June 11th, were 184, against 194 of the week before. By this time last year the epidemic had obtained considerable headway. Thus far no case of it has been reported.

CLOSE OF THE CONFERENCE.

The Editor of the Columbus Times & Sentinel thus notices this event:—

> We finish with this issue the proceedings of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which assembled in this city on the first day of May, and adjourned on the 31st. The Delegates have all returned to their fields of labor, and Columbus presents its usual quiet aspect at this season of the year. We also resume our accustomed routine. We can not take leave, however, of this venerable body, without a few words of farewell. There were many men of mark in the conference. Of some of these we propose to give sketches in subsequent issues. We confine our remarks, at present, to the general appearance of the body.
> It was never our fortune to look at a body which gave higher evidence of the possession, not only of intellect, but of the elegance and polish of high civilization. Conspicuous in this respect, are Bishops Soule, Capers, Paine; Whiteford Smith and Wm. M. Wightman, of South Carolina; Doggett and Lee, of Virginia; Wadsworth, of Tennessee; Sehon, of Kentucky; Boyle, of Missouri; L. Pierce, of Georgia; Hamilton, of Alabama. These, however, are minor accomplishments.
>
> In strength of intellect the body was richer than in graces of manner. Towering above all others, are Bishop Soule, W. A. Smith, of Virginia, and William Winans, of Mississippi, either of whom are intellectual giants, who would have been chief men in any field of human endeavor. Age has enfeebled the venerable Bishop, but his huge frame, massive brow, and commanding manner bear upon them the stamp of greatness.
> In the graces of oratory there are many members who are prominent. In this field, our own beloved Bishop Pierce, Lovick Pierce, of Georgia, Whiteford Smith, of South Carolina, J. W. Hanner, of Tennessee, and C. B. Parsons, of Kentucky, have acquired deserved celebrity.
> In missionary zeal, too, there were some members who have won a world-wide fame. First and foremost are Dr. Taylor, of China, who took his life in his hand and carried the Bible through the frowning fleet of the "Brother of the Sun" to Tae-ping-Wang, the leader of the rebels and friend of Christianity; and Jesse Boring, who has built up a conference on the shores of the Pacific during the last four years; and McMahon, who planted the Church in the valley of the Mississippi; and Johnson, of Kansas, Missionary to the Indians.
> In scholars, too, the conference has some bright specimens, among whom are Bishops Capers, Paine and Pierce, Presidents Wightman, Wiley, Wadsworth and Deems, Professor Shipp, and T. O. Summers, book editor.
> The business men of the conference are Bishop Early, Drs. Green and Stevenson, Keener, of Louisiana, and J. E. Evans, of Georgia—one of whom boasted that he had never made a financial mistake.
> In stump oratory, J. B. McFerrin, of Tennessee, and H. N. McTyeire, of Louisiana, would have acquired high position if they had entered the stirring field of politics.
> Not the least notable feature in the conference was the array of fine-looking men. In this particular it would compare favorably with any body of men we have ever seen. Conspicuous among these may be mentioned Bishop Soule, Dr. Wm. A. Smith, Dr. Lovick Pierce, and Dr. Green. We could particularize also a few, who, like Mirabeau, are hideous with genius, but distinctions might be considered invidious, and we forbear.
> In these general remarks, we have embraced men in one class who are worthy of a place in others. In our specific sketches we will bring out the minor as well as the more prominent characteristics which distinguish them.
> Finally, the sweet Christian spirit which distinguished the body, as well in private intercourse as in the general debates of the body, won the confidence and esteem of our whole community. We take leave of them with regret, and wish them a safe journey home, and a happy and prosperous life.

PLACE OF MEETING.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, Buffalo, N. Y., has selected Nashville, Tenn., as the place of next meeting.—It will be recollected that on this point there was a close vote at our late General Conference. New Orleans and Nashville tied on the second ballot: but those everlasting alarms of health were whispered about, and then Nashville has luck. So Nashville got it by a few votes. About the same time that our balloting was going on in Columbus, Ga., a similar scene was transpiring in Buffalo, N. Y., and so much alike in character and result that we present an extract from the Presbyterian:

> The order of the day being the choice of the place of meeting for the next Assembly, New York, Nashville, New Orleans, Columbus, Ohio, and Pittsburgh were nominated. Rev. Dr. Spring felt it to be his duty to state why he and his brethren had never nominated New York, and why he should vote against it now. It will be remembered that it is but about two weeks since the Anniversaries had met there, and as soon as these were over, it is customary for the housekeepers to begin house-cleaning, and if the Assembly were taken there at such a time, the ladies would be down upon the heads of those who invited them.
> Mr. Hadden advocated New Orleans.
> Rev. Dr. Edgar gave an earnest and hospitable invitation to the Assembly to meet at Nashville.
>
> Mr. Atchison advocated New Orleans, and said the Assembly would be most kindly entertained there. New Orleans was now very accessible. He thought it would be for the interest of the Presbyterian Church for the Assembly to meet there, on account of the moral impression which would be produced. Moreover, at that season of the year, in order to reach Nashville, you would have to go on stern-wheel boats, which got along the best way they could.
> Dr. Edgar said they had side-wheel boats running to Nashville, but even stern-wheel boats were better than yellow fever and mosquitoes.
> Mr. Hadden said that New Orleans in May was one of the healthiest cities in the world—that Mr. Fillmore, who had been there in May, said he could testify to the Assembly that they need fear nothing in going there, except they might be killed with kindness.
> Rev. Mr. Banks was in favor of a meeting in the South-west, and hoped we would go to New Orleans.
>
> It was determined that a majority of all the votes should be necessary to an election. The vote being taken, stood—New York, 16; Nashville, 87; Columbus, 28; New Orleans, 105; Pittsburgh, 10.
>
> No election. Next day it was tried again, and New Orleans ruled out. For men that talk and preach of death and the post of duty, it has struck us that Methodist preachers act very strangely in this matter. It seems the Presbyterians are no better:
>
> The order of the day, the choice of the place of meeting of the next Assembly, was taken up.
> Mr. Hadden withdrew New Orleans, stating that so many inquiries had been made as to health, etc.
>
> Mr. Lindsley advocated New York, and said the meeting of the Anniversaries there was no objection, so our people took but little interest in them, and had but little to do with them. He lived near New York, and if the Assembly were not, entertained in the city, they would entertain them in the country.
> Judge Fine thought it was not delicate to ask the Assembly to meet in the State of New York two years in succession. New York is not the whole Union.
> Rev. Mr. Smith of Tennessee said, that if the Assembly would come to Nashville, not only the Assembly, but their wives and children, would be hospitably entertained.
>
> The vote being taken, Nashville, Tennessee, was chosen as the place for the meeting of the next Assembly.

TRIALS OF A MIND.

The public have been looking for a book from the late Bishop Ives, giving his experience. The interest in this person, caused by his formal "submission" to the Pope, having about died out, is now for a while to be revived by the appearance of said book. We have obtained an early copy and perused it. On the back are the ominous words "Trials of a mind:" but the title page is fuller:—"Trials of a mind in its progress to [Roman] Catholicism. A letter to his old friends, by L. Silliman Ives, LL. D., late bishop," etc. etc. The "letter" makes a 12mo. of 233 pages.

His "dear brethren and friends" are informed on the first page that he has been "for many years more or less doubtful of his position as a Protestant," and feeling about for some surer ground on which to stand. The subject of self-apology is taken leave of in a few words: "That in this state of baffling uncertainty and under the trying circumstances it brought with it, I always acted wisely or with perfect consistency, is more than I dare either affirm or believe. .... To the mariner, inured to the peculiar hardships of the sea, it will be no cause of wonder that one, tossed upon the bosom of its treacherous waves, now toiling amid conflicting elements and then distracted and deceived by shifting mists, should, in making his way to the shore, describe a somewhat devious track." So endeth that lesson, and it strikes us in good taste and better judgment. The case was an involved one: lump it, own up to it and proceed.

The ex-Bishop has omitted in his title-page recital an important piece of information in describing his progress to Rome: important to that individual known as "the general reader," though may be not to his former associates. Progress is to a place from a place. He has got to Rome, no question. But where did this Rome-ward progress start? This information is supplied, happily, by an incidental statement, page 43, in which he professes to have held and acted "with the party in England and America, called 'High Churchmen.'" So, then, this book, written in an earnest and scholarly style, evincing no ordinary learning, ought, in truth and justice, be set forth as the "Trials of a Mind in its progress from High Churchism to Romanism." This honest front would show at a glance and in the light of this notorious instance, the relation of the two, and save genuine Protestantism from the imputation of an apostate, who neither was of it, nor went out from it.

The ecclesiastical points given, the distance to be traversed, was short, and no necessity existed for "a somewhat devious track." The distance was too short to afford many incidents or striking changes of scenery. Had Dr. Ives been as bold as logical, they would have been fewer than they are. Peculiar circumstances, conviction struggling against convenience, the loss of position, family and friendly associations—these, as he shows, were the main checks to his progress, and his trials under them impart to the book the only novelty it possesses. There was the upsetting of no old principles, the bringing in of no new. It was simply a question of the application of principles already accepted. This is a patent, and ought to be a warning fact.

Take an example or two. Pp. 20-21:

> "But the circumstance which at this period shook my confidence most of all, was the absence, in my view, of any instituted method among Protestants for the remission of post-baptismal sin. Sins before baptism were expressly forgiven in that sacrament. But for the remission of those committed after, however deadly, I could see in Protestantism no provision. That Christ left power in His Church to remit these, I had no doubt. And for a time, after my mind had become alive to the importance of the exercise of this power, I believed that it existed, and might be lawfully exercised in the communion of which I was a bishop. But upon stricter examination and more mature thought, I became convinced that if the existence of such power was not actually denied, its exercise, except in a very modified sense and within very restricted limits, was virtually prohibited."

And so believing, he progressed reasonably enough to a communion, holding the doctrine of baptismal regeneration in all its sequences, and professing to put away sin in all its stages, not by the cross, but a sacrament. To this it leads, whether held clearly or cloudily. And in this connection we must express our satisfaction at the action of our late General Conference in eliminating from the baptismal service every word, sentence and syllable having the most remote squinting in this direction. Not that with us the pardon of sin has ever been thought complicated with any other essential condition than faith in Christ; but language on this subject should not only be understood, but difficult to be misunderstood.

The claims of High-Churchmen involve a demand for a line of history since the New Testament, equally infallible with it. In stead of a religion of experience, it is one of records. The witness of the Spirit needs the corroborating testimony of the "Fathers." Dr. Ives thus stirs up the fears of his quondam associates, referring to the numerous desertions from the Anglican to the Catholic Church—"For who would reside, or think there was no cause, to examine his title deeds while grave doubts concerning them were abroad, and the wisest members of his family were bestirring themselves to make good the tenure of their estates."

If every Christian has to look through the rubbish of a thousand years before he can "read his titles clear," few may rejoice. Some restless antiquarian, prying after old coins and bas reliefs, and stray leaves of history, may turn up a tacit mortgage that even Dr. Ives is not prepared for. Miserable uncertainty! From this quarter the author of "Trials of a Mind" has suffered an anguish that awakes our sympathy for him and his fellowship.

The party to which he belonged rings many changes on—"Hear the Church." The right of private judgment, in matters of faith, is well nigh ignored. Perhaps no bishop of this Church of the Assumption urged its claims, in an episcopate of twenty years, oftener than Dr. Ives. The sequence appears—p. 55:

> "But I now asked myself, in what sense and to what degree she could hold this right, if not in the most unlimited? Where would be my security, if her authority to me was not to be considered absolute and final, and hence infallible? I saw, at once, that any authority which admitted of my own revision or consent before it took effect, could, in a matter of revelation from God, be no authority, and hence no guide. And, therefore, as I had already yielded assent to the Catholic Church by virtue of her Divine Commission, I now felt myself under the necessity of yielding to her without reserve, without question or doubt."

We learn, by the papers, that Mrs. Ives, though for sometime hesitating, has made her submission also. No doubt remains on our mind as to the present sincerity of her husband. And the plea of insanity, by which some would account for his conduct, is simply absurd. He says he has found great peace, and invites on his friends. The cravings and tastes before nurtured, are now fully met. Henceforth no halting reserve:—every thing is claimed. Nice poising is at an end—there is rest.

The state of mind here indicated is not enviable. "The last year and a half of my episcopate was, I can truly say, the most trying, the most painful period of my life; although one of apparent quietness, official success and restored confidence."

Again referring to a certain unsettlement: "It was at this period, as I was performing my last ordination, that I came to the determination never, without entire relief of mind, to repeat it."

Is it, or is it not strange, that he was all this time vigorously unchurching the Methodists and other sects, and inviting them to peace and safety in his fold! Some others may yet make a similar confession.

There is a prospect of good. Some who have edged the precipice of ecclesiasticism, will retreat to the ground occupied, we are glad to believe, by a pious, intelligent and evangelical portion of that communion. The line will be more distinctly drawn between it and High-churchism. Others are past remedy, lingering in an equivocal position, of whom the words of lamentation are true: "The children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth." This book will do a kind office for them.

There is a kindred subject we long to see a book written on, by some one who can bring to the fertile subject qualifications for authorship:—"The trials of a mind in its progress from Methodism to High-church ism." That would be a book worth reading. And some we wot of, who have in the tide of time made the trip, would have rendered service by taking notes on the way and publishing. Room for incident there. Will not somebody yet do it for the benefit of future travellers, or those who are solicited to take the journey? Dr. Ives' book would be a tame affair to it.

The pilgrims that go that way will, we judge, find lanes that have many turns, fall upon strange sights and feelings, and sing as they go—Jordan is a hard road to travel.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT to Senator Benjamin, for a handsome and valuable Pub. Doc.—"The Obituary Addresses on the occasion of the death of ex-Vice President King, delivered in both houses of Congress, Dec. 8, 1853."

LOCAL PREACHERS—EXPLANATION.—Our attention has been invited, by an esteemed friend of the local ministry and another of the traveling, a P. Elder, to an article by Woodsman, on "Clergy-phobia," that appeared in the Advocate sometime ago, as reflecting disrespectfully and injuriously on the local ministry as a class; and this construction which we had not heard of before from any quarter, was supported by reference to a paragraph in a subsequent article of the same writer as Pro tem. We felt no hesitation in assuring those brethren at the time, that the scope and intent of our correspondent had been misunderstood, and that their construction would grieve as well as astonish him, as it does. Of course, there are individuals in every class whose conduct may be animadverted upon without any general reflection: this is true of all classes of the ministry. It is far from us—and as far, doubtless, from our correspondent as ourself—to detract from a body, including some of the holiest and most useful men of the Church; upon whom the Church has, and must continue to rely, and without whom large portions of her territory would be without a preached Gospel.

Rather would we urge their increased responsibilities and consecration in the great work of the ministry, and so shall they everywhere be an arm of service and pillar of strength.

CLERICAL BALDHEADS.

Excuse us! It is a new subject for journalism. View-taking and note-taking at the General Conference—these heads struck us. They are a fair mark, and who shall forbid. A half entertained purpose to present pen and ink etchings of the leading divines then and there assembled, may or may not be carried out further than these—who form, among themselves, a class. There were so many of them. Never, in a body of same size, have we seen so many. Clerical sore-throat is already a name. Clerical baldness passes into the list, too. What is the theory? Any thing in the habit or exercise of the office to cause this? Is it to be taken as a providential endorsement of the tonsure? Be it any way, there is no lack of successors to Elijah in the line of baldheads.

The eloquent and lovely Bishop Capers heads the list with a specimen that has made many a hasty poll envy its exquisite fairness of outline and expression of meekness. In ordinary cases he would be charged with having made it fashionable. He tells a good story at his own expense, that occurred in some of his episcopal travels, out west. A specimen of Young America approaching the back of his chair in mute curiosity, exclaimed—"Mister, you got the longest face, I ever see any body." The toper desired his neck might be as long as a fence-rail, that the dram might be tasted all the way. For a like reason, no one looking upon that face will regret its length.

And there is Dr. Whiteford Smith—the Chrysostom of his Conference—strongly reminding one of the model of a clipper-ship, and as fast sailing and graceful in motion. Indeed it is established on the soundest principles of the inductive philosophy, that this class—baldheads—have a rare fluency of language and thought. There is not an indifferent speaker among them. A facile style, an oily flow, is theirs. They are good to listen to. Is there any law here? Have we stumbled upon a discovery?

And there is Dr. Lee, hearing out our discovery, and McSwane, of S. C.; and Campbell, of Miss., who says what he means to the uttermost, and if not a fire-eater, it is not, for certain, that he is afraid of it. Closs, of the North Carolina delegation, has a force of using "right words" that hearers can testify to. Well do we remember, because we can not, and would not if we could, forget a sermon of his before a congregation of students, twelve years agone, on "Hope maketh not ashamed." It made one of them, since a lawyer, desire to be a preacher, for ambition's sake! When acting the listener he may be gauged with the fidelity of a thermometer. Each stirring thought of the speaker pumps the blood up into his head, with various degrees of intensity, and the last degree would pale a lobster.

Bishop Andrew is pretty bare. Dr. Doggett has gone as far as he dare without falling into this list, and so Dr. Hamilton, both of whom fully sustain its character. Likewise Langhorne, of Va., Dr. Taylor, of Tenn., Fisher, of Texas, McAlister, of Arkansas, and Brock, of Memphis. Others are shedding off, and must sooner or later come to it. Heads, those, that need not be ashamed; and they have the good taste to let alone wigs and other such trumpery. In general, they are as clear as light-houses: in summer, as cool as ice-houses. But we pity them in musquito time and cold weather.

There is one other to be added to this curious catalogue. Nature, in uncovering that head, shows a sample of her best work. We take a slight sketch of him from a series of pulpit portraits, drawn by Col. Lomax, of Georgia, for his paper:

> "There are some men who are not only great indeed, but who look great. Such a man, we presume, was Martin Luther. It is impossible to conceive of the great reformer as a puny little man, with narrow chest and cracked voice. He must have been a broad shouldered giant, who stood upon legs of brass, with a voice which shook the old German Cathedrals like the roll of distant thunder, and a face luminous with intellect and crowned by a brow on which authority sat enthroned. No other man would have dared to lay his hands upon the pillars of the church of Rome which then bestrode the world like a Colossus, and shake down the proud arches which they supported; or if he had, the world would have laughed at him for his presumption.
> Just such a man is Dr. William A. Smith, of Virginia. He is only about five feet and a half high, but his frame is large and knit together with muscles of steel. He is the embodiment of strength, and looks as if he defied the wear of labor. His face and forehead are broad and massive, and his clear blue eye has an undaunted look. He stands erect upon his feet, with his head thrown back, and looks out upon nature and up the heavens, with such unblenching bravery, that one is almost led to think that his mind has struggled with all mysteries, and his heart wrestled with all powers, and found nothing above his capacities. Yet time has left its mark upon him. He is slightly lame and limps in his walk, the result of an accident on a stage coach; his light hair has fallen from his brow; but their defects do not in the least impair the majesty of his presence, they are but the scars of the veteran. And to these rare gifts a loud, orotund voice, which vibrates upon the air like the peal of an organ, and you have before you the intellectual giant of Methodism, and the beau ideal of Anglo Saxon manhood."

EPISCOPAL CONVENTION.

The Church Herald, 9th inst., speaks hopefully of the condition of the P. E. Church in Mississippi, as appearing at the late Convention.

The convention gave permission for the future removal of the "Church Herald" from Vicksburg to Jackson; requested every clergyman in the Diocese to contribute to its columns, and ordered that when removed it should be under the charge of the Bishop and a committee, to be appointed by him.

The third Friday of May, 1855, was selected as the time for the meeting of the next Diocese Convention, at Christ Church, Vicksburg.

The Editor says:—"This body, after a most interesting and harmonious session of [illegible] days, adjourned on Saturday night about 10 o'clock. It is, in many respects, the most remarkable convention held in the Diocese. Every clergyman, with one single exception canonically resident in the Diocese, and entitled to a seat in the convention, was present in his place; while in the lay branch, two parishes were represented. At one time during the session there were twenty-two clergymen in attendance."

Bishop Green seems to be as indestructible as a beaver, and has contributed very materially by his labors and presence to this marked improvement. More than seven thousand miles were traveled by him last year in the performance of his duties, and upwards of [illegible] weeks out of the fifty-two devoted entirely and exclusively to the work, away from his own domestic circle.

The parochial reports show:—"As compared with the returns of last year, the number of families reported had increased from 431 to 576; of Baptisms, from 289 to [illegible] of Confirmations, from 51 to 170; of Communicants, from 572 to 733; of Sunday Scholars, from 431 to 559; the amount of contributions connected with the Church other than rectors' salaries, from $10,708 to $12,342."

We rejoice with our brethren in winning souls to Christ and spreading his kingdom in the earth.

That in these feelings we are not in advance of our Methodist brethren in Mississippi, will be seen by an item with which the report of the Conventional doings closes. We hope this Christian tolerance and courtesy may not fall of provoking a reciprocation—although it is slow a coming; and that every "cause to the contrary may be spiked. It is time one should begin or the other end:—

> "Sunday last was a most interesting day. The pastor of the Methodist church [illegible] kindly gave up that edifice to their Episcopal brethren, and the Rev. Mr. Lawson and the Rev. Mr. Presbury preached there in the morning and evening, to well-filled congregations. At St. Andrew's church, the Rev. Mr. Miller preached in the morning. The church was crowded in every part, and many could not find entrance."

GOD MAKES GREAT MINISTERS.—We find the following anecdote from the National Magazine. It serves to illustrate a very important truth:

> Some twenty-five years ago he was dining with a large party of the clergy of his own denomination, and the discussion turned upon the fact that a number of non-college men, whose names were mentioned, had become eminently successful as preachers and pastors. Facts were stated, opinions, and theories, and ones, were expressed, and the discussion grew warm and animated. Wayland listened with attention, but in silence, apparently thinking that one thing at a time should be attended to; but when the knife and fork had performed their office, he put in a sentence.
> "Brethren, I will tell you how it was done." There was a general silence, and all looked attentively at the speaker, generally expecting the end of the whole matter. "When God makes a man great, it is done." Here he paused, but as no one spoke, he resumed: "The college and books may help a man; but if a preacher ever becomes truly great, it is because God makes him so. He never can be indifferent to the value of learning; but men may be useful, for with faults, as Richard Baxter said of himself, university has to be blamed."

General Intelligence.

THE FISHERY QUESTION SETTLED.—The grand dispute between two of the greatest nations of the earth in regard to the matter of hooking mackerel in certain localities, has, we are told, by a skillful pulling of the lines of diplomacy, at length arrived at the point of a definite settlement. We are glad of it; but, before feeling entirely satisfied, should like to know something more about the terms of the treaty than the assurances that it is all right and cannot fail to be ratified by Congress. Whatever may be the terms of the arrangement, however, it is impossible they should be more humiliating to either nation than the continuation of a foolish quarrel about so trivial a matter.

RUMORS.—The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia American states that President Pierce is preparing a supplemental message on the subject of Cuba, warlike in tone. Also that Mr. Mace, of Indiana, has prepared a bill repealing a portion of the Nebraska bill.

It appears from a card of Mr. Allen, of Louisiana, now on a visit to the East, that the reason why Colonel Suttle refused to sell Burns in Boston, after having promised to do so, was that he ascertained that there was a law in Massachusetts which would have subjected him to fine and imprisonment for selling a slave in that State.

IMPORTANT FROM JAPAN.—The English papers contain the important announcement, under date of Shanghai, April 11, that Com. Perry has succeeded in the object of his visit to Jeddo, and that similar advantages have been obtained for the commerce of this country that had previously been conceded to Russia. The same edifice is contained in both treaties—namely, that three ports are to be opened in a year. There is no reason to question the truth of this statement; as, in our last correspondence from Shanghai, under date of March 27, it was mentioned that Com Perry's arrival from Jeddo was hourly expected. The field which the success of this important negotiation lays open to our commerce is immense. [N. Y. Herald, 8th.

LETTER FROM HAVANA.—The Washington Evening Star of the 9th inst gives the following extract from a letter from Havana, lately received at Washington, and bearing date 29th May:

"The free negro and mulatto population, it will be remembered, showed signs of great repugnance to the idea of their incorporation into the army four weeks ago, when the news that the Government designed using them after that fashion first became known in the shape of flying and somewhat doubtful rumors. Their idea then was, that they were merely about to be used as a bait, for some unknown purpose. Hence the then existing repugnance to the project, on their part. But no sooner was the order of the 26th of May promulgated formally, than they rushed forward in masses to enlist. They were made to comprehend that they are to comprise quite a third of the entire military force of the Government on the Island, and are to serve in all the various regiments in detached Spaniss, four to each battalion; and thus this change took place in their sentiments. Even now the square of Belen, the point at which they are being enlisted, is full of them, almost suffocation. Their impatient cries for arms forbode impending ruin, and generate universal horrors. Wealthy planters, well affected towards the Government, and others who up to this time have been disposed to maintain the present order of things here, having very recently got up a petition to the Captain General on this subject, that functionary has signified to some of his intimate friends who were about to it, that he should look upon the act as one of insubordination, and would regard the signers of any such remonstrance as mauvais sujets, and would mark them accordingly.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—It has already been announced to you that the Spanish Government had agreed to remit the fine of $6000 imposed on the owners of the Black Warrior. It now appears by the dispatches and letters to the English and English Ministers, to our own Government and to others in this city, that the British Government positively refused to allow any damage that may have resulted to the owners of the Black Warrior. But the English Government, fearing a rupture between Spain and the United States, interposed at this point in the negotiations and induced Spain to agree to pay all reasonable losses. Spain has accordingly asked our Government for an estimate of the actual damages. This difficulty, therefore, so far as money is concerned, may be considered settled. [Telegraphed to the N. Y. Herald.

INTERESTING FROM ST. JOHN'S.—New York, June 8.—The St John's (N. B.) papers of the 1st inst. are filled with articles on the coming elective elections, free trade being the prominent topic. A religious element appears to be involved in the contest. The St. John's News charges that the Roman Catholic Bishop has put forth an edict commanding all Roman Catholics to vote against Messrs. Wilmot and Ray. The Times called upon all Protestants to rally and crush Popery.

Her Britannic Majesty's cutter Netley had arrived from Halifax for the protection of the fisheries in the Bay of Fundy.

Flour, corn and corn meal are to be admitted in Prince Edward's Island free of duty until October.

The Government armed steamer Daring sailed from Halifax for the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the 27th ult., to protect the fisheries.

The Artesian well near Frederick, Md., has reached a depth of 460 feet, and the water is flowing freely and continues to increase. It is expected to furnish a hundred and fifty gallons a minute when completed.

A gentlemen of this city is now engaged in the construction of a flying machine, which he is confident will prove entirely successful. He has devoted much time to the study of aerostation, and the means adopted by nature to secure rapid flight of birds, and his machine is very ingenious. We are not prepared to decide upon its ability to fly with a man upon its back. If we see the inventor launching from Mount Auburn some fine morning, and sailing over the city to the green hills of Kentucky, we will no longer doubt the virtues of this bird-like invention, with its immense bamboo wings and gas-inflated stomach. The Fugitive Slave Excitement.

The fanatical excitement consequent upon the rendition of the fugitive slave Burns does not seem to abate yet in the least. The Abolition newspapers of the North come to us filled with paragraphs of the most inflammatory and seditious character. The powerful and dangerous pen of Grosley, the weaker but more foul vituperations of such sheets as the Washington Era, and the senseless, blasphomous harangues of Abolition leaders to clubs, mass meetings, and even in the halls of legislation, are all at work—at work as if with one sole object, the destruction of all harmony, confidence, and good feeling between the North and South. In such a condition of things as seems to exist at present throughout the country, it is natural to ask if these agitators take at all into consideration the dangers which attend their conduct, and what value they place upon the union of these States. How many such scenes as that recently enacted in Boston will be required to raise up a civil war between the North and the South—a calamity more to be dreaded than a combination of all the nations of the earth against our existence? And, once commenced, who shall foresee what will be the result of such a war or where the end?

MOBILE ITEMS.—An affray occurred on the 12th inst. somewhere near the store of Mr. Hendrix, on Spring Hill road, between Mr. John Stuckey and Mr. R. T. Price, both well known in Mobile, in which Mr. Stuckey received three stabs or cuts with a knife, which, it is supposed, are likely to prove fatal.

We have in our office, says the Mobile Tribune, a sample of a hair of cotton, raised by General C. Robinson, of Lowndes county, which, so far as silkiness and staple are concerned, is the best we have ever seen in this market. It was bought by Messrs. Low & Harrison at fifteen cents per pound.

The project for the improvement of the Mobile harbor, by the diversion of the waters of Spanish river into the channel of Mobile river, is being vigorously presented among the Mobile merchants, capitalists and business men. The cost will be $30,000; the sum of $27,500 has already been raised.

A MARVELOUS SNAKE STORY.—According to the Richmond Bulletin, (and it says its authority is reliable,) Mr. William H. Cole, of Caroline county, Va., lately killed in his field a huge black snake, and upon cutting the reptile open, found snugly stowed away in the stomach five young hares. But the most wonderful part of the story yet remains to be told. One of the hares, which must have been but recently swallowed, revived shortly after it was taken from the body of the snake, and ran away into the bushes!

EXAMINATION OF THE RIOTERS IN BOSTON.—A considerable number of persons were examined before the Boston Police Court on the 6th inst. on charges of riot and murder. The testimony published is voluminous, and the examination was very long. Walter Bishop, Martin Stowell, Thos. Jackson and John Morrison were remanded to jail for trial for murder.

A. G. Browne, Jr., Walter Phœnix and John Wesley were discharged on the complaint for murder. They were then arraigned for a riot, and, waiving examination, were held in $8000 each for trial, obtaining bail.

Nicholas Bain, charged with the murder of Mr. and Mrs. Wickham, at Catchogne, Suffolk county, L. I., was captured on the 5th inst. by the people, who were in search of him. The murderer, finding his case desperate, and no chance for escape, attempted suicide by cutting his throat, and afterwards threw himself among some bushes for concealment, where he was found. The wound, it is said, will not prove fatal.

STORM ON THE SOUTHERN COAST.—The steamer Seminole, on her recent passage from the St. Johns river, Florida, to Savannah, experienced a tremendous gale when about twenty miles at sea. The heavy waves broke over her many times, stave in her bulwarks, one of her wheelhouses, and inundating her after cabin. During the storm the mail bags were washed overboard and lost.

A hundred or more Scotch girls recently arrived, have gone to work in the Holyoke, Mass., mills. They were sent for. Scotch girls, we believe, are considered as belonging to the best class of factory operatives. They are industrious, thrifty and economical. They are the veritable Yankees of Britain.

ABOLITION SYMPATHY.—The latest nine days' wonder—the Boston abolition mob—experienced a slight relapse on Saturday. A black fellow went among the sympathizers, representing himself to be a fugitive slave; that his master was in search of him, and that he wanted funds in order to escape into Canada. He succeeded in raising a considerable sum of money, but was at last recognized and taken into custody.

A large elephant, attached to a menagerie, while on his way to Fall River, R. I., on the 5th inst., got beyond the control of his keeper, and killed three horses, smashed the wagons to pieces, seriously injuring two men who were in the wagons. He was finally captured near Slade's Ferry.

BITE OF MAD DOGS.—An English Journal says that an old Saxon has been using for fifty years, and with perfect success, a remedy for the bite of mad dogs, by the agency of which he has rescued many fellow beings and cattle from the fearful death of hydrophobia." The remedy is to wash the wound immediately with warm vinegar and tepid water, dry it, and then apply a few drops of muriatic acid, which will destroy the poison of the saliva, or neutralize it, and the cure is effected.

A SORRY PICTURE.—A writer in the New York Daily Times says the following in regard to our foreign population:

As to foreigners: In the first place, every demand that can reasonably be made of the American people is, that in making our country "the asylum of the oppressed," we permit all men, of whatever nation or religion, to reside among us in safety, pursuing any and every vocation without let or hindrance, to their own profit; holding any and every opinion, without question or observation; and in all ways enjoying as fully as the native citizen the advantages of our Government and institutions. Clearly, the right to govern us, or to have any share or influence in our own self-government, has never been promised in any manner whatever to those who find in the United States a refuge from oppression, the blessings of liberty, and the unrestricted choice of means of support or of riches. To the poor fools who inquire how long our own fathers have been Americans, I have no reply; it is not the business of a man to hold debate with such creatures—it were as well to enter my house and attempt to drive me out, on the pretence that it had been in my family but for two generations.

I beg you to consider seriously these few facts: the foreign population of the United States is about as one to fifteen, but, notwithstanding this disparity, which must astonish those who are familiar with the noise of their partisanship, four-fifths of all the beggary, more than two-thirds of all the pauperism, and more than three-fifths of all murders, riots, rapes, burglaries, arsons, thefts, perjuries, forgeries, and other great crimes committed in this country, are committed by this small per centage of the whole population. More than half the public charities, more than half the prisons, more than half the police, more than half the cost and labor of the administration of our internal affairs, are for foreigners—for a class without virtue, and ignorant and brutal, corrupting all with whom they come in contact.

Late News from Mexico

We have received our files of Mexican papers per steamship Orizaba. Our latest dates are to the 4th from the city of Mexico and to the 8th from Vera Cruz. The several files we have examined are barren of political news.

Senor Don Luis Parres, Minister of Finance, had resigned his office, and Don Manuel Olazagarre, a merchant of Guadalajara, was spoken of as his successor.

Senor Don Ramon Lozano Armenta, Spanish Envoy to Mexico, was received with marked distinction and respect by the Government and his many friends. As Mr. Lozano Armenta had had been Secretary of the Spanish legation in Mexico for many years, he was well known and had made himself very popular there.

El Siglo Diez y Nueve of the 3d publishes the names of 43 persons that have been shot in the State of Jalisco, from 10th July to 31st December, 1853, by order of Senor José Marin Ortega, Governor of that State. Those men were court-martialed and sentenced to death convicted of having committed some robberies and of being seditious.

The same paper states that the small pox is raging at Vera Cruz and in the rancheos of San Andres Tuxtla, as well as in the villages of Acula, Amatlan and Tesechoacan.

Forty-one prisoners escaped from the jail at Saltillo on the 14th ult. They dug a hole through the floor, in which operation they worked hard for ten hours, and made their escape by that means. Eighteen of the fugitives were recaptured.

Subscriptions are being raised all over the country to erect a statue to His Most Serene Highness the President Santa Anna. At San Juan Bautista $527 had been raised for that purpose.

The Governor of Vera Cruz had sent a deputation to the city of Mexico to welcome his Most Serene Highness, and congratulate him at his great triumph in conquering the rebels of the South.

Great preparations were going on at Vera Cruz, Quéretaro, San Juan del Rio and other places, to celebrate with great pomp the anniversary of His Most Serene Highness's birthday.

The village of Amatlan was almost totally destroyed by fire on the 29th ultimo. The fire originated by the dress of a girl, who was making chocolate, having caught fire in the hearth. Over eighty houses (or rather huts) were totally destroyed, and the inhabitants are represented to be in the greatest distress and misery.

A decree has been published in the city of Mexico by which it is required that persons under 70 inches, Mexican measure, will not be admitted to enlist in the army. The Grenadiers of the guard must be 72 inches (six feet.)

The Trait d' Union of the 3d inst. publishes a letter from Guaymas dated 24th May from which we extract the following:

"On the 19th, the British ship Challenge arrived here, in seventeen days from San Francisco. She brings on board 300 Frenchmen for the Mexican army, according to contract entered into with the Mexican Consul at San Francisco, said contract being approved of by Mr. Dillon, the French Consul at said port. There are besides 21 Germans, 5 Belgians, 19 Englishmen, 1 American, 4 Spaniards and Portuguese, 8 Chilians, 2 Equatorians, 1 from the Argentine Republic, 1 Swiss, 1 Italian, 1 Polish, 1 from Bogota and 12 Mexicans; making a total of 377 men, who are now at the disposal of the General Commander of Sonora. Several other vessels are daily expected with a large number of emigrants."

The same paper publishes another letter from Guaymas dated 14th May, in which we find the following:

"Five prisoners, belonging to the Walker expedition, were shipped, by order of the Mexican authorities, on board the British ship Ethelbert, in order to take them to Mazatlan, where they were to be tried.

"When the Ethelbert was about setting sail, a boat from the British ship Dido boarded the former, and as soon as it was near enough, the five prisoners jumped into the boat. A Mexican officer ordered his men to fire on them. On hearing the report of the muskets, the Dido let down all her boats, and about one hundred men boarded the Ethelbert and carried away the prisoners by force, disarming the soldiers that had charge of them. A physician and the captain of the port were immediately sent on board the Ethelbert by the Mexican commander at Guaymas, to attend to the wounded; but the British crew would not allow the captain of the port to go on board. The military commander of Guaymas had a correspondence with the captain of the Dido, the result of which was, that the latter gave up on the 10th May the Mexicans whom he had on board. The Ethelbert left Guaymas for Mazatlan on the 11th, taking dispatches to the British Minister in Mexico. On the 12th the crew of the British vessel were practicing with four gun boats, firing their guns very near the wharf. The Dido was to sail on the 15th for Mazatlan, to await orders from the British Legation in Mexico. No one was killed in the fight; one of the parties wounded by one of the musket shots was fast recovering."

A rumor was current at Nuevo Leon on the 18th May that a revolution was about to break out at Matamoros and other points in the northern part of Tamaulipas.

A large conducta from Guadalajarn and Guarajuato was detained in the city of Mexico for several days, but we cannot find out on what account.

The papers of the 1st inst. announce that His Serene Highness had decided that the conducta should start for Vera Cruz on the 21, without further excuse or pretext, and that the consignees should be made to pay the circulation tax.

The Mexicans are quite delighted with their opera companies. The Sontag company is styled the "Russian party," and Steffanone's company the "Turkish forces." Senor Bordas, of the Orleans Theatre in this city, had arrived in Mexico, and made his first appearance on the 1st inst. as Othello.

The Siglo denies most positively that Mr. Levasseur is to return to Mexico as Envoy Extraordinary of the French Government.

A new commercial code has been published in Mexico, and a Chamber of Commerce was on the eve of being regularly organized.

The papers we have examined do not mention a word about Alvarez or his "rebels."

Good Father Mathew has had another shock of the palsy. The physicians have advised him to try the sir of Madeira. He does not avail himself of the advice for one reason only—he is poor. He did have a pension of £300. But to secure a debt contracted, not for himself, but for the temperance cause, which has been so dear to him, it was all paid to obtain a life insurance policy. A Limerick paper is the authority for this statement, which will make many friends sad.

COWARDICE.—Theodore Parker and Wendell Phillips, after lashing the crowd to a pitch of insanity, which resulted in murder, called on the police to protect their own houses from the mob, and charged the excitement upon the U. S. Marshal and the Commissioner, who were quietly carrying out the laws of their country.

THREE GIRLS BURNED TO DEATH.—Three daughters of the Rev. Mr. Perry, Methodist clergyman, residing near Harrisburg, Ky., were recently burned to death by the explosion of a can containing camphene. They were aged 19, 17 and 9 years.

Attack on an American Boat in China.

[From the North-China Herald of March 11.]

On Monday evening about dusk, as Mr. Ayer's pilot-boat, flying the American flag, was coming up the reach, one of the Taoutae's vessels, the Clown, fired a shot at her. The boat, in which was Mr Linklater and six Chinese, was soon hailed round under the Compton, and the officer on board ordered the Chinese sailors upon deck and had them tied up to the mainmast, but allowed Mr. Linklater to go away, after having overhauled the boat. As soon as Mr. Ayer was informed of this proceeding he laid his complaint before the United States Consul, who referred him to Captain Kelly, and he accordingly went on board the United States ship Plymouth, and Captain Kelly, upon hearing of the assault, very promptly manned a boat, which was placed under command of Lieut. Guest, who proceeded immediately to the Compton and asked for the captain, who was not to be found. At last a Portuguese on board the Compton said he was in command, and Lieut. Guest at once demanded "how he dared to make prisoners of men under the American flag?" and demanded their release. The Portuguese replied he did not do it, and that he had no authority to set them free. Whereupon Lieut. Guest ordered his men on board, which was done with the greatest alacrity, and cut the prisoners from the mainmast, where they had been tied by the hair.

It was observed at this moment that some men on the poop of the vessel were loveling their muskets at the American officer and Mr Linklater, who accompanied him. Lieut Guest very energetically leveled his revolver at the Portuguese, telling him that un, the first shot being fired he would blow his brains out. The Portuguese, in great alarm, immediately ordered his men to desist. The crew and boat were then taken off without further hindrance. There is no plea offered for this gross insult to the American flag, except that the boat had some shot on board, which it is in the habit of carrying for ballast.

Mr. Murphy, the United States Consul, in correspondence with the Taoutae on this subject, has laid down the doctrine that, under no pretence whatever, shall property or persons while under the protection of the United States flag be molested by the Chinese authorities with impunity. But if any claim is supposed by them to exist against persons or property under the United States flag, the complaint must be made to him, the only person known in the treaty to have the power of settlement.

The promptitude with which the United States Consul and Captain Kelly attended to this complaint, and the energy with which Lieut. Guest carried out his instructions, which were of a very delicate and difficult nature, are very praiseworthy, and we hope will check the insolent bearing of those in command of the ex-Taoutae's ships, who are frequently firing, on some frivolous pretence, upon boats passing up and down the river.

The Great Riot in Brooklyn.

From the N. Y. Tribune of the 5th inst. we take the following particulars of the riot in Brooklyn, some accounts of which we had already received by telegraph:

A terrible scene was enacted in Main street, between Water street and the Catherine Ferry, last evening about dusk. A number were shot, and many were badly injured with clubs and stones.

The cause of all this was the appearance of a procession of New York Native Americans, against whom the Irish located in the immediate neighborhood had a grudge in consequence of the previous Sunday's proceedings. This was the cause of all the disturbance.

As had been announced on Sunday evening of last week, a preacher attached to the Primitive Methodist Church of Bridge street appeared upon the lot on the corner of Smith and Atlantic streets at the appointed time, and delivered a sermon. His name is Joseph Folger, and he was accompanied and assisted in the exercises by the trustees and officers of his church. The text was part of the second verse of the fifteenth chapter of St Luke—"This man receiveth sinners"—from which he argued that Christ preached to all kinds of people—to mixed multitudes of different faiths, such as were gathered here on this occasion. Previous to the sermon, a prayer was made in which the hope was expressed that all these people round about might be made better instead of worse by coming there. The services passed off quietly, no disposition being evinced to molest the preacher or disturb the proceedings.

The procession from New York arrived some time before the sermon commenced. They numbered probably about a hundred or more, three abreast, and marched and countermarched up and down Atlantic street, awaiting the arrival of the preacher, when they came up and stood until the sermon was over, when they proceeded down Smith street toward the Catherine Ferry, in the same order that they came.

From 12 o'clock, noon, a crowd began to assemble, and about 5 o'clock it numbered over 6000. The Mayor, the Chief of Police, and the whole disposable force under their command, were present. By the exertions of the Mayor, the sidewalks were kept clear so that people could pass unmolested, and not, like on previous occasions, be compelled to go around the distance of several blocks, or run the risk of the consequences. He deserves great credit for his firm stand he took and the promptness evinced in seeing his orders executed.

During the afternoon there were some slight disturbances on the corner of Smith and Atlantic streets, in which a number of white hats were knocked off, but no further damage was done. The offenders were promptly arrested.

The New York procession on proceeding down toward the ferry were followed by a large crowd. They walked in an orderly and peaceable manner. An occasional hoot or cheer greeted them, and that was all until they reached Main and Water streets. Here, and streets leading thereto, an immense crowd had congregrated, and as about half of the procession had passed Water street a general cry was made by the Irish, "Hip, boys, hip!" "Now go in!" "Come on, boys!" and with that came a showers of stones, sticks and brickbats, which were leveled at the New-Yorkers. A grand rush was now made, but the line of the procession remained unbroken, and marched to the ferry-house gate, and entered with military precision. As they were assaulted they fired pistols at those who struck at them, and it is probable that about thirty shots were fired. Several were shot; one a boy who had part of his face taken off, and a man who fell upon the pavement apparently dead, and a great many more had their heads, arms and legs broken with clubs. Pistols were also fired from house-tops, and stones fell like hail in every direction. The New Yorkers were within the gates, and as they were being pelted they fired a number of shots at the crowd without.

One of the ferry boats took off a load of the New Yorkers, but the pilots of the two remaining boats, seeing what was going on, would not enter the dock, but stood off during the continuance of the riot. They finally entered the slip, and all those not arrested were permitted to take their departure.

The police had hard work. They had to fight like tigers. No matter of what country, and many of them were Irish, they did their duty manfully. When one would attempt to take a man into custody, he was sure to be beaten with clubs, and several were badly hurt. They also used their clubs freely, and knocked down all who resisted them, when they could do it.

The military came upon the ground after the disturbance had ceased. They had been stationed at the Armory during the afternoon awaiting orders. The Mayor came with them, and as he walked down Main street, read the riot act. The Sheriff also appeared upon the scene of action, and the military were stationed so as to prevent any further outbreak. The mob was cleared away and quiet was restored. This was about 8 o'clock.

The Regiment on duty was the 14th, under Col. Jesse C. Smith, and comprised the following companies: Franklin Guard, Capt. Baldwin; National Guard, Capt. Sprague; Grenadiers, Capt. Burnett; Steuben Guard, Capt. Schepper; Emmet Guard, Capt. ——; Shields Guard, Capt. McCurty; Capt. Urbeen's company of Horse Guards were ordered also out. They were on guard during the night.

The names of some of those arrested and now in custody are as follows: James McDermott, M. Mahon, John Devoe, Oliver Hice, James Dougherty, James O'Brien, Arthur O'Neal, Patrick McKinney, Henry Brasslen, Thomas Cain, Charles Murphy, Thomas Henry, Arch. Hanlin, Bernard McDonald, John Slade, Daniel McDermott, (head fractured) Patrick Boyle, William McNamee, Hugh McCloskey, Francis Mack, Pat Larkins, Michael Martin, Edward Lake, James Canning, John Ennis, Thomas Fitzgerald, Thos. Jackson, James Cook, Michael Fitzsimmons and about twenty others, who are locked up in the cells of the First and Second District Station-Houses.

In the confusion that prevails it was impossible to ascertain if any one, or how many, were killed or wounded. Two are reported dead.

MORE INDIAN MURDERS.—The San Antonio Ledger of the 1st inst. has a letter from Magoffinsville, Texas, which states that a Mr. Hedges, on his way to California, with a drove of cattle, a few days previously encountered a band of one hundred and ten Indians between the Rio Limpia and Eagle Springs. The Indians gave every manifestation of a friendly feeling, and were received by Mr. Hedges and party in like manner. The Chief of the Indians presented a letter to Mr. H. as a testimonial of his friendship towards the whites. This letter was signed by Col. Caprou, Indian Agent, etc., etc. The names of the Chiefs were as follows: Pena, Solidita, Mescaleros and Marcos, who is a Lipan.

These Indians were well armed with shot guns and rifles. During their stay at the camp of the Americans (which was one day and a part of the next) they insisted that there should be no guard kept around the cattle, and stated that they would be responsible for all losses that might be sustained, and wished to know of Mr. H. if he were not satisfied with their letters. A beef was given to the Indians, and they retired, not being well satisfied with the sufficiency of the gift, and complaining that the same was not enough to supply so large a party with food.

Early the next morning, after the Indians left, Mr. H. sent the best cattle ahead to Eagle Springs, (the cattle being very nearly exhausted for want of water,) with ten men of his party in charge of them. Upon reaching the spring, two of the party went ahead with a view of reconnoitering, when the Indians, numbering eighty warriors, emerged from the canons in which they were concealed, surrounding the spring, and killed the two men who were in advance. The cattle were then all driven off instantly.

The number of cattle taken was 176. The names of the two unfortunate persons killed were Ingram and McLoughlin. The party who were with the cattle have in their possession the most indubitable evidences that they were the identical Indians who made proffer of the letters on the occasion alluded to.

HORRIBLE MURDER ON LONG ISLAND.—From the New York Tribune of the 5th we gather the particulars of a most awful murder, which took place on the 2d instant, as below:

About twelve o'clock on Friday night, two servant girls in the employ of Mr. James Wickham, at Catchogne, in Southold-town, L. I., were awakened by the cries of some of the inmates of the house, and on listening, heard repeated blows, as if some body was being struck on the head, and also heard Mrs. Wickham exclaim, "Nicholas, don't kill him, don't kill him." Upon this, the girl, supposing that Mr. Wickham was being murdered, got out of an attic window and fled to the nearest neighbors, and gave the alarm.

The house was immediately visited, and presented a horrible spectacle. Mr. Wickham, who was formerly a merchant in this city, and a wealthy farmer, lay weltering in his blood, his head cut literally to pieces, and apparently in the last gasp of his existence; and when our informant left the scene he was yet breathing, although unconscious, with no hope of his recovery. Mrs. Frances Wickham, his wife, was dead, she having had her brains completely knocked out, which, together with her blood, was scattered about the room. Mrs. W. was but thirty-five years of age. A negro boy about fifteen years old, who was living in the family, was also beat and cut about the head to such an extent that he cannot survive his injuries; and he too is in such a condition as to be unable to give any account of the desperate murderer. The deed was committed with a post-axe, an implement used for the purpose of boiling posts for fences.

From the cries of Mrs. Wickham, which were heard by the servant girls, it is suspected that an Irishman, whose name is Nicholas Bain, and who had been in the employ of Mr. W., but was discharged on Wednesday, is the perpetrator of this horrid deed; but no traces of him had been found up to yesterday afternoon.

It is the opinion of the inhabitants that he sought to be revenged upon Mr W for discharging him, and determined to murder his whole family. He some time since desired to marry one of the servant girls; but, on her refusing to have him, he swore vengeance against her. Nothing in the house was carried away, which indicates that revenge instead of robbery instigated the monster to the perpetration of this horrid crime. He will not probably long elude the officers of justice.

At the latest accounts Mr. Wickham had died, but the negro boy was still alive, groaning at intervals, but no hopes were entertained of his recovery. The murderer had not been arrested but the authorities were on the alert.

Recent discoveries and examinations in Great Britain have rendered it absolutely certain that ferœ natura of that island were, in times gone by, larger and more dangerous than the fallow deer and the fox. The natives, long before the days of Caractacus and Julius Cæsar, hunted wild beasts as large and ferocious as any to be found in the tangled and luxuriant forests of Ceylon. Elephants and hyenas, at a period of which tradition even says nothing, were not confined to the Zoological Gardens of London, but roamed over the hills and through the great oak forests of Great Britain. Geologists and naturalists have, by an intelligent examination and study of old bones dug up in various parts of the kingdom, rendered the fact certain. Bones, recently exhumed at a great depth, by laborers digging gravel in Covent Garden, have been ascertained to be those of the elephant. Similar relics have been found at a great depth below the surface of the earth, in all portions of the island. In 1806, the entire bones of an elephant, with the stratifications of wax know not how many centuries above him, were found near Hoxton, in England; an elephant skull, tusks and all, were dug up at Kingsland some years ago, forty feet beneath the surface of the earth. The Druids, no doubt, three thousand years ago, may have "seen the elephant" to whom these bones belonged, while they celebrated their mysterious rites of their religion, in the recesses of the primitive forests of England. That these huge animals disappeared long before the Britons invaded Great Britain, is demonstrated by the circumstance that the bones of the Roman soldiers are found much nearer the surface of the earth—three times nearer—than those of the elephant.

In digging on the Great Western Railway from Oxford, the "Roswell Bone Caves" were found, containing the most astonishing evidences of the existence at one time in England, not only of the elephant but of the rhinoceros and the hyena. They were discovered in sinking a shaft deep into a hill. In these caves an incredible number of bones were found, of the elephant, the bear, the rhinoceros, the hyena, and the ordinary domestic animals. At a period perhaps almost coeval with the deluge, these animals may have been as numerous in Great Britain as they now are in the region of the Tropics. The eighth volume of "Household Words" contains a long and curious article upon this subject.

A CURIOUS STRUCTURE.—The nest of a tarantula (spider) has been found in California, of most singular construction. It is about three inches in length by two in diameter, built of adobes, the wall being nearly half an inch thick. Inside is a projection, which nearly divides it into two apartments about an inch in diameter. The inside is lined with a white downy substance, not unlike velvet, and presents one of the cleanest and most tidy little household imaginable. But the most curious part of it is the door, which fits into an aperture and closes it hermetically. The door is secured by a hinge, formed of the same fibrous substance as the lining of the house, and upon which it swings with freedom. The nest is occupied by a dozen little tarantulas, which appear to subsist upon a yellow secreted substance that appears upon the wall of the front apartment. The arrangement of the door for the protection of the little inmates indicates great instinctive architectural knowledge. It is the intention of the finder to forward this curiosity to the Smithsonian Institute at Washington.

Crops, Weather, etc

The Columbus (Ind.) Democrat says: "We are informed by farmers of this county, that the wheat crop promises fair for more than an average yield. Letter exchanges from different sections of the country also speak favorably of the prospect of an abundant yield."

WHEAT CROP.—The Warrenton (Va.) Flag says: "The wheat crops are looking unusually well in the counties of Halifax, Pittsylvania and Henry, and from present appearances the crop will be a large and good one.

The Romney (Va.) Intelligencer says: "The fly is destroying the wheat in a very great extent. Several farmers will scarcely make their seed."

The Banner of Liberty (Md.) says: "We believe that we will have a good crop."

WHEAT IN TENNESSEE.—The Chattanooga Advertiser says: "The present indications are much more favorable to the wheat crop than we expected. We have conversed with several farmers, who pronounce the prospects as quite flattering."

The Holly Springs (Miss.) Democratic Banner of the 2d inst. says:

"We have had almost daily heavy rains for the last two weeks. The corn crop seems to be doing finely. The cotton is smaller than we ever saw it before at this time, and has suffered for work during the late rains."

The Minden (La.) Herald says the country in that vicinity has been deluged with rain, and much injury has been done to the crops.

A superabundance of rain is complained of in the northern part of Texas, but the crops generally are promising.

The Natchitoches Chronicle of the 3d says:

"The weather, since our last week's issue, has been getting worse and worse. Every day during the week we have had showers, and copious too, of rain. From every section of the parish we hear complaints of the wet weather and the consequent injury of the crops."

"On Wednesday evening, we were visited with a severe storm of wind, rain and hail. The damage done in the neighborhood of Campte, we are informed, is considerable. Indeed, all over the parish the crops are in rather an unpromising condition."

THE KEY TO ST. PETERSBURG.—An occasional correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer, writing from London, gives the following interesting sketch of Cronstadt, the key of St. Petersburg:

"Batteries are fine things to look at, but not so serviceable against ships as the uninitiated might suppose. It is rare, indeed, that more than six guns can be brought to bear upon a single ship from the same battery; on the other hand, a ship will deliver a broadside of fifty guns direct upon a single gun; and all the balls, thanks to the gunnery and Admiral Chada, the second in command, will strike within a few inches of each other. To use the expression of a naval friend, 'the balls will strike as though they were delivered from a tube.' Most of the batteries are low, so low that a line of battle ship could deliver its own balls down into them. Again, it is stated that these separate fortresses can be taken singly, and thee each fortress can be employed against his fellow. Large vessels can get to Cronstadt. Merchant ships get there, and therefore many of the squadron can approach the fortresses. Once destroy these, and though the depth of the Neva is only nine feet, still the gun boats will be sufficient to destroy St. Petersburg. The Imoya have been destroyed; but, on the other hand, the vessels have steam power, and can feel their way and back out of shallow water.

The city of St. Petersburg is defended by these fortresses of Cronstadt, which are situated about twenty miles below the city, on the Neva. Now, reports are very different about the strength of these said fortresses, and apparently the whole question depends upon the depth of water in the channel. If only gunboats and steamers can approach them, then they are safe; but if the present fleets can get within effective range, then they are not sufficiently strong to resist their broadsides, and St. Petersburg is at the mercy of Sir Charles Napier. According to one account, furnished to me by one who has seen the fortresses, they are impregnable, and may be justly regarded as the keys of the empire; but then he left the country at a time of peace, when the power of Cronstadt was received as a matter of course, and no one thought of questioning it.

Another informant tells me that he has seen them often during the last summer excursions, and that it was well understood in St. Petersburg that many portions of the batteries were almost dummies; that the guns in several situations were not intended to be used, as they would be more dangerous to the defenders than to the parties against whom they were fired. This informant has been ordered out of Russia, with all other English.

SAD AFFAIR AT ST. JOHN, N. B.—Considerable excitement has existed here for the last fortnight, in consequence of the sudden disappearance of a young lady, the daughter of Aaron Eaton, Esq., of the firm of Eaton & Ray, shipowners. Miss Eaton was about eighteen years of age. It appears that about twelve months ago she had a violent attack of fever, which caused mental aberration.

About two months since her reason returned, when parents and friends began to cherish hope of perfect restoration. On the evening of her disappearance, about half-past eight o'clock, she was sitting with her sister at home, apparently in the happiest spirits, joking and laughing, and enjoying a round of merriment, when the hall door announced a visitor. She arose (not caring since her illness to see any friends) and retired, telling her sister that she was going to her room for the night. It appears she did proceed to her apartment, drew on her rubbers, threw a shawl over her shoulders, placed her bonnet on, and secretly made her exit from the house. One half hour had not been allowed to pass before she was missed; friends and relatives were hastily alarmed, and diligent search was immediately made, but without success.

In the morning large rewards were offered for her recovery, and parties of three or four hundred scoured the city and woods in the vicinity of the city four or five successive days and nights, but no tidings of the missing one could be obtained. The search was abandoned, and frenzy almost seized the heart sickened and grieving parents, whose only solace seemed to exist in the belief that in the cunning of insanity she had concealed herself, and that in a little while she would appear to them. Thus days wore on, when on the morning of Sunday last, (ten days from the time of her disappearance,) as some parties were sauntering along the beach of Courtney bay, they suddenly came upon the lifeless body of the lost girl. Her countenance evinced that, unconscious of agony, she had died. Her bonnet was clutched in one hand, while the other laid upon her breast, as though she was slumbering, while upon her lips still lingered a smile. [Toronto Colonist.

A PUZZLE FOR ENTOMOLOGISTS.—A gentleman of Manchester, England, possesses a beetle of such extraordinary character that entomologists know not what to think of it. "I should say," observed Mr. Curtis, at the last meeting of the London Ethnological Society, "it has the head of a tortoise, the tusks of a walrus, the legs of a kangaroo, and certainly the strength

What is a Congreve Rocket?

Whoever has stood upon a fortification near a cannon when fired, will have noticed the recoil, or backward movement of the piece on its wheels. More feelingly the force of the recoil will manifest itself to the rock-shooter, who, firing skyward many times in succession, often gets punished for his wanton destruction of carnivine-life, by a trusted shoulder, or occasionally even a broken collar-bone.

Now, in all ordinary cases, it is the object of the gunmaker—understanding the term gun in its generic sense, including cannon as well as small arms, to deaden or diminish this force of recoil. As concerns small fire-arms, more especially rifles and pistols, any considerable recoil is most injurious, as it throws the barrel out of the due line of aim; and this is the chief reason why so great a weight of metal is put into such barrels. In the case of pieces of ordnance, it will be found that the force of recoil, when it goes beyond a certain extent, not only disarranges the aim, but renders the piece unmanageable, more especially on board ship.

Let us suppose, now, that the cannon on the fortification is charged—is discharged—and recoils. The explosion, however, being instantaneous, the recoil soon comes to an end. If the explosion were susceptible of prolongation, and if the mouth of the cannon could be maintained by some device in the original position, then the best way of attacking an enemy, supposing the expense of a cannon to be no object, would be to turn the breech of the gun towards him, and allowing it to take flight through the air like any other projectile. This motion may cause a smile; but we do not know in what manner the general theory of rockets could be rendered so intelligible, as by commencing where we have commenced—with the recoil of a gun. A rocket, in point of fact, may be described as a gun charged with a slow burning combustible, so that when discharged, or rather ignited, it rapidly recoils, first a little, then a little more, and so goes add more, until the force of recoil imparts to the mass a power proportionate to its weight multiplied by its velocity.

Most people have seen a sky-rocket; many have examined it perhaps; still more have traced the fiery course of the beautiful protechnic ornament as it mounted aloft with arrow-like velocity, then watched its graceful bend and final distribution of variegated stars. Lastly, most persons are cognizant, we presume, of the fact that each rocket is furnished with a stick, serving the purpose of a rudder, or a tail. Now, the sky-rocket is propelled in consequence of its recoil. Were we to retain the idea with which we commenced our description, we should say repelled, in consequence of this recoil; but inasmuch as recoil becomes in the rocket the primary or chief force, we had better, from this period to the end of the paper, turn our ideas of recoil upside down. As for this stick, or rudder, the reader may denominate it as he pleases—its use is to keep the mouth or aperture of the rocket, from which the flame escapes, continually downwards. It is tied laterally to the rocket. If it admitted of being affixed centrally, then the flight of the rocket would be more direct, instead of having a general tendency to lateral flight. Considering the rocket as an ornamental firework, this directness of flight would be rather prejudicial than otherwise, its curvilinear path being exceedingly beautiful. Were it desired, however, to metamorphose the sky-rocket into a warlike projectile, then, in proportion as its directness of flight, would be its advantages.

Step by step, we are now approaching the construction of a Congreve, or war rocket, which, as at present made, chiefly differs from a sky-rocket in the two particulars, of having a sheet-iron instead of a paper cone, and of being supplied with a central instead of a lateral stick. The first Congreve-rockets did not possess the latter advantage. They had sticks laterally attached, like those of ordinary sky-rockets, as may be seen in the Rotunda or Military Museum at Woolwich. Of this kind were the rockets employed by our troops at the battle of Leipsic; and so desolating were their effects, that some French troops against which they were fired immediately laid down their arms. The war-rocket is so intimately associated with the name of Sir William Congreve, that, by over-zealous advocates, he is assumed to be their inventor, although he himself disclaims the honor. In his book on the rocket practice, he states that rockets, considered as projectile weapons, were of great antiquity in India and China, and claims only to be the improver of the weapon. Indeed, we have met with undoubted testimony that the projectile force of the rocket used as a military weapon was known in Europe before the latter part of the sixteenth century; in the year 1590 appeared the collection of Traites Militaires, by Hanselet, in which book there exists, not only a full description of the manner of using rockets as military weapons, but a rude wood-cut, showing the method of firing them.

Some years ago, we remember to have seen in the London Adelaide Gallery certain Chinese war-rockets. They were captured by our troops at the siege of Amoy, and brought to the British metropolis. To all intents and purposes, they were sky-rockets, with the sole addition to each of a barbed arrowhead affixed laterally in the line of the stick, and projecting beyond the head of the rocket. Compared with even the smallest Congreve rockets employed in our service, they were insignificant affairs. Their flight would be altogether irregular, their power of penetrating comparatively weak. Nevertheless, one of them would undoubtedly have killed a man at the distance of 200 yards; consequently, these Chinese weapons admit of being regarded as a variety of small firearms; while even the smallest Congreve rocket may be compared with artillery. So much then concerning the history of the war-rocket up to the time of Congreve. He was the first who employed an iron instead of a paper case. He was also the first who applied the central stick; and succeeded in making rockets of one denomination so equal in weight that the elements of the flight of one being known, data were afforded for the discharge of others.

The war-rocket is a very terrible instrument of destruction, possessing certain advantages which other projectiles do not. Thus, for example, the discharge of rockets, as a consequence of their very nature, is attended with no recoil against a solid body. That what corresponds with recoil in an ordinary gun, is, as we have seen, the propulsive force of the rocket, and the counterpart of this propulsive force is exerted against the air. Owing to this absence of practical recoil, rockets may be fired from boats just large enough to carry them; whereas shells of equal weight, if employed in naval warfare, can be fired only from strong ships. Rockets carrying within themselves their own propulsive power, require neither guns nor mortars to project them; consequently, they may be fired from places altogether inaccessible to artillery, and they may be constructed of much larger dimensions than any available shot or shell. Gunfounders are now pretty well agreed, that no piece of ordnance can be cast without flaw if much larger than a 13-inch mortar; and the weight of the latter is 5 tons, although the charged 14-inch shell scarcely weighs 200 pounds.

The French tried the experiment of increasing the size of a mortar preparatory to the siege of Antwerp. The experiment was unsuccessful, their monster-mortar bursting after having been only a few times discharged. "The rocket," to use the words of Congreve, "brings into operation the power of artillery every where, and is nowhere embarrassed by the circumstances limiting the application of artillery." It imparts to infantry and cavalry the force of artillery, in addition to the power of their own respective arms. Thus, a foot-soldier might, on particular occasions, carry several 12-pound rockets, each having the propulsive and penetrating effect of a 12-pound cannon shot, without the embarrassment of the 12-pounder gun.

The rocket, as we shall hereafter discover, may be discharged on many occasions without the aid of any apparatus—but even the corresponding rocket tube, by means of which its accuracy of flight is promoted, weighs only 20 pounds, whereas the weight of a 12-pounder gun is no less than eighteen hundred weight. In addition to this advantage, the flight of a rocket is visible; whereas the flight of ordinary warlike projectiles is invisible, and superadded to the power of penetrating, the rocket has that of scattering the devastation of fire. These properties of the war-rocket being considered, the reader will be at no loss to understand some of the advantages possessed by the missile.

Nevertheless, the employment of the war-rocket is not grounded with those universal advantages over shot and shell claimed for it by Congreve. Amidst its good qualities there lurks the very bad one of irregularity of flight, its accuracy of trajectory curve not being comparable with that of a cannon-ball or shell. Rockets can be advantageously fired neither against a rapid nor across the direction of a wind, and for reasons which a little consideration will render obvious. The long wooden stick affords a powerful lever for the wind to act upon, the iron rocket itself being at the same time unequally affected; hence ultimate deflection takes place. The striking of a casual object in the course of a rocket's flight is another ordinary cause of deflection; and to such an extent is deflection occasionally produced from this cause, that rockets have sometimes come back, like boomerangs, to the spot whence they were fired.

Something of this kind once occurred at Woolwich during a military exhibition got up for the gratification of Marshal Soult. The veteran, amongst other displays, was shown what our war-rockets could accomplish; when one of these erratic missiles, striking against a stone or something of that sort, immediately departed from its normal course, bounded high aloft, and finally rushing down, plunged deep into a bank near where the marshal was posted. It was on account of this erratic propensity to which rockets are sometimes given, that they were never great favorites with the Duke of Wellington.

Some of the newly invented projectiles having been forwarded to the Peninsula, the Duke took an early opportunity of trying their range and effects. The British outposts were on one side of a marsh; the enemy's outposts on the other. The distance was convenient; the rockets were pointed, lighted and discharged. The result was any thing but satisfactory. Either because the wind was unfavorable, or because the rocket had not been long enough in the field to know friend or foe, or for some other reason, they with common consent turned tail to the enemy, and came back to their friends! The Duke entertained a prejudice against them from that day forthwith. Nevertheless, they are acknowledged to have saved a brigade of Guards during the passage of the Adour; and subsequently, at Waterloo, they made sad havoc amongst the enemy.

The original ideas of Sir William Congreve relative to the best manner of arming troops with the war-rocket have never been carried out. He advocated the distribution of the missile to every branch of the service—infantry, cavalry and artillery. He objected to the formation of a special rocket service; however, in this matter, his opinions have been overruled. Congreve suggested three methods of firing his rockets: 1. From a tube, and singly; 2. In a volley from many tubes, mounted on one carriage; 3. In a volley from the ground. Two only of these methods are now retained—namely, the first and the third.

The rocket tube is a pope or cylinder of metal corresponding in size with the diameter of the rocket intended to pass through it, and its business, to give a correct line of flight. In the earlier days of Congreve-rocket practice, there were no tubes, deeply grooved surfaces being used instead. The rocket tube is so contrived that it can be placed at any angle of elevation, and be thus pointed in the manner of a gun. The proper line of aim having been secured, the rocket is thrust into the tube and ignited, when, after deliberating for an instant, it rushes through and pursues its destructive course.

Having thus made evident the construction and use of a rocket tube, the reader will readily understand the intention of a compound-tube arrangement. Let him imagine twenty or thirty of such tubes mounted on one carriage, each tube discharging its own rocket—and a correct notion of what is understood by the tube-volley will be acquired. This apparatus is no longer retained in our service, the ground-volley of rockets being employed instead. In the ground-volley, the rockets are merely placed on the ground (which must be moderately smooth,) with their heads towards the enemy, when they are ignited, and speed away. For the first hundred yards, they ordinarily pursue a course of considerable regularity, seldom rising above the height of a man's head; ultimately, however, their flight becomes exceedingly irregular, darting about in all directions. This, in certain cases, is not disadvantageous, but the reverse. So impossible is it to predict where one of these rockets run wild will go, that it is in vain for any body to think of getting out of its way.

A great many endeavors have been made to avoid the necessity of employing a rocket-stick. Congreve never could succeed in this attempt, but Mr. Hale has been more fortunate. We do not exactly know the principle on which his rockets are made, but we believe he causes them to assume a rotary or rifled motion, and thus provides for their regularity of flight. Mr. Hale has moreover introduced other improvements in the manufacture of rockets. He does not fill them by ramming in the composition, but by the more equable force of hydrostatic pressure, by which means a larger amount of composition is introduced than can be effected by the ordinary method. Nor must we forget to mention the very ingenious device of this gentleman for restraining the rocket during the first moments of its propulsive endeavors. Although the power of a rocket, when in full flight, is tremendous, yet its initial effort is very trifling; so much so, that one of considerable dimensions may be held back by a very small restraining force.

Now, it happens that, in the ordinary course of firing, a Congreve rocket is apt to droop as it first leaves the tube, thus losing much of the accuracy of flight it would otherwise have possessed. This drooping is in consequence of the paucity of the force it has as yet acquired—for rockets, in point of fact, like young people, go astray sometimes from the circumstances of beginning their career too soon; so it occurred to Mr. Hale that he would hold back his projectiles—not by the tail, for they are devoid of that ornament—but hold them back by a sort of spring, from which they cannot free themselves until they have acquired a certain definite initial pressure.

We will now conclude these remarks on Congreve rockets, by stating the chief occasions on which they have been employed. The first was in October, 1806, when rockets of very large calibre were brought into requisition for the bombardment of Boulogne. In less than half an hour after the first commencement of attack, the town was observed to be on fire in many places, and the damage effected was doubtless very great, although its exact extent was never known, the French taking such effectual means to guard the secret, that our ambassador, Lord Lauderdale, whilst passing through Boulogne shortly after the attack, was vigilantly watched, lest he might observe the extent of the ravage. In 1807, Copenhagen was bombarded with very heavy rockets; and again with great effect, they were subsequently used against Acre. These are the chief occasions in which Congreve rockets have been used at sea.

In the land-service, their employment dates from the battle of Leipsic, where they were employed with terrible effect. Their history during the Peninsular war has already been given—also at Waterloo. The Congreve rocket is no longer a secret in our keeping. Various continental nations now make and employ them very effectually. The Austrian rockets are said to be particularly good. One of the most curious applications of the Congreve rocket was in the slaughter of spermaceti whales. We have now lying before us a 6-pounder whaling rocket, precisely similar to its military prototype in every respect, save that of being furnished with a harpoon-head. The idea of using the Congreve rocket for this purpose was ingenious enough. The inventor intended that the missile, when discharged, should penetrate into the very centre of the whale; then bursting, fill the huge animal with such an amount of gas, that swim he must, whether he chose to do so or not, all very pretty in theory, no doubt, but entirely false in practice.

Congreve whaling-rockets did not come into general use; nevertheless, they must have been made in very large numbers. We remember, on one occasion, to have seen a stock of many thousands lying idle in the store-rooms of a large whaling establishment.

And now, in conclusion, let us state that the largest Congreve rockets ever made weigh about 300 pounds, are eight or ten feet high, and have sticks in proportion. Very pretty visitors these to come hissing into the midst of a town! [English paper.
